Southwark Police Court Mission.—The report of the deserving work done by this mission in connection with the British Women's Temperance Association gives some interesting instances of success amid many difficulties. The following is a jotting from the missionary's diary: "S. M., aged fifteen, was severely beaten by her stepfather for losing a shilling, ran away from home, and was afterwards found at a coffee house. The stepfather went to the house and made a disturbance, demanding that the girl should be given up to him; she refused to go home. The police being called advised the man to see the magistrate, who told him he had no power over the girl. She was given into my care at the mother's request, I undertaking to place her in service and look after her. The girl is doing well." One of the workers is under medical orders to quit the work as the result of rough treatment by a woman whom she was endeavouring to rescue, but in spite of this drawback, and of the paucity of funds, the secretary (Mrs. F. Edwards, 33, Avondale-square, S.E.) writes that the mission is progressing with its labours amongst the unhappy victims of sin, vice, and misfortune in South London.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

OUR columns this week contain a call to prayer on behalf of India, which we hope will not be overlooked by the reader. A special interest attaches to this call at present in view of the approaching tour of Rev. F. B. Meyer, whose proposed programme of visits will also be found on the same page.

Some of our friends are exercised by a statement in the Daily Chronicle a few days ago. Reporting a meeting at the Strangers' Rest, Ratcliff Highway, our contemporary spoke of Mr. R. Cope Morgan as late of THE CHRISTIAN. This is, of course, an error for Editor of THE CHRISTIAN.

Some very pertinent words were spoken at the Brighton Conference of the Evangelical Alliance by the Hon. and Rev. E. V. Bligh, a member of the Council. He was anxious to see thorough co-operation in Christian work between all evangelical ministers. In face of the common enemy to the truth he urged united action and progress. "He had long thought that some pulpit co-operation was possible among evangelical ministers of various denominations. He would gladly welcome the sight of all orthodox Christians, including Nonconformists here, and ministers or members of Reformed Churches on the Continent, joining together more frequently in their ministrations, and acknowledged as ministers of the Gospel, with equal powers, equal authority, and with ordination of equal value. He hoped some steps forward would be taken in that direction, for it was highly necessary at this juncture."

Equally hopeful were the words of Sir H. Fowler, M.P., spoken at the enlargement of the London Central Wesleyan Mission, and they deserve attention even beyond the bounds of Methodism. He gave his strong support to a sentence of Rev. C. H. Kelly's concerning the Twentieth Century Fund, that "that movement was not undertaken in a spirit of sectarian pride." He urged that in all their work they should keep clear of such a spirit.

Their work was not to interfere with that of other churches, and they did not want to proselytise. He should not have the slightest sympathy with their movement if he thought they were going to draw their recruits from other churches and organisations. We did not recruit from regiments in the army, but from among men who were not in the army, and recruiting of the churches should be from that class who were outside Church influence altogether. Again, he did not think they ought to interfere in the controversies of other churches, for they had enough of their own work to do in fighting the infidelity, vice, ignorance, and intemperance which formed the darkest blot upon the face of this metropolis. As long as the work of casting out devils in the name of the Lord went forward they ought not to care by what form of organisation that was done.

Lord Roberts brought out some important aspects of the work of the Army Temperance Association in his address to its Council. Where the Association is strong there is less crime and fewer admissions to hospital. The man who keeps in health in times of peace is likely to suffer the least from the attacks of disease in time of war. Temperance raises the moral status of the men, enables them to do their duty better, and assists them to obtain special employment when they return to civil life. These are good things for the life that now is. How much more is it true of spiritual work among the men.

Notwithstanding the present strain between Great Britain and France, we are assured by a correspondent of the Daily News that in France there is a deep and wide-spread admiration of England, of her institutions, and her ways. But the most hopeful part of the present Anglomania is the emphasis which is laid on the moral training in our country.

Whether French writers are treating of our schools, our social and philanthropic movements, our trades unions, or our home legislation, one and all dwell on the education of the conscience with us, the moral and religious training as developed in the various phases of our national life. Take, for instance, the great work of the first living French philosopher, "La Psychologie du Peuple Français" of M. Fouillée. "It has been justly remarked," he writes, "that the temperance cause makes far more progress in Protestant countries, where it is essentially allied with religion."

We would rather be the means of giving to our sister country a true love of liberty, equality, and fraternity, in the New Testament sense of the words, than gaining any military victories over her.

At last the Dreyfus mystery is in a fair way to be thoroughly cleared up. The attempt to buttress up a possible injustice behind the stubborn defences of militarism and officialdom has been unable to withstand the steady march of righteousness, and the trial is about to be thoroughly revised by the highest court of inquiry in France. It is a great moral object-lesson for the whole world, that though hand join in hand yet shall the wicked not go unpunished. At first the voice of justice seemed unable to make itself heard. Now it has swelled into a mighty and irresistible chorus.

Another piece of good news came to hand last week. Candia has at last been evacuated by the Turkish troops, and the island has entered on an era which should mean peace and progress for the future. It is significant that the first result has been a better state of feeling between the native Christians and Mohammedans, whose animosity was largely due to the disturbing presence of the Sultan's soldiers. This marks another stage in the nemesis that slowly but steadily pursues the Great Assassin of his Christian subjects. His empire has been steadily shrinking during his reign; and as each portion passes away from under his control, it begins to progress in civilisation and in well being. The Powers must establish some reputable form of government in place of the barbarous rule which has been overthrown. Difficult as it has been to thrust the Turk out, this last task may prove even harder. For our own part, we believe that it can only be done on those large Christian principles which give perfect liberty of conscience in religious matters. The removal of Mohammedan rule opens the way for spreading the light of the knowledge of Jesus Christ. The ideal aim of the missionary there should now be, "Crete for Christ."

In a strenuous letter to the New York Independent, Mr. Justin McCarthy, M.P., speaks with disappointment of the lack of enthusiasm with which the Czar's proposal has been received in England. He laments the fact that there is no strong commanding voice to speak out for the peace policy in England just now, that no one even tries to play the part once so nobly performed by Cobden and Bright, and that even the pulpits have for the most part been silent on the question. Yet one of our most widely circulated journals said, soon after the eirenicon was published, that it was no use noticing the utterances of the pulpit, they were so numerous and so similar in tone! Not only at the autumnal sessions of the Nonconformist assemblies have resolutions of sympathy with the rescript been passed, but large numbers of Episcopalians are in its favour; and surely the presence of the Bishops of London and Hereford at the Exeter Hall meeting was a significant fact. No doubt the constant war excitement over questions relating to China, the Soudan, and Fashoda has been more agreeable to the music-hall public than any effort after peace; but the Churches have declared for the Czar's proposal.

A correspondent of the Times has been giving Count Tolstoi's explanations of the causes of the chronic destitution of the Russian peasants, who suffer from insufficiency of food, not positive famine. They consume 30 per cent. less than the normal amount of food necessary for the maintenance of health. One cause of their trouble is spiritual. The depression of despair has settled on the peasants. They are indifferent to things spiritual, and inert in their old habits. Tolstoi would give them liberty of religion, liberty of education, and liberty of reading, together with the abolition of special laws and the system of flogging. The Government has replied by repressing his attempts to relieve and help the peasants. This condition of things is a strong argument for a reductiou of military burdens; deliverance will come gradually to a people who have enough to eat, and whose whole time is not consumed by earning it.

The question has been raised in a contemporary whether a "layman" conducting a service in a mission hall in connection with a Nonconformist Church is not qualified to preside at the Lord's Supper. The answer is, of course, a decided affirmative. The rite was, in the Apostolic Church, a part of an ordinary meal, and till the Sacerdotal tendency began to creep in during the second century, there was no question of administration; the food was blessed and partaken of like any other meal. In reverting to apostolic custom, therefore, there can be no need of "consecrating the elements" by official hands; and the question as to who administers or dispenses the bread and wine is purely a matter of convenience. It would be a happy innovation and an excellent practical protest against priestly error if occasionally the rite were superintended by a "layman" and the minister took part with the congregation in the pew.

Pastor Jellinghaus said to a meeting of women at Blankenburg that when a workman gets into difficulty, temporal or spiritual, he does not go to the pastor or clergyman but to a Christian fellow-workman, because he better knows him and his circumstances, and is able to sympathise with him. Therefore, Christian men of all classes should show sympathy and make themselves accessible to their fellow-men of their own order. And so women who love the Lord may serve Christ by seeking to show sisterly sympathy to other women, for a woman will rather tell out her heart to a woman, one of her own sex and experiences, and ways of thought and feeling.

The wife of Pastor Ziemendorf, of Weisbaden, said if the mothers were united and anxious to learn from the Word of God the influence on the children would be very different from what it is. Too often the mother is a stumbling-block to her children. Some think the woman ought to stick to house duties. The duty of everyone—women, as well as men—is to do the things of God first, to seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness. One of the best students of the Scriptures she knew was an old woman whose business it is to peel potatoes in a hospital. She holds Bible lessons while she is doing this humble work.

One of the most remarkable features of the appeal of the Gospel is its urgency. Everywhere in the New Testament we hear the solemn accents of warning and rebuke against those who fail to accept the offer of salvation. It is a perpetual refrain in the discourses of Christ, in the speeches in the Acts, in the most glowing passages of the Epistles. The early preachers of Christianity were driven forward by a very fire of earnestness in their preaching. They demanded instant decision, so impressed were they with the fatal consequences of delay and neglect. Modern preaching sadly lacks this strong note of urgency. There is too much dealing with abstract and general aspects of the truth, and too little with the solemnities of choice, and the vast meaning of that great word now. It is of the utmost importance that in an age that is characterised above everything by its innumerable distractions, the heralds of the Word should be instant in season and full of a commanding and winsome appeal for immediate decision.

A fruitful source of failure in the Christian life is this—that many so-called believers fail to draw on the spiritual resources placed within their reach by the Gospel. They keep their religion and their practical lives in different compartments. The result is that when trial and tribulation come, their faith goes to pieces at a touch, and they fall into divers temptations. Religion will never be a stay in trouble unless it has become a part of our lives in hours of prosperity and peace. The storm tests the building, it does not furnish it with power to resist its own onslaughts. Those whose life at present is easy and smooth should therefore see to it that they improve their spiritual opportunities, and lay up a store of strength and trust and love for the day when they shall be called to pass their sorrow and trial.

The shower of falling stars which has been prophesied to take place this month illustrates a beautiful law of nature which is also a parable of grace. These "falling stars" are well known to be fragments of rocky substance wandering through space, which are drawn within the sphere of the earth's attraction. The strange thing is that only very rarely does one of them reach the earth in a solid or even a molten state. We are defended against this flying army of destruction by the soft cushion of the atmosphere, through which the missiles fly earthward. The friction caused by their passage through the air generates so great a heat that they become incandescent, then fluid, and finally gaseous, so that long before they reach the ground they are resolved into harmless vapour, and so sift gently downwards. The soft, impalpable air which we breathe is an invisible and impenetrable shield between the earth and a perpetual volley of these wandering meteorites.

There is a similar fact in the spiritual life. "He that dwelleth in the secret place of the Most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty." The soul that is surrounded by an atmosphere of purity, and trust, and love, whose "life is hid with Christ in God," is shielded by the Divine presence in which it lives and moves and has its being, so that no evil can reach it. The ninety-first Psalm is a wonderful idyll of this "charmed life." From the human side it is a psalm of faith in the power and love of God as the great protective force of life. From the divine side it is an announcement that "all things"—temptation, disease, misfortune, trial—"work together for good to them that love God." From this standpoint there are fewer more comforting passages in the Bible than this beautiful Psalm.

In last week's Record Dr. Handley Moule had a weighty letter on "Our Duty in the Crisis." He writes regarding the proposal for a conference upon differences of opinion, and says:—

> For peace I long, God knoweth, from my inmost heart—but not for peace at any price; not at the price of reconsidering the ground principles of the Reformation, which the leaders of the revolution must practically ask us to do. They have been avowing for a long time, but never more loudly than of late, at Bradford, aims and ideals which to the sons of the Reformation are absolutely repugnant.
> It is not our principles that have disturbed the Church; it is those of a school whose essential teachings are, in the Church as reformed, novel within this century, as different in vital points from the old High Anglicans as from the Evangelicals. We are the sufferers from a great and formidable inroad. It is not quite our wisdom to confer with its leaders. Let charity to persons be unbroken, in the Master's name. But unless the Reformers died literally for nothing we are in face of principles which are, by inexorable fact, mortal antagonists of each other.

Coming to the point of present duty, Dr. Moule presses upon Evangelical clergymen the need for independent and genuine study of Reformation history and literature. But before and beyond everything else this:—

> Unless we would be "destroyed for lack of knowledge" we must, however busy, read. First and most, of course, we must "read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest"—the Bible, which is not reconcilable with the modern Church revolution. If we know the Epistle to the Hebrews by heart, so much the better. If we have in some sense really pondered and made our own the vast teaching of the Scriptures on the believer's "access with confidence" to the Father, in the Son, by the Spirit, "nothing between," so much the better. If we have laboured to grasp afresh the reality, the grandeur of (not the phrase but the thing) Justification by Faith, the central point of the Reformation, so much the better. But this needs not emotion but labour. "Knowledge of your Bible," said C. Simeon to his young friend, "comes not by faith but by works." "You will never be a good Catholic," said a priest lately in Dublin to a young convert to Scriptural Catholicism, "you read the Bible too much." That applies not to Romanism only.

Dr. Moule then recommends, under Scripture, a study of the works of Ridley and Cranmer, Jewel, Beveridge, and Waterland. He is also careful to mention Rev. N. Dimock's papers on Anglican doctrine and practice.

Particular attention is called in The Daily News to the custom, now almost common, of observing "All Souls' Day" as a day of special prayers for the dead. It seems that "An Office of Remembrance of the Faithful Departed," sanctioned by the Bishop of London, has been sent all over the country. At St. Alban's, Holborn, a catafalque was erected in the chancel, by the side of which the hooded monks knelt. Many of the congregation had Roman books of devotion, and one had a rosary. We fear that this practice of praying for the dead extends even far beyond the borders of Romanism and High Anglicanism. It is a practice utterly without warrant in the New Testament, and wherever it has spread it has meant putting power into the hands of the priest, and subjecting the people to a degrading superstition. Innocent and natural as it may appear, it contains evil seed.

Some methods of dealing with Ritualism may not be free from blame, but we cannot have too much frank and honest discussion of all the points involved. We cannot deal too fearlessly with the practice of confession; its odiousness must not be allowed to be a screen. Dr. Temple lately said that it is "a matter in which all must see to themselves"; but the Hon. Mrs. Chapman inquires in The Nineteenth Century how young persons, inexperienced, impressionable, easily led, can withstand the influence of a priest who wishes them to come to confession? Are they competent to "see to themselves"?

The same magazine contains some remarkable admissions by Dr. F. G. Lee, vicar of All Saints', Lambeth, in an article on "The Order of Corporate Reunion and its Work." With one and all who have joined that order and worked for it, the Primacy of the Holy See was a fundamental principle—not a mere politic ecclesiastical contrivance, but invariably regarded as a Divine institution for the due preservation of the One Faith, and for securing the visible oneness urbi et orbi—not a mere unseen spiritual unity of the One Church. In plain words, this order is working to bring all Christendom under the power of the Pope. And Dr. Lee boasts that it has had great success.

The silent change that has been brought about externally in so large a number of our Anglican churches is an earnest of what still remains to be effected, things seen being tokens of things unseen.

How anyone can regard such a position as truthful and honest is one of those problems that we regard as insoluble.

Dr. Pierson is busy writing a Life of the late Mr. George Müller. He is to preach on Thursday (10th inst.), at the opening of the new Wesley House, City-road. Rumours as to our brother's "ill-health" are, we are glad to say, quite unfounded. He says he was "never better."

Mrs. McAlpine's Homes.—The annual report of these useful institutions, a rescue and a maternity home, shows a continuance of blessing. Numbers of poor betrayed women in difficulty find a sheltering in the time of extreme need, and it is cheering to know that in some instances, at least, the betrayers have been made to give financial aid to their unfortunate victims. That the work gains strength from the fact that it is spiritual as well as philanthropic one of the girls writes:—"I want to tell you I have joined a chapel and attend a Bible-class every Sunday afternoon. I was immersed in August. I felt so happy—there is something so happy and satisfying and peaceful in the place of that discontent I felt before." The medical oversight has been safe in the hands of Dr. Brown. Communications may be sent to the superintendent, Mrs. Caller, 80, Greenheys-lane, Manchester.

*Our Day and Our Duty.

By REV. J. MORGAN GIBBON.

THE facts of any particular time furnish an indication as to the exact form in which eternal principles should be carried out. Jesus Christ still writes upon the ground, tracing with his Divine finger in the needs of men his newest will for his people. The Christian who would be loyal to eternal truth must not shut his eyes to the characteristics of the times in which he lives. A consecrated opportunism must make its daily morning market of such chances as offer; or we, as Evangelical Christians, shall be found killing dead lions, while living wolves are allowed to worry the flock of God. Our Evangelical fathers so lived, taught, and wrought that something of their inner being passed into every department of English life; and, as David Hume himself admitted, the quality of West of England cloth was improved by the Evangelical revival. By losing sight of this principle too many good people were busy for many years in the sedulous cultivation of a goodness which was good for nothing in this world.

What are the characteristics of our age? Voracious greed for worldly good, and sad neglect of God and his Word, are accompanied by uneasiness in the very heart of unbelief.

NEVER WAS A RICHER AND UNHAPPIER AGE

than ours, with its groping and feeling, as of blind men, after God. Large sections of the Church bearing Christ's name lamentably fail to meet the need, encouraging what is worst, and discouraging what is best among the things of the nineteenth century. Without uncharitableness, what is the essence of Romanism? An adaptation of religion to the whims, humours, caprice and passion of men, rather than the honest application of Gospel provision to human need, and a straight-out declaration of the unbending law of God for human life. Rome is powerful, but is not brave enough to tell sinners the truth; and man's case is not one for the bribery of her amusement. When religion becomes material, instead of providing salt for spiritual impurity, there is only earth to earth, dust to dust, ashes to ashes.

In view of these things, what is Christ saying to us who are not the servants of a dead and crumbling tradition, but bond-slaves of the living Lord? There are

THREE POINTS OF CHRISTLY DIRECTION.

The first has to do with our teaching. In this respect our fathers laid chief emphasis upon the need of an inward change of heart and the application of the blood of Jesus Christ to the cleansing of sin-polluted lives; and nothing has happened to make that teaching obsolete. Let not the so-called progress of the age, largely a poetical delusion, lead us to think that the doctrines of the Gospel are somewhat inapplicable to the needs of to-day. There has been a great change in things, but no great change in human nature. The news which comes throbbing along our electric wires is not so new as we imagine; but our newspapers serve up the old tragedies of Genesis, hot and hot, in fresh forms. If they who fell asleep in the placid periods of pastoral England could arise to-day amid the thousand strange noises of commerce, and the captive lightning rushing from one end of the globe to the other, they might say at first, "This is not our world"; but as they watched us they would declare that the men and women passing before them, so marvellously strong, so pathetically weak, so wonderfully wise, so tremendously foolish, are the counterparts of their brethren and sisters of a hundred years ago. What men needed in every age they need now as much as ever—the animating breath of the Divine Spirit, and the cleansing efficacy of the blood of the covenant.

It has been said that the Evangelical party has hitherto exhibited little sense of the significance of the Church of Christ; and it is through erroneous teaching as to its nature that the greatest danger now threatens the cause of true religion. Cardinal Manning repeatedly admitted that the religion of Rome is not that of the New Testament. Christ seems to write upon the circumstances of our months, days, and hours the call to sound forth his teaching alone. We are told that Low Church services are disgracefully simple and barren, and that Nonconformist chapels are ugly to the point of sacrilege; but there is which protests against anything in the worship of God that would trench upon his prerogatives. We must din into the ears of a stiff-necked generation the elements of the Christian Church, until the idols shall vanish and the whole nation be penetrated by the sense of a living God.

The great refuge of priestcraft is authority; and in its name supremely ridiculous things are foisted upon men. Now, the people have a right to demand authority in their teachers; and surely, in the surroundings of to-day, Christ commands us to give men the very highest credential, that of a holy and beautiful life. This was an effectual weapon in the hands of the early Christians, against Greek and Roman calumny; and it was equally serviceable in the days when the worldly synonym for an Evangelical was hypocrite. Repudiated by Romanism, disowned by Ritualism, let us live the life of holiness, integrity, sweetness, and brotherly unity. Let us have done with mutual suspicion of one another, showing to men the beauty of individual holiness, and the strength of Christian union.

In the early days of the Evangelical movement, there was seen an active service before which we stand abashed. Since then there has prevailed that contact with the world in the service of Christ sullies the soul. The busy life is not vanity, which rather lurks in the monasteries and convents where the highest ideals of piety are supposed to exist. The belief that purity is favoured by retirement from life's useful activities is rank Romanism. Who are the fair characters? Nuns and monks immured in cloister and cell? No; but men like Paul, Wesley, Livingstone, and others who, careless for themselves, have devoted their lives to the service of Him who has set them in the spiritual firmament to shine as stars for ever and ever. Truer service, holier life, fuller teaching, and we shall win this battle.

The armour of our warfare is not carnal. We are not to fight by blows, shouts, and hard words, but must keep the respect of the English people; and we have them on our side if we only know how to utilise the fact. If Romanism wins the day—which God forbid!—the result will be due not to any real power in that system, but to the supineness of the Evangelical Churches. But all the omens are good. Science, art, government are all Protestant; and, please God, we will keep religion in this country Protestant, too.

REVIVAL.

THERE is a sound of rain—a sound of abundance of rain. Again and again through the ages the Holy Spirit has moved the people, as He moved Ezra, to prayer for a little reviving in their bondage. Sometimes it has been a wrestling prophet on his lonely watch-tower, appealing to God: "O Lord, revive THY work; in the midst of the years make it known; in wrath remember mercy." Or a sweet singer pleads in the name of Israel: "Turn us, O God of our salvation, and cause thine anger toward us to cease. Wilt Thou be angry with us for ever? Wilt Thou draw out thine anger to all generations? Wilt Thou not revive us again, that thy people may rejoice in THEE?"

Or a man of sorrow, whose very name dignifies Salvation, appeals to his people, "Come and let us return unto the Lord, for He hath torn, and He will heal us; He hath smitten, and He will bind us up. After two days will He revive us; in the third day He will revive us, and we shall live in his sight. Then shall we know if we follow on to know the LORD. His going forth is prepared as the morning; and He shall come unto us as the rain, as the latter and former rain unto the earth."

The Three Days' Conference last week in the great tent at Tottenham is one of many indications of a moving in the hearts of God's people, in response to the moving of the Spirit within them. The conviction has often been expressed of late by evangelists, pastors, and teachers, and others in spiritual touch with the people, that a season of refreshing is near to come, and the glory of the Lord to be revealed.

Others urge that while we pray we should also praise, for

> See the promise of a shower
> Drops already from above,
> And the Lord will shortly pour
> All the Spirit of his love.

Within the past few days we have received a letter from our friend Mr. Alfred S. Dyer, who writes: "It is the belief, as it has been the prayer, of many of the best missionaries, that India will shortly experience a great spiritual awakening." Evidently the expectation of revival is not confined to this country, but extends to the ends of the earth.

The prominent thoughts in the passages above quoted are that GOD and the work of GOD should be made manifest. That his people should rejoice in GOD. Their prayer that He should turn them from their evil or questionable ways. That because of these GOD has smitten them, and He who has smitten will heal them when they turn to Him, and He will raise us up, and we shall live in his sight.

In other words, a revival is the removal of the veil which Satan is continually seeking to throw over the hearts of God's people. For as the god of this world blinds the minds of them which believe not, lest the light of the Gospel of the glory of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them; so, in proportion to the unbelief that is in them, does the same Evil One blind the hearts even of those who, characteristically, are believers. In how small a measure do any of us know the Gospel of Christ who is the image of God—the Gospel of the glory of the blessed God. For we only know as much as we believe.

What is a revival but a lifting of the veil which obscures to us the glory of Christ, who is the image of God—the glory of the blessed God? "This is life eternal, to know Thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom Thou hast sent." M.

The Second Trial before Pilate.*

John xviii. 39.

PILATE must have felt much mortified when he heard that Herod had sent Jesus back to his tribunal. He had hoped that the Jewish monarch would so settle the matter that there would be no need for him to choose between his conscience and his fear of the Jewish leaders. But it was not to be. It was decreed that he should pronounce the judicial sentence on our Lord, and so on himself.

Now was the time for him to act decisively, and to say clearly that he would be no party to the unrighteous deed to which these priests were urging him. Had he done so firmly and decisively, and before they could further inflame popular passion, the whole matter would have come to an end. But he let the golden moment slip past him unused, and every succeeding moment made it more impossible for him to retrieve it.

Pilate is one of the most notable instances in history of the fatal error of preferring expediency to principle. He wished to do right, but not to do it avowedly because it was right. He wished to do right without seeming to do it, or making a positive stand for it. And in consequence he was finally entrapped into doing the very deed which he had taken the greatest trouble to avoid. Therefore, on the plains of time he stands as a beacon and warning; and to all who do not dare to oppose the stream of public passion and practice with the single affirmation of inflexible adherence to righteousness, the voice of inspiration cries aloud,

"REMEMBER PILATE!"

However promising a tortuous course may look, it will certainly end in disaster. However discouraging a righteous one may appear, it will at last lead out into the open. And in doing the right thing, be sure to speak out firmly at once. It may be harder for the moment, but it will be always easier afterwards. One brave word will put you into a position of moral advantage, from which no power shall avail to shake or dislodge you.

Such a word, however, Pilate failed to speak; and when Jesus was again brought before him, he began to think of some way by which he might do as conscience prompted, without running counter to the Jewish leaders. He, therefore, summoned around him the chief priests and rulers of the people. The latter are particularly mentioned, as though Pilate thought that his best method of saving Jesus would be by appealing over the heads of the priests to the humanity of the common people. When all were again assembled, he made, as Luke tells us, a short speech to them, reiterating his conviction of his innocence, corroborating his own opinion by Herod's, and closing by a proposal which he hoped would meet the whole case. "I will therefore chastise Him and release Him." Was there ever such a compromise? A little before he had solemnly affirmed that he could find in Him no fault at all, but if that were the case, why chastise Him? And if He were guilty of the charges brought against Him, as chastisement might seem to suggest, surely He should not be released. Pilate meant to do the best. The chastisement was intended as a sop to the priests, and to win their acquiescence to their victim's release. But it was not straightforward, or strong, or right. And like all compromises,

IT MISERABLY FAILED.

Those keen Jewish eyes saw in a moment that Pilate had left the ground of simple justice. He had shifted from the principle on which Roman law was generally administered, and they saw that it was only a question of bringing sufficient pressure to bear on him and they could make him a tool for the accomplishment of the fell purpose on which their heart was set. This proposal, therefore, was swept ignominiously away, and Pilate could never regain the position he had renounced.

Pilate then resorted to another expedient for saving Jesus. It was the custom to carry out capital sentences at feast times, which were the occasions of great popular convocations; but it was also customary for the governor to release any one prisoner, condemned to death, whom the multitude, on the Passover week, might agree to name. Pilate recollected this, and also that there was a notorious criminal awaiting execution, who for sedition and murder had been arrested and condemned to die. It occurred to him that, instead of asking the people generally whom they wished him to release, he should narrow the choice and present the alternative between Barabbas and Jesus. They would hardly fail, he thought, to choose the release of this pale prisoner, who was innocent of crime, and, indeed, had lived a life

NOTABLE FOR ITS BENEVOLENCE.

Pilate took care to announce his proposal with the greatest effect. The vast space before his palace was rapidly filling with excited crowds, who guessed that something unusual was astir, and were pouring in surging volumes into the piazza, although it was still early. That he might be the better seen and heard he ascended a movable rostrum, or judgment-seat, which was placed on the tessellated pavement that ran from end to end of the palace. "Whom will ye," he asked, "that I release unto you, Barabbas, or Jesus which is called the Christ?" And then he suggested the answer: "Will ye that I release unto you the King of the Jews?"

At this moment, and perhaps whilst waiting for their answer, a messenger hurried to speak to him from his wife. It must have been most unusual for her to interfere with his judicial acts; but she had been so impressed with a dream about her husband's connection with Jesus, the prisoner who stood before him, that she was impelled to urge him to have nothing to do with Him. It was a remarkable episode, and must have made Pilate more than ever anxious to extricate himself from his dilemma.

It was still not absolutely too late to set himself free by the absolute expression of his will. But his temporising policy was making it immensely difficult, and he was becoming every moment more entangled in

THE MESHES OF THE MERCILESS PRIESTS.

He had hoped much from his last proposal, but was destined to be bitterly disappointed. The chief priests and elders had been busy amongst the crowds, persuading and moving them. We do not know the arguments they would employ; but we all know how inflammable a mob is, and presently the name of Barabbas began to sound ominously from amid the hubbub and murmur of that sea of human beings. Presently the isolated cries spread into a tumultuous clamour, which rang out in the morning air, "Not this man, but Barabbas!"

Pilate seems to have been dumbfounded at this unexpected demand; and said, almost pitifully, "What then shall I do with Jesus, which is called Christ?" As though he had said, "You surely cannot mean that He should suffer the fate prepared for a murderer!" Then they cried out for the first time, "To the cross, to the cross! Crucify Him! Crucify Him!"

Pilate had failed twice; he felt that he was being swept away by a current which he could not stem, and which was becoming at every moment deeper and swifter. But he was very anxious to release Jesus; and so he tried to reason with them, and said, "Why, what evil hath He done?" But he might as reasonably have tried to argue with an angry sea, or with a pack of wolves. He felt this, and, mustering a little show of authority, said: "I have found no cause of death in Him; I will, therefore, chastise Him, and release Him." But this announcement of disapproval. "They were instant with loud voices, requiring that He might be crucified." "They cried out the more exceedingly, Crucify Him." A little before this, Pilate had been besieged for six days in his palace at Cæsarea by similar crowds, whose persistent fury at last compelled him to give in to them. He dared not provoke similar scenes, lest they should result in a revolution. When he saw that he could prevail nothing, but that rather a tumult was made, he called for water. He said to himself, "I am very sorry; this Man is innocent, and I should like to save Him. But I have done my best, and can do no more. I will, at least, relieve myself of the responsibility of his blood. Slave, bring me water!"

As he washed his hands he said, "I am clean of the blood of this righteous Man; see ye to it." "Yes, yes," cried those bloodthirsty voices, "his blood be on us, and on our children." See how God sometimes takes men at their word. The blood of Jesus was required of that generation at the sack of Jerusalem, forty years afterwards; and it has been required of their children through all the ages. Why that wandering foot, found in every land, yet homeless in all? Why the hideous tortures, plunderings, and massacres of the middle ages? Why the modern Jew-hate, disguised under the more refined term anti-Semitism? Why the banishment from their holy places for eighteen centuries? All is attributable to that terrible imprecation which attracted to the race

THE BLOOD OF AN INNOCENT VICTIM.

It does not exculpate them to say that they did not realise who Jesus was, and that they would not have crucified Him if they had realised his Divine dignity. They are being punished to-day, not because they crucified the Son of God knowing Him to be such, but because they crucified One against whom they could allege no crime, and whose life had been full of truth and grace.

Pilate was now more than ever set on his deliverance. "He sought to release Him." And then the Jews brought out their last crushing and conclusive argument, "If thou release this man, thou art not Cæsar's friend; everyone that maketh himself a king, speaketh against Cæsar." Pilate knew what that meant, and that if he did not let them have their way, they would lodge an accusation against him for complicity with treason before his imperial master. Already strong representations had been made in the same quarter against his maladministration of his province, and he positively dare not risk another. "When, therefore he heard these words, he brought Jesus out, and sat down on the judgment seat at a place called the Pavement, and it was about the sixth hour."

With ill-concealed irritation, and adopting the recent phraseology of the priests, he said, "Behold your King!" At which they cried, "We have no king but Cæsar. Away with Him; away with Him crucify Him." It gave Pilate savage pleasure to put the cup of humiliation to their lips, and make them drain it to its dregs. "What!" said he "shall I crucify your King?" Then they touched the lowest depth of degradation, as, abandoning all their Messianic hopes, trampling under foot their national pride, they said, "We have no king but Cæsar."

At last, therefore, he delivered Jesus to them to be crucified, signed the usual documents, gave the customary order, and retired into his palace, as one who had heard his own sentence pronounced, and carried in his soul the presage of his doom.

The Evangelical Alliance.

TUESDAY, the second day of the Conference last week in Brighton, opened with a prayer-meeting at 10.30 in the Royal Pavilion, conducted by Lord Radstock: and his lordship presided at the ensuing morning session. A very able address was given on "Our Day and Our Duty," by Rev. J. Morgan Gibbon; we give notes of it on another page.

Cheering testimony was given by Pastor Rohrbach (Berlin) to the effect that the "Higher Criticism" now finds fewer adherents in German Universities, and that youthful students are largely returning to Bible simplicity.

The Chairman referred to the present grave position of French Evangelicals, who, in their oneness of Protestant view with British brethren, are commonly regarded by compatriots as untrue to their own country. A message of sympathy with them was cordially agreed to by the meeting, which then closed.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON

was devoted to the interests of missions. Dr. Jas. L. Maxwell, secretary of the Medical Missionary Association, presided over a meeting in the Royal Pavilion, and earnestly advocated the claims of medical missions. He testified, from long experience, that this work opens the door in a remarkable way to the more direct spiritual effort of evangelising the heathen. The Hon. Gertrude Kinnaird and Rev. Sydney R. Hodge, M.R.C.S. (China), spoke to the same effect. Rev. John Wilkinson concluded a dissertation upon the political and religious position of the Jews by the statement that in Russia there is a movement among them for a revision to prove that Christ's crucifixion was judicial murder.

"OUR PROTESTANT HERITAGE"

was earnestly and eloquently defended at a crowded evening meeting in the Dome. Sir C. R. Lighton, who presided, quoted from the monthly organ of the Alliance a few words bearing upon the attitude of the organization toward a danger which imperils the best interests of the nation. As these words declare:

> The Council have resolved that it is their duty to reaffirm the simplicity that is in Christ, as against those who are seeking once again to Romanise this country. They therefore call upon members of all Protestant Churches in England to support and encourage them in the efforts which they propose to make for the preservation of that glorious heritage bequeathed us by our fathers at the time of the Reformation.

The Alliance intends to hold a great public meeting in London, and, if possible, meetings in the principal towns of the country. Never was there greater need to vindicate Protestant rights. It matters little whether members of the Church of England predominate in withstanding an attempt to misrepresent the Gospel. Protestant Churchmen appeal to all other Protestants for aid to resist Romish encroachment. The Archbishop of Canterbury's charge is painful reading, as an attempt to make a golden bridge across the impassable chasm between truth and error, and as a plea for a sacrificial priesthood.

A stirring speech was made by Rev. J. G. Greenhough, ex-President of the Baptist Union. They were not of those who blushed to mention Protestantism, a word suggestive of nothing but precious memories and high hopes, and standing for human rights against ecclesiastical tyranny. Between the Protestant and the sacerdotal positions, whether the latter were Roman or Anglican, there is wide divergence. The two things cannot meet except in conflict. There are those who, with a simpering smile, tell us that "it is of no consequence." But our fathers thought there was indeed a mighty difference between Luther and the Pope, between Bishops Latimer and Bonner, between Good Queen Bess and Bloody Queen Mary, between Cranmer and Laud. Romanisers are traitors to their country and false to the Church, whose sworn servants they are. They would bring upon us the power for evil which has reduced France to the level of Dreyfus iniquities. We are determined that the priest shall not again bear rule in England. Sacerdotalism can only succeed, as it has done hitherto, by hoodwinking the people as to its real intent. Duplicity has been its method and Jesuitism is its ally.

BRITONS DO NOT LOVE PRIESTS

and never will do so. We have the open Bible, and that is against all priestly pretension. The Gospels tell us that the priests were man's enemy from the first. Sacerdotalism is a denial of our Christian manhood, and the so-called sacrifice of the Mass is profane; and yet we see the priest seeking to exalt himself by every conceivable device. Hear him saying, amid the incense smoke, "Behold me, I am the way; without me ye can do nothing." We Protestants say to him, "Stand out of our light. Away with your altars, candles, wafers, crucifixes, confessional boxes, in-cense and non-sense." We believe that the vast majority in the Church of England and in other communions are Protestant, and need have no fear, if the people are but awake to what is going on, that they will again embrace the superstitions which our fathers spat out of their mouths with intolerable loathing. This is a Protestant land, and, by the grace of God, it must be and shall be so for evermore. "Stand fast, therefore, in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage."

Rev. H. J. R. Marston, of Belgrave Chapel, London, said he regarded it as a fact of great and ominous significance that the Evangelical Alliance, which, from its youth up, has been a non-controversial society, had deliberately and of set purpose summoned this great assembly, by the trumpet of the holy war. This summons betokens a deep-rooted and widespread conviction, penetrating all ranks and conditions of English Protestantism, that the vital verities of our position are threatened. We believe in one earthly priesthood alone—that of all the believing people of God, without distinction of clergy or laity; and we wish Lord Halifax and his supporters to understand that we mean to hold to the principles of the Reformation, even though thrones and mitres totter and tumble in the ignominious dust. Some hold that Protestantism is an effete thing which was suited to the sixteenth century, but will not do now. Those who say so make a great mistake. We are in which the laity and not the bishops are going to make the winning stroke. In regard to this great warfare, the Evangelical Alliance has a high and holy function to perform, as the organ of spiritual Protestantism. Its prayers, its spirit of unity, the sweetness of its concord and the wisdom of its counsel, should enfold all the forces of this great Protestant movement; so that, in the storm and strain of battle, the Alliance may lift up the banner of Jehovah's peace for the refuge and rest of the people of God.

The next speaker, Rev. George Hanson, of Marylebone Presbyterian Church, said that, with every desire to be charitable, we cannot but see there are things which God Himself will not tolerate, among them the deification of man and the mutilation of the Gospel. We must all agree with old Tom Carlyle, who said, in his defence of Knox, that we are not here simply to tolerate things. If any man would take the crown from the brow of Jesus and rob Him of his absolute Saviour-hood, shall we keep silence? We cannot, and we shall not. Doubtless there were and are saintly souls within the Romish pale, who have that has been piled upon the one foundation of God, and who centre their hopes in the Rock of Ages. There is some evangelical truth in the Church of Rome, but it is overlaid by a vast deal more of anti-Christian error, which puts every obstacle in the way of man's approach to God. It was against such tyrannical error that our fathers rose in arms. We are not going to revert to the bondage of mediæval times, for we were born free, and free we will remain. Rome is more Romish to-day than ever, more Papal, more Ultramontane; and in its teaching, Mary is continually increasing, while the Saviour decreases. Christ must have his rightful place; and, as Luther well said, a layman with the Word of God in his hand is wiser than the Pope or Council without it. We must keep the sacraments in their right place, too, as seals and means of grace, but not the grace itself. If our fathers had feared to bear the name of Protestant, where had been our civil and religious liberties? These were the men whose good work abides the world over; and, by God's grace, the ground which they took we shall maintain.

Rev. Dr. Wright (Liverpool) opened his address with an exhortation to hold fast the Bible in its integrity, despite attempts of modern critics to minimise its truth or depreciate its value, Christ and his apostles having endorsed the Old Testament as we possess it to-day. This is a time, too, when we need to be on our guard against men who either fail to understand, or else misrepresent, the doctrines and acts of the Reformers, particularly in regard to the supremacy of Holy Scripture and justification by faith only, through the atonement of Christ. In this connection the speaker severely handled the Primate's recent Charge. Wednesday, the of the Conference, began with gracious words by Rev. S. B. Lane, at the prayer-meeting, concerning a sight of the King's face, hearing his voice, and feeling his touch. Immediately after this meeting, Conference was resumed, with the Hon. and Rev. E. V. Bligh in the chair. He initiated consideration of "Present Position and Future Prospects of Christian Union," and in connection with that subject the Continent, the mission field, and the home field were respectively reviewed by Rev. Dr. Gritton, Rev. H. C. Squires (of Richmond), and Mr. E. E. Heathfield (of Malvern). In the afternoon friends again gathered in the Royal Pavilion to hear addresses bearing upon deepening of the spiritual life. Rev. Walter Senior dealt in a tender and impressive manner with "The Mind which was in Christ Jesus (Philip ii. 4-12) Applied to the healing of division"; and a stirring and solemn address followed, by Rev. H. B. Macartney (British and Foreign Bible Society) upon "The Need of a New Revival." The last meeting, in the evening, was of an evangelistic and thanksgiving character, Mr. John Paton, who presided, gratefully reviewing the whole Conference, and acknowledging the local and secretarial labours which had, under God, brought about such a successful issue. Rev. E. K. Elliott (of Worthing) and Mr. A. H. Habershon (Railway Mission, Hastings) also spoke.

A Timely Call.*

Sound abroad the praise of Jesus,
Let his banner be unfurled,
Wave it over sick and dying,
Crowding round us in the world.

Sound his praises; blood-bought sinners
Surely ought to spread his fame;
Souls redeemed from death and darkness,
Spread abroad his glorious name.

God ne'er made us to be idlers,
Sleeping on a couch of ease,
Dreaming out the precious moments,
Seeking only self to please.

Never did He give us being —
Precious life to waste away,
Eyes unclosed, yet still not seeing,
Grasping shadows day by day.

Brother! live a life of purpose,
Seeking all God's ways to scan,
Willing earnestly to follow
As He works his mighty plan.

Now is serving, soon is resting,
Soon in glory we shall meet,
Those who fought or worked before us,
Resting lowly at his feet.

Heavenly notes, with welcome blended,
Echo from the blood-bought throng,
Rolling through the eternal ages,
Christ the burden of their song.

Mr. Barnett's Jewish Almanac for 1899.—Once again Mr. Henry Barnett sends us his little book, copies of which will, he hopes, be largely circulated by Christian friends in centres of Jewish population. On the English side the almanac gives a text for each day from the Old Testament Scriptures. On the Hebrew side are given Scripture passages setting forth the offices and glories of Christ—including the Messiah, the Son of Man, the Son of God, the Prophet, the Servant of the Lord, the Sin Offering, the Shepherd of Israel, the Priest, the King, the Redeemer, and the Covenant. The closing chapter is a message to the Zionists. The feasts and fasts are given on both sides at the dates as they occur, and the lessons read in the synagogue are given at the end, also a plan of the sacrifices that were offered during the year. The almanac may be had of Mr. Barnett at 94, Malmesbury-road, Bow, E.

"In all the Scriptures the things concerning Himself."

SUNDAY, November 13.

Genesis xxi.

OUR aim is ever to find Jesus in his Word, and to turn the minds of his people to clearer discoveries of Him, as He is to be found in the whole tenour of Scripture. And this holy search must repay us, since the Father's eye is ever fixed on Him. The Spirit is ever waiting to reveal Him. Angels desire to look into the mysteries of which these chapters treat. Oh, that our eyes may be opened!

The Holy Spirit, through the Apostle Paul, gives us the inner meaning of this story. He says that Hagar stands for Mount Sinai, and Ishmael represents all souls who are in bondage to the requirements of law, and regard rigorous obedience as the means of obtaining God's favour and blessing. These are born after the flesh, and persecute those who are born of faith. But those who believe in Jesus have been born of the Spirit, and made free with the freedom wherewith Christ makes free. The slave remaineth not in the house for ever; the bondwoman and her son must be cast out, a casting out which contains a vital truth. For, on the one hand, those who think to earn salvation show that they have not really been born of God; and, on the other hand, there is no endurance or perpetuity in their strenuous endeavours. After a while they will certainly come to the ground.

Those, on the contrary, who believe in Christ are the true children of God, and joint heirs with Himself; theirs is it to enjoy the freedom with which Christ makes his people free; they resent every attempt to entangle them in a yoke of legal bondage, they are delivered from the thrall of sin, and go no more out for ever (John viii. 36; Gal. v. 1)

MONDAY, November 14.

So far as we know, Abraham is the only one of all the human race whom God has called to have complete fellowship with his own deepest nature, in the anguish which the gift of Jesus cost. We do not always realise sufficiently the pathetic depths which underlie the words, "He spared not his own Son, but freely gave Him up for us all"; but Abraham knew. There was, however, one great deliverance. Jesus was given into the hands of sinful men, while Isaac was bound by the hands of his father. Jesus was yielded up for sinners, who had rejected and disowned Him, while Isaac was offered to the will and behest of Abraham's Almighty Friend.

But how much of Jesus there is in this chapter! An only son: loved with all the wealth of the Father's nature, offered by fire: lifted up above the plains of time: seeing the place afar off, and long before He came to it: bearing his cross to Calvary: the fire and knife in the Father's hand, whom it pleased to bruise Him, and put Him to grief: the lamb-like patience and submission of his binding and stretching on the altar of sacrifice: the certainty that He would come again: the multiplication of seed as stars and sands. All is true of the Lamb of God which bore away the sins of the world; but He combines in Himself, not Isaac alone, who escaped death, but the ram who fell beneath the sacrificial blow. "He loved me, He gave Himself for me."

TUESDAY, November 15.

Genesis xxiii.

The death of those we love makes us remember that earth is not our abiding-place, and elicits the confession of Abraham: we are strangers and sojourners, as were our fathers. The old man, deeply sorrowing, insisted on buying the cave, which the sons of Ephron offered to give him. There was a deep reason in this precision. He wanted to feel that in all time to come his right would not be challenged.

And, indeed, so it proved. That cave remained intact through the long centuries which were destined to elapse until the people of Israel came thither beneath the leadership of Joshua. It was as though that grave held the land in pledge for Abraham's children. Pilgrims and sojourners as they were, they were destined to return thither again, for the homes of the children are never far away from the graves of their fathers.

So the graves of the saints hold this earth for Jesus. He has won it for Himself by his own precious death and glorious victory over Satan and all his power. There are no evidences, however, in the structure of the earth that it is his, save in the graves of the saints that seam the soil, and especially hold distant lands, where the martyrs of the cross are buried. "Earth, thou grain of sand on the shore of the universe, thee will He again visit; and then thou will prepare a throne for Him, as thou gavest Him a manger cradle."

WEDNESDAY, November 16.

Genesis xxiv.

"A wife for my son Isaac!" This was the one thought of Abraham as old age began to gather upon him, and he saw the necessity of settling the succession of his seed. But may we not reverently trace through this graphic and interesting chapter the work of the Holy Spirit, the Comforter, who during the present age is seeking a bride for the Son of God in the Church which He is gathering out of all the earth?

It was a far journey, but not so far as the distance to which we have fallen from God's original creation and ideal. It involved hazard as to willinghood. "Peradventure the woman will not follow me"; but there was no controversy when the attractions of her future lord were presented. It was all contained in the foregoing purpose of God. There was an abundant display of jewels, and the promise of much more in the background. There was the immediate buckling on of bracelets which bind, and of a ring of interminable love. The quick response of the maiden whether she could go at once or delay—"I will go"—rebukes the dilatoriness of those who hesitate when called to follow Jesus. And in that welcome which Isaac gave to his bride, before the two appeared together in the camp, one cannot but perceive a suggestion of that meeting in the air, that blessed reunion, when the long journey across the desert shall end in the love and comfort of the marriage supper.

THURSDAY, November 17.

The apostle tells us that the purpose of God according to election must stand, not of works, but of Him that calleth; and so, though Jacob was weaker than Esau, less able to cope with the world or hold his own, and though he was, at the beginning of his life, very far from being a saint, yet the Divine decree stood. And all the race of Jacob, his children and children's children, were affected by this significant and discriminating choice, which was afterwards abundantly vindicated by the character of these two men, as the sequel showed.

But notice the inevitable consequence. If God was so careful that his election should stand, in spite of the weakness and craft of Jacob's nature—if the cowardice and chicanery of his earlier years were not able to neutralise or impede it, how certainly will that purpose stand, which has chosen Jesus Christ, and those who are united with Him, by a living faith; for we were chosen in Him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blemish before Him in love, being fore-ordained unto adoption as sons through Jesus Christ to Himself, according to the good pleasure of his will. If the weakness and evil of Jacob, in whom Israel was chosen, could not invalidate God's purpose, but, in spite of all, it stood—how certainly it must and will stand for our eternal blessedness, since there is everything in our blessed Lord to make us well-pleasing and precious in God's sight. "Behold, my servant whom I have chosen, mine elect, in whom my soul delighteth."

Genesis xxvi.

Isaac is a type of Jesus. In many points we discern Him. Like Isaac, He is the heir of all the promises; in Him all the nations of the earth bless themselves; He has great possessions; the wells He digs are precious heritages; for they yield living water, and speak of room, and rest, and solemn oaths ratified by blood. With Him altars and wells exist in close conjunction. Tenacious of his friends, He avenges Himself on his foes.

But, unlike Isaac, He is not ashamed to call us brethren, or to acknowledge us before his Father and the angels (Matt. x. 32, Heb ii. 11). He might well be ashamed of us; we are not like Rebekah, very fair to look upon. As we look back on the failures and imperfections of the years that lie behind us, we can only abhor ourselves, and bitterly repent. We have often been ashamed of Him, failed to do his bidding, lacked in the answer which the bride should give to her husband, and must have brought many a blush of shame or sorrow to his face; but, in spite of all, He loves and will love, He acknowledges and will acknowledge. There is only one thing which will hold Him back. If we shrink from following Him, and from taking up our Cross; if through indolence or self-love, from fear, or motives of worldly policy we neglect to cleave to Jesus, choosing the worse when He comes in the glory, He will say, "I never knew you; depart!"

Genesis xxvii.

Ponder the blessing of the first-born, as pronounced by the aged Isaac, vv. 27-29, and say if it is not true in every particular of our Lord Jesus, who is designated the heir of all things, the image of the invisible God, and the first-born of all creation.

The sweet scent of his dress is as aloes and cassia; the breath of his speech is fragrant as spring; He gave Himself up for us, an offering and sacrifice to God, for an odour of a sweet smell.

The dew of Heaven rests on Him, who is said to have the dew of youth from the womb of the morning, and is ever anointed with fresh oil. The earth shall yield her fatness to Him, who is worthy to receive riches, and glory, and honour, and power; for all the earth is his. Its corn speaks of his gift of Himself as the true bread; its wine of his gift of the blood to be the wine of life.

All peoples shall serve Him; for He shall deliver the needy when he crieth, the poor also, and him that hath no helper. All nations shall bow down to Him, for He shall have dominion from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth. Yea, all things shall fall down before Him, and his enemies shall lick the dust.

To Him every knee shall bow, and every tongue confess that He is Lord, to the glory of God the Father. When He says "Come, ye blessed," men shall enter into the joy of God; when He says "Depart, ye cursed," there will be no appeal.

The Bible Society Reporter is a monthly periodical which cannot but interest all who labour in the dissemination of the Scriptures and world-wide evangelisation. The November issue promises enlargement and substantial improvements next year. The same applies to the Gleanings, the "search texts" lists of which find profitable occupation for boys and girls in many Christian homes. Published from the Bible House, Queen Victoria-street, E.C., these illustrated papers are both of the nominal price of one halfpenny.

The Gambling Mania.—In the current issue of The Bulletin, the organ of the National-Anti-Gambling League, there is a great body of startling information as to the evil influences of the turf, and the betting system which it fosters. Without feeling much sympathy with the losses sustained by race frequenters, we think it is shameful to find the police powerless to repress rowdyism and other crimes. We see it noted that the fines imposed on bookmakers for overstepping the law are considered quite inadequate as a deterrent. Many magistrates think they ought to have the power of imprisonment without the option of a fine.

FROM OTHER LANDS.

Rome in the Philippines.

FROM the pen of The Daily Telegraph's special correspondent in Manila there lately appeared a most important, impartial résumé of the effects of untrammelled Romanism in the Philippines:—

"Spain," he writes, "has been the great religious colonising nation, aided in the saintly work by the sister State of Portugal. They aspired to share the globe between them. It is one of the droll ironies of history that just 400 years ago the whole uncivilised world was authoritatively divided between these two States. Pope Alexander VI. was good enough to issue a bull, by virtue of which all heathen lands west of a meridian through the Cape Verde Islands should be Spanish, and all to the east of it Portuguese.

"With all the energies they possessed, the two Catholic States, then in the plenitude of their power, went to work to carry out their mission.... Among the Spaniards the prime object was declared to be the conversion of the heathen. The whole Iberian peninsula was a vast missionary society. Nearly every exploring vessel bore a sacred name and a spiritual benediction, and carried priests, crosses, beads, pictures, and images....In these Philippine Islands there is not, and I believe never has been, a fraction of Protestantism under any guise whatever. They have enjoyed what an English cleric once called the 'inestimable advantage of religious unity.'...

"I meet on the streets of Manila everywhere white-frocked Augustinians and Dominicans, Capuchins in chocolate habit, Franciscans in blue, Recoletos and Jesuits in black. These are the people who have ruled the Philippines, and it causes no surprise to learn that even in this year of grace the Archbishop is a more potent personage than the Governor. A city barely more than half a mile square—the Intramuros, or old Manila—with some 15,000 inhabitants, boasts a grand cathedral and eleven large ornate churches. There is the past of the Philippines in a nutshell... In no other part of the world during those three centuries have priests and religious orders been so supreme. It was the clerics who conquered Luzon...To an incredible degree they have dominated the civil power. Governor after Governor has tried to throw off the yoke and has rued the attempt. Corcuera fought the Archbishop for a while successfully, and then was sent to prison for five years; Diego Salcedo was banished to Mexico, and "died of grief and melancholy"; Bustillo y Rueda and his son were murdered; and José Raon expired a prisoner under guard in his own residence."

Then follows an indictment of the civil administration, corrupt to the core, in the hands of conscienceless place-men.

"With officials like these as allies, and with no other Europeans to check them, and regarded by a superstitious populace with almost supernatural awe, the priests in these islands were invested with nearly absolute power, and the man is not yet born who can be trusted with such power. They have abused it, and the Archipelago rings with the story of their misdeeds. It is charged against them that they have amassed property at the expense of the community, that, notwithstanding the enormous wealth of the friars, they absorb a disproportionate share of State funds, that they have repressed education, have made themselves partners in the worst crimes of the civil tyranny, and that many of them live notoriously immoral lives. In Ireland the priesthood has been the friend of the tenant farmer; in the Philippines the friars are usually the bad landlords, who grant only short leases and never make compensation for improvements. The regulation of the estates of these religious orders will be a grave question for whatever Power henceforth rules the Philippines...The education of the people has been exclusively in their hands; it is enough to say that practically it does not exist. Contrary to an express law, of which they have been continually reminded by Governors-General, they have refused to teach the Christian elements in Spanish, because people who could read Spanish books and newspapers might come to know too much. It is well that on the gravest charge of all the testimony is exclusively Catholic. Foreman is not a hostile witness and he rather apologises for speaking the truth.

May the love of veracity (he pleads), a befitting attribute of a good Catholic, be sufficient justification for what adverse allusions have fallen from my pen on that respectable body which has moulded the thought of generations of civilised masses, and successfully brought them to embrace our most sacred creed.

"The facts which he cites, and others that one hears ad nauseam, go to show that it has been the commonest thing in the world for the priests to live in concubinage, and that in many instances they have torn from the native family by force a wife or a daughter, and in some cases have resorted to violence, deportation, and even murder, to get out of the way husband or father who resisted the wrong. The point is not the relative frequency of the crimes, but the fact that they generally went unpunished. These are some of the outrages which the Filipinos are now avenging. Manila has been cut off from the provinces for three months, but such reports as reach us show that the clergy have everywhere been the selected victims of rebel vengeance."

In conversation with this same correspondent Dr. Dozaleda, the Archbishop of the Philippines, said:—

The only hope for the islands lies in the immediate intervention of a strong Western Power. Delay is dangerous, as the people are intoxicated with success, vainglorious, and restless. The religious orders must go. That is undeniable, because the whole people are determined on their abolition, and are now able to render their retention impossible.

"With regard to the dissension they had fostered, he blamed chiefly the Dominicans, Augustinians, Franciscans and Recoletans, these being the richest orders; and after them the Benedictines and Capuchins, who are of less importance.

The Jesuits (said his Grace) are comparatively blameless. The rival orders quarrel and intrigue against one another, act unworthily, and slander their opponents, thus increasing the general disfavour with which they are regarded.

"For this state of things the Provinciales, who are approximately equivalent to archdeacons, are, I gathered, mainly responsible, being utterly beyond the Archbishop's control. Dr. Dozaleda, in short, admits he does not possess much power.

"The total number of Spanish priests in the Philippines before the war was about 1000, but lately every steamer has taken fifty or a hundred away, and now hardly 500 remain.

"I heard privately from a native priest that the reason the Archbishop hopes for the expulsion of the religious orders is that the friars have grown too strong for him, and he expects by getting rid of them to increase his own authority."

Paris.—The convention on the deepening of the spiritual life has been one of much interest and blessing. We were glad to welcome Rev. F. Paynter and E. W. Moore once again, and Pastor G. Soltau's presence was greatly valued. The meetings were well attended, and the quiet of the city was a pleasant contrast to the unrest of the days previous to the change of Ministry. We believe that many received definite blessing—a new impulse in the spiritual life. W. Soltau.

Paris City Mission.—Twenty years ago this Mission was commenced for promoting visitation from house to house by means of city missionaries, superintended by Paris Evangelical pastors. The Mission has had great success in winning souls to Christ. Ten sections of the city have been brought under the influence of the Gospel through this agency since 1878. The committees in Paris and London are anxious to extend the work to other districts, and wish to employ twelve missionaries instead of ten as at present. Mr. W. J. Lockie, 14, Nicoll-road, Harlesden, N.W., is general secretary.

A School in Jamaica.—We have received from Mrs. E. Rylands Trestrail, the Manor House, Milton, near Northampton, a statement respecting the condition of a school at Westwood, Jamaica, for the education of girls of African descent. It has done good work for a number of years past, and in happier times was self-supporting. The recent commercial depression in the West Indies has caused a considerable reduction in the number of pupils, and the resources of the institution have become very straitened. Mrs. Trestrail makes an earnest appeal to all English friends of the coloured race for help in this crisis. She will glady give details and receive donations for this purpose.

West Indian Hurricane.

I HAVE been asked by several friends who have sent gifts for the sufferers from the hurricane how my fund is prospering. Through The Christian I have received £551 7s. 3d., and from personal friends and readers of the Daily Mail, £108 6s. On October 11 I was able, through a cablegram, to place in the hands of my friends in St. Vincent £60, and £30 in the hands of four missionaries, and since then I have sent two remittances by mail. I have also sent two boxes of clothing, the gifts of various friends. The Mansion House Fund is distributed amongst the labouring poor, and is very far from being sufficient to meet their requirements.

Have we not done enough, some may ask? Far from it. People in this country have not half realised the utter loss of property, and the destruction of the very industries from which a livelihood is made. The fresh accounts received are heart-rending. When I say that I was a missionary in the West Indies for twelve years my interest and earnestness will be appreciated.

As for the missionaries, their position is distressing in the extreme. "They are homeless," one writes, "and have had to seek shelter where they could find it; and now that their churches have been swept away, their members homeless and beggared, they are left without any means of support." It should be said that the West Indian churches have been for some time striving to carry on their work without support from England. One missionary, who has suffered more, perhaps, than the others, writes: "We have lost clothing, furniture, books, etc., and are destitute. I have about 9s. to feed wife and five children, and four sick people that are utterly destitute."

Pray let me entreat that help may be continued a little longer. (Rev.) S. Sunderland.

Breton Evangelical Mission.

THE London Committee in aid of the work of Pasteur Lecoat has issued a circular, pleading for help in the extinction of the debt on the mission work in Brittany. We read:—

"We have never been able to send so much as was required to make up the amount needed for the whole of the work, and consequently the pasteur has had to borrow from his banker from time to time, until now the debt amounts to £351 with a heavy annual interest. Had the work at any time stood still, we should have been able to overtake it, but it has increased and extended year by year, so that we have not been able to keep pace with it. The Committee feel that now an effort ought to be made to extinguish this debt, and by an increase of regular annual subscriptions to put the minds of the responsible workers at rest as to their support.

"It is wonderful, when we consider what the Lord has accomplished by this small missionary work in Brittany, how it has all been done. The pasteur has sacrificed much, and instead of being supported by the work he has contributed by his own personal labours largely to its maintenance—indeed, he has received for himself from the funds of the Mission no more than £100, spread over the last five years; and not only so, but has for the last ten years used for the expenses of the Mission all the profits arising from his farm, etc., averaging more than £40 a year."

Several friends have come forward with offers of assistance in placing the work on a sound footing. The hon. treasurer of the Mission is Major P. H. Hewitt, Oakley House, Isleworth.

The Prohibition Movement in Canada.—A deputation from the Dominion Alliance, containing representatives of all the temperance organisations of Canada, has had an interview with the Premier to urge the speedy enactment of a prohibitory law. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, reviewing the circumstances which led the Government to take a plébiscite, said that the views of the deputation would be communicated to the Government. This too-important question had been trifled with. While Quebec had apparently given a large majority against prohibition, the province was nevertheless temperate, two-thirds of the municipalities being under local option.

Views of Palestine.

PHOTOGRAPHY brings the world to our doors, and enables such as stay at home to share in a measure the pleasures of those who travel in far-off lands. Messrs. Underwood and Underwood, of 26, Red Lion-square, W.C., have, we are glad to see, included the Holy Land in their varied collection of sea and landscape views; and this, the Judæa series, will have an interest for travellers as well as a charm for others who may inspect them.

The series consists of seventy-two stereoscopic photographs, accompanied by a "perfecscope"—an adaptable and handy stereoscopic instrument. The pictures are clear in the extreme, and carry us through Jerusalem and the principal places usually visited by travellers in Judæa, embracing the historical and traditional spots as well as the never-changing characteristic life of the land. A concise descriptive book of the tour has been prepared, and accompanies the photographs, which are put up in a neat case, the subjects being arranged in order as seen by tourists.

All who have journeyed in this region, so closely connected with sacred history, and so covered with the indelible writing of the Divine Hand, will appreciate a vivid artistic reminder of their travel. Biblical students will find in these scenes a source of delightful help. Particulars of the collection may be had from the publishers, at their address, given above. By the descriptive circular we learn that the price of the set, with book and perfecscope, is £2 10s., carriage paid.

A Day of Prayer for India.

THE second Sunday of December last year was largely observed as a day of prayer for the awakening of India. In many sections of the country seasons of great spiritual refreshing followed this united waiting upon God. The encouragement of this fact, together with a growing sense, assuredly inwrought by the Holy Spirit, of the vast importance of prayer as a means of accomplishing God's purposes in ourselves and for the world, has led to the appointment for this year of Sunday, November 27, as a day of prayer for India.

Under the stimulus of what God has already wrought in answer to prayer, every individual Christian is asked so to observe this day as to make it a means of still larger spiritual results. Will not congregations in Great Britain make special arrangements for waiting upon God on this day? Will not all ministers endeavour to secure a wide and definite observance of the day among the people in their churches? Will not every Christian organisation give a special character of prayer to this day, and encourage its observance? In short will not the whole Christian Church in Britain give itself on this day to prayer for India, its missionaries, its native churches, its inquirers, its vast unreached multitudes? Let our prayer be continual, definite, believing, all-embracing, abounding with thanksgiving. Following this day let us pray and work for the victory of Christ in India, remembering that the spirit of prayer and praise is the spirit and earnest of victory.

Church Missionary Society.

THE C.M.S. is an organisation with a grand history; and as the centenary year approaches, it is gratifying to hear that the history, upon which Mr. Eugene Stock has for some time been engaged, is making steady progress. The work will be issued by subscription, and will consist of three volumes, averaging 600 pages each. The first two will, it is hoped, be out early in 1899, and the third soon afterwards. The syllabus gives a good idea of the comprehensive character of the work; while the name of Mr. Stock, as author, is full guarantee of careful compilation and sympathy with the subject in its deepest and widest sense.

From the syllabus we learn that preliminary chapters will deal with the Great Commission, Missions before the Reformation, also missions subsequent to that time of crisis. Then there follow chapters on the Eighteenth Century and the Evangelical Revival, the Missionary Awakening, the formation of the Society (and others), with early workers, struggles, and victories. From that time onward Mr. Stock will conduct us through a marvellous story of sustained effort, ever-growing operations, and abundant blessing. The work corresponds to what in the biography of an individual would be described as his "Life and Times." The events and persons that influenced the Society and the cause of foreign missions at successive stages, and the modes in which the Society in its turn exercised an influence upon its contemporaries, will all be shown.

Meantime a small volume has been issued, in which the story is outlined in advance. This is entitled "One Hundred Years; being the Short History of the Church Missionary Society" (1s. nett. C. M. S. House). In the preface Mr. Stock says of the larger work: "The History dwells at some length upon the at different periods in the century, that is to say, upon the state of the Church of England at home, noticing various religious movements, developments, and controversies, and introducing such men as Bishops Blomfield and Wilberforce, Archbishops Tait and Benson, Lords Shaftesbury and Cairns, Sir Arthur Blackwood and Mr. Pennefather, Bishop Ryle and Canon Hoare. Also upon the progress of Christian missions generally, with references to the work of men like Bishops Selwyn, Patteson, and Steere, of Morrison, Livingstone, and Hudson Taylor. Also upon public events and affairs abroad which have affected missions, such as the slave trade, African exploration, the opium traffic, the colonisation of New Zealand, and a whole series of important events in India. Many great Anglo-Indians meet us, such as Charles Grant, Lord W. Bentinck, Alexander Duff, Bishops Heber, Wilson, and Cotton; Dalhousie and Canning, Henry and John Lawrence, Montgomery and Edwardes and Frere."

While the large work will be "a liberal education" in its own line of knowledge, the small book is a marvellous compendium of information.

Last week the second jubilee celebration of the C.M.S. was held by special services and meetings, the twelfth anniversary of the Gleaners' Union being observed simultaneously. At a large gathering at Exeter Hall, Sir John Kennaway, president of the Society, pointed out that the celebration was part of the Three Years' Enterprise. Two and a-half years had passed, and they were not in that state of "premature exhaustion" which some of their friends predicted for them, but were prepared to go forward. Glancing back fifty years, the President recalled the storm and stress of that time. Yet they had three days of marvellous meetings, which proved a great stimulus to the Society's work. They had advanced since then. The number of missionaries had increased fourfold, and their income had risen to more than a quarter of a million. But how small had been their efforts compared to their opportunities! Touching on the question of finance, Sir John said that in the first jubilee they raised a sum of £55,000. "But our ideas," he added, "are much wider now, and we look forward to gathering in at least four times as much as that." They had £28,000 promised or in hand, but they required much more than this.

Addresses were delivered by descendants of those who laboured on behalf of the Society long ago, also by representative missionaries. The last speaker was Mr. Eugene Stock, who told how, as a boy, he had sat in that hall at the first jubilee meeting, and wondered whether he would be present at the next jubilee. But he never dreamt that it would be his tremendous privilege to record the history of the Society. As a practical question, he urged that everyone present at that second jubilee meeting should definitely ask the question, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?"

Rabbi Lichtenstein's Work.

THE fifth annual statement of the London Council for Rabbi Lichtenstein, is full of interest. There is evident movement in the midst of the rabbis, and from among these many have from time to time consulted the man who has so long been notorious as a believer in Christ. Yet the days of persecution are not past with him; they never can be in this world. He says: "I am insulted, directly and indirectly, on every possible occasion, especially when preaching; yet I have had blessing. God has blessed. I rise above the unsparing calumny which assails me, in the consciousness that I have not denied the words of the Holy One, and that I have exalted Jesus Christ before friend and foe as the light and life."

Writing on the experiences of the past year, Rabbi Lichtenstein says: "During eighteen centuries my poor people have wandered an aimless, weary pilgrimage, marked by streams of blood, ever in search of righteousness and justice, ever sighing for the coming of King Messiah, the shoot of David's royal stem, their promised deliverer. By reason of this ceaseless longing they have been deceived over and over again, to their unspeakable misery, by lying, false Messiahs, and have become a scorn and derision to the Gentiles.

"In spite of this long, fruitless expectation, their miserable delusions and countless terrible experiences, they have never wavered in their hope of that salvation through the Messiah of the house of David, spoken of by Moses and the prophets, and confirmed in the Holy Scriptures. Three times a day they fervently pray, 'Oh that the shoot of David's stem may soon grow up, and his horn of salvation arise, for we wait for Thy salvation daily!' I have endeavoured to prove to my people, so sad at heart with hope deferred through ages of waiting, that desire when it comes is a tree of life. (Prov. xiii. 12.)

"I have depicted to them in brilliant sunshine, in the words of prophets and the Holy Scriptures, how that the Righteous Branch of David has grown up in Jesus Christ; that the sapling of David has become a tree, planted by the water-courses, whose leaf does not wither, and whose fruit appears in its season, and that all that He does prospers. That in his days the righteous shall flourish, and there shall be abundance of peace so long as the moon endureth; that He shall rule from sea to sea, from the river to the ends of the earth; all kings shall do Him homage; and all peoples of the earth shall serve Him.

"Again I have reasoned of the same truth by means of the signs of the times. I would have my brethren know that it is only Jesus who can raise his hands in blessing over his kindred, changing our mourning into rejoicing; only He who can convert, comfort, and redeem us. 'The ransomed of the Lord shall return and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads; they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away.'

Copies of the deeply interesting report, and other information, may be had from the hon. secretary of the London Council, Rev. David Baron, 23, Boscastle-road, Highgate-road, N.W.

Homeless and Destitute.—An interesting scene was witnessed last week at the Boys' Home, 164, Shaftesbury-avenue, the occasion being the annual reunion of "Old Boys," formerly in the Home. The latter is the headquarters of the National Refuges for Homeless and Destitute Children. Bright and encouraging speeches were made by Mr. Bristow Wallen, secretary, and other friends and officials. A number of money prizes and other rewards were presented to old boys who had kept their situations for long periods with good characters. It was stated that during the past fifty-five years the National Refuges have benefited over 14,500 poor boys and girls; and that from the Society's training ships, Arethusa and Chichester, over 6000 well-trained lads have been sent into the merchant service and Royal Navy.

Jordans.

A REVERIE OF THE PAST.

IT is only a plain brick building, with red tiled roof, lattice windows, and great shutters, painted white, which open backwards to the wall, and an ordinary cottage door. Inside, a number of narrow, uncomfortable, very old wooden forms; and on the left-hand side, as you enter, a raised daïs, containing a few seats facing those below. This is all, and yet the sense of a great reverence falls on one, as much as if it were a pile of Gothic architecture, its windows rich with mediæval glass, its floor covered with the memorial stones of the great dead.

Such is Jordans, one of the oldest of the Friends' meeting-houses, one of their earliest sanctuaries, dating from the time of George Fox; and built amid the meadows and beechwoods of this lovely dell, in one of the most sequestered parts of Buckinghamshire, to be as far as possible sheltered from public notice and persecution. It is two miles from the village of Chalfont St. Peter, and almost exactly midway between Beaconsfield and Chalfont St. Giles—very accessible, therefore, from London by the new line from Baker-street.

JORDANS MEETING HOUSE.

But why this interest about an almost deserted meeting-house? For answer, come out into the little paddock that intervenes between it and the road, thickly shadowed by these noble trees; look at those eleven tombstones raised to the height of some two feet above the grass—five in the first row, four in the row behind, and two in the rear. Now read their names. On the furthest to the left, William Penn, 1718, and Hannah Penn (his second wife), 1726; on the next Guilliania Maria Penn, 1673; on the next, May Pennington, 1682: on the next, Isaac Pennington, 1679; on the next, Joseph Rule, 1765. Behind are the names of Letitia Penn, Springett Penn, May Frame, and John Pennington; and behind, again, of May Elwood and Thomas Elwood. The stones are comparatively recent, but there is no doubt as to the identity of the graves.

It would take too long to tell in full the fascinating story that gathers around these names. We will lightly touch on the salient features, beginning with Isaac Pennington. He was the son of a Lord Mayor of London, but, not having his father's interest in politics, settled down to a quiet country life at the Grange, in this parish. He married Lady Springett, who had been left a widow, when but twenty years of age, with an infant daughter, Guilliania Maria. After her second marriage, whilst in a state of deep spiritual distress, she heard of "a new people, called Quakers," and was attracted to their meetings. She writes: "I found them truly of the Lord, and my heart owned and honoured them. I longed to be one with them, and minded not the cost or pain to witness in myself such a change as I saw in them—such power over the evil of human nature." This first meeting ended in her husband and self becoming Friends.

Long before Lady Springett became May Pennington, she had been on friendly terms with Mr. Elwood, a rich Oxfordshire gentleman, who came with his son Thomas to visit her in her new home. They were very disappointed at the change which had come over her. "The dinner was very handsome, and lacked nothing—but the want of mirth and pleasant discourse—the weightiness which was upon their spirits and countenances, keeping down the lightness which would have been up in us." And son Thomas could not get on at all with Guli, a lovely, graceful girl of fifteen. She treated his advances with such gravity that he withdrew "in some disorder of mind."

However, the Elwoods came again, and met some of the more notable Friends, whose conversation had such an effect upon the son that he resolved, in spite of his father's strong and bitter opposition, to become one of this despised society. Indeed, he was driven from his home, and took up his permanent residence with the Penningtons. This was about the year 1660, when the restoration of Charles II. had opened the door to a great persecution of those who would not take an oath or conform to the Established Church. Pennington and he were cast into one of the prisons of the time, and lay there for several months.

On their release, Elwood learnt Latin of John Milton, who was living in poverty and blindness, and for whom he took "a pretty box in Chalfont St. Giles," that he might avoid the plague. This cottage is still to be seen. It looks on to a little piece of vegetable garden. On the left of the narrow passage a kitchen, on the right a small sitting-room. I sat down in that sitting-room, and tried to imagine the blind poet. Here he must have conceived his majestic "Paradise Regained." In that kitchen those hoydenish daughters of his must have wrangled; up those rickety stairs he must have felt his way to his bedroom; and in this low-roofed room, with that tiny closet leading out of it, and with its single window, he must have slept.

About this time William Penn first came into contact with Guli. When a student at Oxford he had been deeply impressed by a Quaker minister, and whilst at Cork had cast in his lot with this persecuted people, amongst whom he had become a minister in the twenty-fourth year of his age. He had just been released from eight months' imprisonment, and so came to Chalfont, and at their first meeting his heart went out to the beautiful and noble girl. They were married, and settled at Rescombe, not far from Jordans.

Thomas Elwood married May Ellis, in whom he found "to a sublime degree, the fair fruits of truth and solid virtue." Then Isaac and May Pennington died. And shortly afterwards William Penn and others crossed the seas, and founded the great State of Pennsylvania, buying it of the Indians as an asylum for their persecuted co-religionists; and it is noteworthy that, whilst surrounding colonists were ever and anon at war with the Indians, and the scalping-knife and tomahawk brought death and terror to many a heart, the lives and property of the descendants of Penn were regarded by the Indians as sacred. Such was the effect of that memorable treaty made between a number of unarmed Friends and the wild children of the forests, of which Voltaire said, "It was the only one ever made without an oath, and the only one that was never broken." To all time it stands as a protest against the policy of confiscation and extermination, and as a testimony to the appreciation of fair and honourable dealing by the children of nature.

After Penn's return to England his beloved wife Guli died, and Springett his son. He married a second time, and the remains of Hannah, his second wife, lie in the same grave with his. He went to reside for some years in America, as governor of the new State, but returned to England to die, and on his deathbed requested to be buried next Guli, at Jordans. Here, too, were buried his children, and Thomas and May Elwood.

What a beautiful and noble circle! No sordid aims of ambition or selfishness marred the beauty of their careers. Their days were passed in an atmosphere of deep spirituality—love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance, were theirs in happy possession. Lovely and pleasant in their lives, they were not divided in death, and have long since met in that land of which they were citizens, and to which they so manifestly belonged. F. B. M.

Home Missions.

Wesleyan Central Mission.

In spite of a drenching rain which rendered an open-air function anything but desirable, the many supporters of the useful and growing Wesleyan mission work in St. John's-square, Clerkenwell, rallied in considerable numbers on the occasion of the stone-laying, on Wednesday afternoon last, in connection with the erection of new premises.

The occasion created great interest; the windows of the huge factories and workshops overlooking the site were thronged, and crowds awaited in the muddy streets the arrival of Lord Northampton and Sir Henry H. Fowler.

Subsequent to the out-door service; at which stones were laid by Lord Northampton, Sir H. H. Fowler, Lady Chubb, Mrs. Horace B. Marshall, Mr. J. H. Lile, and other friends, was held in the chapel. After a hymn had been sung, Rev. Charles H. Kelly gave a vivid account of the success of Wesleyan mission work, laying especial stress on the opportunities afforded for women's effort. The success of the mission at Clerkenwell was the success of a work which did not need to argue about the existence of the light, for it possessed the light and demonstrated the fact. The remarkable development, latterly, of religious life, especially that wrought among the young by means of Sunday-schools, was a cheering sign of the times, and in that spirit of inspiration and progress the Wesleyan mission work was bound, by the blessing of God, to secure continued prosperity.

The Marquis of Northampton thanked the audience for the kind way in which he had been received, and for the invitation to lay one of the foundation-stones of a building which would be of enormous use in the future. The last time he spoke there he was greatly struck by the broad-minded Christianity of Rev. Edward Smith, then the minister in charge. It was partly because he knew that his good work was being carried on by his successor that he was there that day. Before Edward Smith came there, the prospects of Evangelical religion in the district were not bright. It was reputed to be the peculiarly receptive abiding place of a blasphemous pseudo-socialism and an offensive atheism. Thank God that had well-nigh disappeared, and on the ruins had been raised a stronger edifice. He believed that in no part o London had so much been awakened in late years as there. That zeal would triumph over all difficulties. The speaker gave a forcible account of the methods of spending Sunday common to the secular working man, and urged that, in view of the great need for work, Christians should sink their small differences and join hands to enable this country to fulfil its rightful destiny, as a civilising and evangelising force in the name of the Lord.

The Right Hon. Sir Henry H. Fowler (whose father, Rev. J. Fowler, was superintendent of the circuit and the secretary of the Conference on the occasion of the last stone-laying at the church, fifty years previous) said: They were completing one great scheme by beginning another. Success had necessitated progress. He remembered the mediæval period—the dark ages—of that chapel, the time when the old congregation had gone and the new one had not come. The congregation was reduced before Mr. Edward Smith came to 127. In those days there were people who said—in regard to that chapel, and to others up and down the country—"The people have gone away, and the chapel is not wanted." That would be reasonable if the chapel had been planted in the wilds of the Sahara. But churches were like the Christianity they existed to teach—they were not for a class, but for mankind. So long as there were people in a neighbourhood, there was need for a building, and, if the right means were used, there was AN ASSURED CONGREGATION.

Now they had, with the junior classes, a membership of 1000, and a complete equipment for every kind of philanthropic work, the outward and visible signs of an inward and spiritual grace. Sir Henry referred to some of these branches of social work, notably that of the Sisters, and said he regarded as of the first importance the statement that they often had as many as 500 present at the Holy Communion.

Of the £10,000 required for the new buildings, about £6000 still remains to be raised. Rev. J. E. Wakerley, 19, Lloyd-square, W.C., will be glad to supply particulars of the work.

The King's Own Mission.

DEAR SIR,—Permit me to make an earnest appeal through your pages to consecrated women who have leisure, and who are willing to serve the Master anywhere, to come and help us at the King's Own Mission, Royal-road, Kennington, in the visitation of the hundreds of homes open to us, but who never see any visitor who comes with the simple message of God's love in Christ. Our voluntary workers are all fully employed, and doing to the utmost of their ability, but, being in daily work, their time is, of course, limited; but with them and our two "Sisters" 700 homes are being visited weekly with Gospel literature, and in many cases spiritual intercourse. We cannot compass the work ready to our hands with our present staff. Our able and devoted superintendent, Mr. O. L. Heatley, is occupied morning, noon, and night, and loves his work, but there is a physical limit to what any one man can do. We want who would devote regularly one afternoon a week for systematic visitation; we also want two more "Sisters" whose time would be wholly given to the work. This means £40 per annum for each "Sister." Are there no stewards of God's bounty who can and will supply the money? I believe there are so soon as they know of the need. But there may be ladies having private means who only want a sphere of definite work; if so, come and see the mission for yourselves and have an interview with Mr. Heatley respecting the work.

WOMEN FULL OF THE HOLY GHOST,

During the mission Mr. Josiah Spiers has just been conducting with such marked blessing amongst the children, blocks of buildings were discovered, inhabited by several hundreds of people, some of whom told us that no Evangelical visitors ever called on them; sacerdotalism and extreme Ritualism are rampant all round us, with the baneful influence of the "Confessional." A new theatre is springing up within five hundred yards of the hall.

HARDER AND HEAVIER FIGHTING

is in store, but Christ is stronger than the legions of darkness; Christian women, will you come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty? As the result of Mr. Spiers' mission, a number of boys and girls, many having definitely accepted Christ, and others under impression, have come forward to enter the school of Christ. Special meetings are being arranged to help them on; who will come in the week evenings to feed these lambs of the flock? Mr. O. L. Heatley is at the Hall, Royal-road, Kennington-park, every morning at 10 o'clock, and will be most willing to extend a welcome and give information to any friends applying to him.—Yours truly,

William Green, Hon. Treasurer.

Woodlands, Bickley, Kent.

[This work is in the very midst of hooliganism. But for such efforts as this, in connection with which Mr. Green renders such enthusiastic help, there would be no coping with the degradation and ruffianism of some parts of the metropolis.—Ed.]

Theatrical Mission.—Every Friday during the winter a free tea is given at Macready House, Covent Garden, to forty or fifty theatrical employés, mostly chorus and ballet girls, after which a bright service is held. These meetings have been resumed under most encouraging prospects. The speakers at the opening meetings included Lady Trelawny, Miss Ada Ward, Rev. S. Martyn-Bardsley, and the secretary, Mr. S. E. Burrow.

Vivisection.—The Anti-Vivisection party in Germany, says a contemporary, is making great progress, and it has formed societies in most of the provincial towns. A shocking case was quoted a short time ago of some doctors, who, on finding the calves they used for their experiments too expensive, had made use of a number of orphan children. The feeling against vivisection in Germany is growing very strong.

The Bridge of Hope.

YEAR by year Miss Steer calls together her friends and supporters to hear of the Lord's doings among the wayward and lost young women of Ratcliff-highway. At the meeting on Wednesday last, an account, at once thrilling and modest, was given of heroic endeavours to raise the fallen and minister help to those who enter upon life's conflict with great odds against them. How many such not only inherit vicious tendencies, but come into the world in the midst of evil examples and the horrors of flagrant wickedness!

The weather being unfavourable, the meeting was not so largely attended as otherwise would have been the case, but those who were present enjoyed the stimulating addresses that were delivered, and also the inspiriting words in song of Miss Ada Rose (Mrs. Gibbs).

It is about twenty years since this work began. As our readers know, it is conducted on a definitely Christian basis, and is threefold in its operations—preventive, shelter, and rescue endeavours. In the first class there are now 151 children in the Cottage Homes at Chingford; in the second over 800 individuals were received in the night shelter in Betts-street, making 4300 "attendances"; in the third department 140 cases passed through the Home, and 35 remain.

After a brief financial statement by Mr. E. C. Straker, a hearty address was delivered to the workers by Mr. R. C. Morgan, who presided. Some helpful words were also spoken by Rev. S. C. Myers, a Wesleyan worker in the locality. Speaking of in which some children enter the world, he mentioned the case of a lad who, looking especially happy one day, was asked the reason: "Found a shilling?" "No." "Got a new place?" "No, better than that!" "What, then?" "Mother's dead; and now I shall have a chance!"

Miss Steer opened her address with a word-picture of the condition of things in Ratcliff-highway, when she entered upon her work near a score years ago, visiting in company with Miss Lowe, and feeling her way to enlarged usefulness. A great change has come over the scene since then, and it is difficult now to find such houses as were then notorious, and occupied entire streets to themselves. Notwithstanding the removal of the maritime population from the region of St. George's, there is yet much work to do. The girl hooligans will henceforth largely engage the attention of the workers; and the God who has blessed efforts on behalf of older sinners will be all-sufficient in efforts to and direct their lives into paths of usefulness.

Miss Jones dwelt with joy upon the blessing which has attended the work in the Rescue Home. As always, it demands much care and patience. One poor girl had been heard to say that until she came under its roof "she never knew what it was to be happy." A lady who visited the Home asked with curious interest, "How do you punish the girls?" Of course, the answer was, We love them—we do not harden them. On one occasion at a meeting in the Home a girl asked to be allowed to choose a hymn for singing. This was readily permitted; and she indicated, "I stood outside the gate, a poor wayfaring child." She explained that she remembered when she stood at the door of the Rescue Home and was received with Christian pity. Miss Jones added that the girls learn to love and help one another.

Ladies interested in the work of rescuing our perishing sisters, and throwing protecting arms around girls in serious moral danger, should look in and see Miss Steer some Wednesday afternoon when she is "at Home." The Bridge of Hope is at 28, Betts-street, St. George's, E.

Cardiff Town Mission.—Miss Kate Hosking, one of the Cardiff Town Missionaries, has had to resign her appointment through ill-health, after five years of faithful and fruitful service amongst the poor of Cardiff. A few days ago, at a special evangelistic meeting, convened at the Moira-terrace Mission room, she was warmly commended to the Lord in prayer, and many testimonies were given of distinct blessing received through her visitations. She also had presented to her as a token of love and esteem a Bible and Hymn-book, with the earnest hope that she might be soon restored to health and to her beloved work.

A Sunday in Dublin.

THE FREE BREAKFAST.

IT may interest your readers to hear an account of a visit to some of the different places of Christian work carried on in Dublin on the Lord's Day. We commenced at the early hour of eight by a visit to one of the most interesting missions in the city, namely, the Free Breakfast, held for nearly nineteen years past. From five to six hundred men and women (many having passed the night in the streets) wend their way on Sabbath morn to the Christian Union Buildings, Lower Abbey-street. After receiving a good breakfast, during which time a number of Gospel hymns are sung by the choir, a straight talk or Gospel address is given for about fifteen minutes, to which great attention is paid. Nearly all the men and women are Roman Catholic, and although they are perfectly free to leave before the address is given it is very seldom any do so.

The money for carrying on this work is supplied by voluntary contributions all over the kingdom. Mr. Dawson is the energetic secretary. We were told that many of the men and women have been attending week after week for years, and we feel sure that the truth sown will eventually bring forth fruit. Classes for children are carried on at the same time, in another room; of course, the children also receive their breakfast.

MERRION HALL.

We now proceeded to another part of the city, and were privileged to meet with some two hundred Christians, who gather every Sunday forenoon to remember the Lord, and show forth his death in the breaking of bread in a very simple manner. At twelve o'clock we attended the service in Merrion Hall (Lower Merrion-street), which might be designated the Dublin Tabernacle, as in structure it is very similar to that well-known building in London so recently destroyed by fire. We listened to a very powerful address to Christians by Mr. Brunton, of London. There was a large attendance, very good hearty singing, and, on the whole, the service was most impressive. The Lord has wonderfully owned the Word faithfully preached in this building for over thirty-five years. The hall was erected at the close of the Great Revival in Ireland (1859-63), and was the scene of the labours for some years of the late Rev. Denham Smith.

At four o'clock we visited a children's special service in connection with the Harcourt-street Baptist Chapel, whose pastor, is no stranger in London. We found a large number of young people, who sang several hymns, read a portion of Scripture aloud, and then listened to a short address. This was a very bright and happy meeting, and was likely to impress the dear children with the fact that being Christians would make them happier and more useful. Many of them, we believe, are truly converted to God.

IRISH CHURCH MISSIONS.

At seven o'clock we attended a service in the mission church, Townsend-street, in connection with the Irish Church Mission, which is doing good work among Roman Catholics. The sermon was preached by Rev. Philip B. Johnson, on "The Angelic Salutation to the Virgin" (Luke i. 26-29). The preacher proved very clearly to his hearers that there was no ground for the doctrine, so firmly held by Romanists, of the "Immaculate Conception." The service was simple, the singing good and joined in by all. There was an attendance of over 600 people, many of them Roman Catholics. Not a few of those present had been Romanists, but are now truly converted.

MEETING FOR MEN.

At half-past eight o'clock we found our way to a special meeting for men, held in the Metropolitan Hall, Abbey-street. The attendance was very large, and the men listened with great attention to a stirring address by Rev. Wesley Guard, a popular Methodist minister. An after meeting was held. The meeting was partly conducted by members of the Dublin Young Men's Christian Association, Mr. Boyd, the secretary, taking the chair.

In the Irish capital the Lord's work is prospering, and there exists a great bond of union and fellowship among many members of the different sections of the Christian Church in Ireland.

Sailors' Welcome Home.

ON Tuesday, November 1, the opening of additional premises and a new mission-room in connection with Miss Child's Welcome Hall, Canning Town, drew large companies of friends together. The afternoon meeting was presided over by Mr. R. C. Morgan, who spoke of the noble work Miss Child had been the means of accomplishing among the sailors. He dwelt on the importance of being soul-winners for Christ.

Miss Child thanked God for the friends who had come forward to help her. The Home was founded twenty-one years ago at Ratcliff Highway, but she had followed the sailors to Canning Town, as so many of the vessels come into the various docks in that neighbourhood. The new Home was opened barely a year when the need was felt for additional accommodation and larger mission-room, and the Lord had graciously provided these premises. Many love-tokens had been received from thankful sailors.

A number of friends afterwards spoke, and testimonies from some of the men were deeply appreciated.

After tea, Hon. Granville Waldegrave presided over the evening meeting, and made mention of the blessing he had received at the Old Fo'c's'le in Ratcliff Highway. Mr. Blaauw gave an account of the work, and appealed to those present to support it by their prayers. Sympathetic and hearty words were spoken by Mr. Wm. Luff, and these delightful meetings were brought to a close with prayer for the increased success upon all the efforts on behalf of our sailors made by Miss Child and her helpers.

Billingsgate Christian Mission.

WE learn from the twentieth annual report of this excellent work that the committee have resolved upon the immediate founding of a medical mission. "There is not a day passes without some minor accidents taking place in the market, and the committee are forced to the conclusion that we ought to render help in this direction. They have therefore decided to secure the services of a thoroughly trained and certificated Christian nurse, experienced in surgical work, who shall be in daily attendance at the Mission to deal with all cases that require immediate attention, and provide the necessary advice and assistance in other ailments which may come within her scope.

"The opinion of the trade generally is that this will meet a long-felt want. We need hardly say that it will entail a somewhat heavy expense, but, anticipating that the effort will commend itself to all who, like our Great Example, sympathise with human woes, and delight in alleviating suffering wherever it is met with, we confidently appeal for increased help to cover the outlay."

The secretary of the Mission is Mr. A. Walters, 6, The Corridor, Billingsgate Market, E.C.

Strangers' Rest, Ratcliff Highway.

A MEETING of more than usual interest was held on Friday last, at which Messrs. Isaac, H. R. Francis, Milton Horner, and R. C. Morgan took part. The chief features were solos sung and words addressed to the sailors by Mrs. Allison, well known by her Bible-class for men, conducted for many years at the Metropolitan Tabernacle.

The special interest, however, was elicited by the presence of Rev. Mr. Friesner, a Russian missionary of German parentage, of the American Baptist Missionary Union labouring in Telegu. He gave some valuable information respecting Russia, and told of the wonderful works of God in his own sphere of labour in India, where he has been for seven years.

The Strangers' Rest is passing through somewhat of a crisis, in consequence mainly of the prospective retirement of Mr. Isaac from the leading part he has taken in it. But we are glad to say he will not leave the box-seat while the coach is turning a corner. We trust the future of the Strangers' Rest will be as useful as the past has been.

House of Rest, Finchley-road. — The monthly meeting in the Pillar Room was addressed on Friday last by Rev. G. H. C. MacGregor, who gave a practical and pointed instruction on "Temptation." The address was based on Eph. vi. 16, and was full of the deepest practical and spiritual teaching. The evening meeting was addressed by Col. Oldham.

INTERNATIONAL S.S. LESSONS.

November 20.

"Manasseh's Sin and Repentance."—2 Chron. xxxiii. 9-16.

Golden Text.—"If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness."—1 John i. 9.

MANASSEH.

SON of Hezekiah. He began to reign when only twelve years old. Teacher should point out that youth is reached earlier in hot countries than in England, hence Manasseh would be "older" in experience at twelve than boys here.

The name means "causing to forget," given by his father because the newborn heir caused him to forget his sorrows, though Manasseh lived up to his name by causing Judah to forget God. His was the longest reign (fifty-five years) in the history of the Jews. He undid all his father's good work. He was surprised while hunting and captured; carried away by the Assyrians. In Babylon he repented, and was restored to his kingdom. His subsequent conduct showed that he had profited by affliction.

Sin of Manasseh (9, 10).

He led the people into sin of idolatry and vice. They were worse than the heathen in that—

(1) They having known the way of right and yet departed from it were worse than those who had never known it.

(2) They had risen to a great height, therefore the fall was greater than if they had not risen so high.

Manasseh (1) introduced idolatry.

(2) Transformed the Temple of God into a heathen worshipping-place.

(3) Persecuted those who remained true to the old faith.

Results of the Sin.

The nation flooded with vice. It was a reaction from the stern righteousness of the reign of Hezekiah.

Teacher should compare this with the widespread revelry and licentiousness when Charles II. came to the throne. People in high positions have great influence, and we should be careful to use our influence for good.

The Punishment (11).

One day, when out hunting, the Assyrian forces came upon him and found him hiding in a thorn break and took him captive to Babylon.

Note (1) Connection between sin and punishment. We do not always see it, but the one who suffers can trace it as a rule. Here sin had weakened mind and body, and made Manasseh a coward.

(2) God's punishments are always for our good—never vindictive. He wounds that he may heal. It is sometimes very severe, as in this case. A king lowered to the position of a captive slave, but it served its purpose.

Repentance and Restoration (12, 13).

Repentance is the sorrow we feel for wrong done, and a determination to do better in future.

This is the only feeling that the punishments of God should inspire in us. Some grow rebellious and determine to fight the matter out with God by sulky indifference to Him and his laws. "It is hard to kick against the pricks." Man cannot contend against omnipotence.

As soon as we are repentant God forgives and restores.

God can forgive the deepest sin and the greatest sinner, but that should make us love Him more and not presume on his mercy.

Fruits Meet for Repentance (14-16).

Repentance when it is true will always show itself in conduct. Manasseh was a better man after his restoration than he could have been without his punishment. He (1) took away the strange gods, (2) repaired the Temple, (3) made defences for his nation.

Teacher should emphasise the need for seeking the strength of God to help in our good resolves. We cannot fight our temptation or do our duty in our own strength. "The arm of flesh will fail you. Ye dare not trust your own," but "Put on the whole armour of God." He only is strong who is strong in the Lord of Hosts.

Come and Go.

WHEN John the Baptist was walking with two of his disciples, seeing Jesus, John said to his companions, "Behold the Lamb of God." Then the two disciples followed Jesus, who turned and said to them, "What seek ye?" They reply, "Master, where dwellest thou?" He saith unto them, "Come and see." And they went and abode with Him that day (John i. 35, 39). This was Christ's first word of welcome to Andrew and John. This invitation "Come and see" is, with the exception of his utterance to his mother at twelve years of age, the first spoken words of Jesus given by the four Evangelists.

It is a gracious invitation, for Jesus asks these two young fishermen to come home with Him. Thus Jesus invites men and women to make a full and free inquiry about Himself. "Come," He says, "and find out for yourselves, make investigation. Come, as friends together do not depend on hearsay, but come and judge, know all you can about Me, ask, see for yourselves."

This word of welcome with which Jesus first greeted the disciples He often used afterwards. When the rich young ruler ran to Jesus and, kneeling, asked, "What must I do to have eternal life?" Jesus, by way of helping him and testing his sincerity, said, Sell all that thou hast and give to the poor. "Come, follow Me" (Matt. xix. 21; Luke xviii. 22); while Mark x. 21 adds, "Come, take up the cross and follow Me."

When Jesus was preaching to the people He closed with this appeal (Matt. xi. 28): "Come unto Me all that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Come—rest. Rest of heart and life which the world could not give. Jesus bids the people come to Him and receive. He sought to give to his disciples the rest they needed midst their sorrow and work, and so He said to them on one occasion, "Come ye yourselves apart into a desert place, and rest awhile" (Mark vi. 31).

His words of welcome and invitation are thus: (1) Come and see; (2) Come and follow Me and take up the cross; (3) Come and rest.

All those who come and see Jesus, and get to love Him and know Him, will be glad to follow Him even though they must take up the cross to be his disciples; and all who do, will find rest midst the journey of life, rest in the work and conflict, rest of heart and mind in the sorrow and strife, ease of soul wherever and whatever they do. Especially does Jesus want the children, and still says suffer the little ones to come unto Me, that He may take them in his arms, put his hands upon them, and bless them.

While Jesus says "come" and "see," "follow," "suffer," and "rest," He also says "go."

1. To the twelve disciples, when He gave them his great charge (Matt. x. 6), He said, "Go to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, and as ye go preach, saying, the kingdom of heaven is at hand." This was to be their first message.

2. To the seventy, when Jesus sent them forth into city and village without any restriction of place or people, He said (Luke x. 3): "Go your ways as lambs, heal the sick, and say the kingdom of heaven is come nigh unto you."

3. To the Scribes and Pharisees Jesus said (Matt. ix. 13): "Go, learn what this meaneth. I will have mercy and not sacrifice, for I am not come to call the righteous but sinners to repentance."

4. To all those who heard the story of "the good Samaritan" (Luke x. 37): "Go thou and do likewise"; that is, go and do deeds of kindness and neighbourliness to all men according to their need, whether they are Jews or Samaritans. Whenever and wherever you can be of help or blessing, go and minister to the suffering and afflicted.

5. When Jesus was risen from the dead on the morning of the resurrection, as the women were returning to Jerusalem from the open tomb, He met them and said (Matt. xxviii. 10), "Go tell my brethren that they go into Galilee and there shall they see Me."

6. And in Christ's last charge to the disciples (Matt. xxviii. 19, and Mark xvi. 15) He said, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature."

So Jesus bids men come to Him that He may send them forth. They are to "come" to Him that they may "go" for Him. They are to go to the lost sheep of the house of Israel first, to begin at home to do the work that is nearest, but not to stop there. Then as lambs they are to go to wider fields of labour, to heal and preach the kingdom. To others besides disciples Jesus says "go learn" and "go do" kindness and works of mercy. The women He bids go and tell the joyful tidings that He is risen. And, finally, to all disciples is issued the great commandment, "Go into all the world and preach the Gospel."

None are too young to come to Jesus, and none who come are too weak to go for Jesus with some word of love on some errand of mercy, or to do some deed of kindness. Remember, Jesus' first word is "Come," and his last is "Go."

The Reason Why.

Children, children, do you know
Why the summer sunbeams glow?
'Tis that loving hearts may be,
Like Heaven's sunshine, glad and free!

Children, children, do you know
Why the sparkling streamlets flow?
'Tis that kindly hearts may share
Heaven's reflection everywhere!

Children, children, do you know
Why the roadside flow'rets blow?
'Tis that all the world may find
Proofs that God is good and kind!

Children, children, do you know
Why the redbreasts warble so?
Tis that we may learn to sing
Praises to our Saviour King!

Children, children, do you know
Why the swallows come and go?
'Tis that we from them may learn
Heavenly guidance to discern!

Children, children, do you know
Why such tints doth autumn show?
'Tis that we may ever be Ripening for eternity!

Madeline Woodford.—The new Quarter commenced at No. 143. To be able to enter for the Prize Competition at the end of December you must get nine papers correct during the Quarter. Please give your full name, address, and age at the top of each "Searcher."

Elsie Mountstephen.—It is not necessary to write out the question; only number the answers according to the questions.

F. and E. L. Mackenzie.—I was very pleased to receive the photograph.

Helen M. Hunter.—Please give the chapter and verse to each answer.

W. C. Mallinson and Coralie Porter.—Look up 2 Kings xix. 35, and you will find you gave the wrong number of the Assyrians who were smitten by the angel. Several others have made this mistake.

Frederick R. Bailey.—Your writing is not very good; but if you arranged your paper better it would be more easily read. Try some lined paper, and leave a margin for the number of the answer and reference, and leave a space between each answer.

Ruth Pledger.—Will you kindly enclose your paper in an envelope, and, if left unfastened, a halfpenny stamp will be sufficient.

Ethel A. Lay.—Many thanks for your letter.

Winnie Palmer.—I am exceedingly pleased with the photos; the group is very good.

THE EVANGELISTIC FIELD.

Mission at St. Paul's, Newport, Mon.

A SIXTEEN days' mission has been held at this church, conducted by Rev. W. Hay M. H. Aitken, assisted by Rev. James Nunn and Mrs. Crouch. The weather almost throughout the mission week was very unfavourable, and the attendances suffered considerably. On each of the three Sundays, however, the spacious church, which accommodates a thousand worshippers, was crowded.

This was Mr. Aitken's fifth mission at St. Paul's, the first having been in 1871, when he accompanied his venerable father, Rev. Robert Aitken, on his second ever-memorable visit. Twenty-seven years mark changes in any man's life and appearance. Mr. Aitken himself is now becoming venerable, but his "bow" is abiding in all its old "strength," and his "natural force" has certainly not "abated" in the least. He preaches with all his former eloquence and power, and is as energetic and strongly convincing and persuasive as ever. His Sunday afternoon addresses to the assembled hundreds of "men only" were tremendously earnest and stirring. His week-day afternoon addresses on the Christian life were greatly appreciated by the believers present, who belonged to many sections of the Christian Church.

The evening services, night after night, were seasons of great blessing. In the after-meetings one was reminded of those of 1871, although the "ingathering" was less numerous. Yet, even on the smaller scale, the work was lovely, yea heavenly. At ten o'clock the benediction was pronounced, but both workers and congregation were sorry to leave the House of God. The "Thanksgiving Day," October 31, will not soon be forgotten. A united communion was held in the afternoon, and the closing service, with distribution of memorial cards, closed the mission. The following morning the missioner gave his farewell address.

The children's services, conducted by Rev. J. Nunn, day after day, were very much appreciated by the dear young people. Mr. Nunn understands exactly how to engage and rivet their attention; and not a few of his hearers expressed the desire to give their young hearts to the Lord. Mrs. Crouch had meetings for women in the Vicarage Hall, and usefully assisted in the work of the mission generally.

We are all most thankful for this season of blessing. Christians have been stirred up and stimulated to "a closer walk with God" and also to a more devoted and zealous work for God. God has "visited us again," and our hearts are filled with gratitude and love. J. T. W.

Kingstown, co. Dublin.

A MOST successful mission to men was conducted at the Men's Christian Institute, Kingstown, co. Dublin, last week. Much prayer had been offered for some weeks previous to the mission, which opened on Sunday, October 30, and concluded on Friday, November 4. The missioner was Rev. John P. Cushing, of the Church Parochial Missions Society, who spoke from night to night with wonderful power. Mr. Cushing's persuasive eloquence is calculated to make a profound impression on those who hear him. There were a goodly number of professed cases of conversion. Men attended in very large numbers from the very first. Many Christians were helped and revived. On Sunday afternoon Rev. Robert W. Ronayne, of the Mariners' Church, addressed a large number of those who had received blessing at the mission.

Mr. Cushing also delivered addresses on the Spiritual Life in the afternoons, from 4 to 5, these meetings being open to all. A Missionary Mission is now being held in all the Episcopal Churches of Kingstown and neighbourhood.

Percy W. Robson, Secretary.

Evangelists' Movements.

The Wesleyan cause at Redditch has received a great impetus from the visit of Rev. Thomas Cook. Every evening soul-saving power accompanied the Word, and some 200 persons passed through the inquiry rooms during the first week.

Rev. R. Balgarnie has concluded a nine days' mission at Albany Chapel, Haverfordwest, Pembrokeshire. The services were largely attended, and the spiritual harvest most cheering.

The Primitive Methodists of Spalding circuit have secured Mr. C. W. Hall for the position of circuit evangelist, to reside at Holbeach. Revival services are to be commenced at once, and will be extended through the winter season at the various chapels.

On Saturday, October 22, Mr. Thomas Payne commenced a mission in the Working Men's Institute, Monmouth, and continued it until the 31st. Mr. Payne's visit to Monmouth has been attended with much blessing and encouraging success. He has been welcomed and supported by all the Nonconformist churches, and by members of the Establishment.

The Weaver Brothers held a two weeks' mission in Rev. Robert Howie's Church, Govan, Glasgow, which was a time of great blessing. Very large congregations gathered, the spacious church being sometimes crowded to the doors. Scores of persons entered the inquiry-room for conversation. The association of Rev. Robert Howie with the late Richard Weaver in the '59-'61 Revival gave additional interest to the visit of the sons of the late veteran to Govan.

A fifteen-days' mission, conducted by Mr. Joseph Whiting, of the Evangelisation Society, in the George Moore Memorial Hall, Mealsgate, was recently concluded. The fervid and soul-stirring addresses of the evangelist were not only helpful to believers, but backsliders have been restored, and some professed to have surrendered to the Lord. The audiences increased nightly, until the hall was comfortably filled on week nights, and on the Sunday evenings packed far beyond the sitting room.

J. O. P.

During the last fortnight Rev. D. M. Cameron has been conducting evangelistic services in connection with the Free Church, Auldearn, Nairnshire (Rev. John McNeill's). Every night there have been manifestations of the Spirit's working in the awakening and conversion of many. In the inquiry-room there have been persons of various ages, from ten up to seventy, and in some cases whole families. Many Christians have been greatly refreshed. Mr. Cameron will continue the mission another fortnight.

Mr. Charles Inglis has been holding a fifteen days' mission at Canning Town, in connection with Lady Ashburton's Mission, and God has greatly owned the effort amongst all classes. Christians have had their spiritual life deepened; while addresses to the unsaved have been solemn and searching. The inquiry-room has been filled with men, women, and lads, broken down on account of sin, and afterwards rejoicing in a newly-found Saviour. Mr. Inglis is now holding nightly meetings in Liverpool, which are being greatly blessed. B.

Rev. E. P. Hammond has been holding meetings daily in Minneapolis for two weeks and a half. At the same time a convention, conducted by Rev. R. A. Torrey and Dr. Munhall, has been held, and much good has been accomplished. These brethren have done what they could to help on Mr. Hammond's meetings, more especially for the young. The meetings have been held in nine different localities. Sometimes between fifty and 100 have professed conversion at a single meeting. Some of the best workers to-day were converted in similar meetings years ago.

Under the auspices of the Burslem Free Church Council, Mr. W. R. Lane recently conducted an eight days' mission (October 15 to 23) in the Town Hall, Burslem. The services were well attended, and a very gracious influence prevailed throughout the mission. On the Friday evening the hall was crowded to hear Mr. Lane's lecture on "Bunyan and Pilgrim's Progress," and on the closing Sunday afternoon it was filled with men only, who listened with rapt attention to his timely and impressive address. The mission has been productive of much good in the quickening of believers and the salvation of sinners. W. H. C.

Requests for Prayer.

For much blessing on Gospel services at Pontymoile through November.

For blessing on Gospel services at Ugborough, Devon, conducted by Mr. J. Elliott.

For blessing on Gospel services to be conducted in the Ettrick Valley by Mr. James Walker.

For blessing at the Ipswich monthly meetings for Deepening of Spiritual Life on November 17.

For fifteen days' mission in the Baptist Chapel, Whitwell, Herts, conducted by Mr. Goudie, Herts, Union evangelist.

For Miss de Noe Walker and other inmates of the Church of England Zenana Mission Hospital, Bangalore, amid many cases of plague.

For blessing on evangelistic meetings by Mr. C. Russell Hurditch, at Victoria Assembly Rooms, Southampton, on Sundays during November.

For blessing on a three weeks' mission by Mr. Newton Jones, now in progress at Clutton, near Bristol, in connection with the Free Church Council.

For blessing on a fourteen days' mission, commencing on Sunday next at Sundowne-road, Old Charlton, by Mr. Jas. Lovell, of the Evangelisation Society.

For an outpouring of the Holy Ghost on Ballindrait, co. Donegal, Ireland, where Mr. W. Cowden, of the Irish Christian and Missionary Workers' Union, is conducting an evangelistic mission.

Praise.

For blessing on special services at Ettrick Bridge.

African Training Institute, Colwyn Bay.

THE African Training Institute, established at Colwyn Bay, aims to give an evangelical and industrial training in this country to the most promising of the African converts, and to establish branch institutions on similar lines in Africa, thus sending forth to their own land self-supporting missionaries. The natives of several of the English colonies along the West Coast (including Sir Samuel Lewis, the first African knighted by our Queen) show great interest in the work, and have formed auxiliary committees at various places, thus bringing the Institute in touch with 3000 miles of the West Coast.

The students hitherto represent many of the districts along the line from the Gambia down to St. Paul de Loanda. They are taken from all parts of Africa, where 600 languages are spoken. Knowing a little English when they come, their training is continued during their stay in the Institute till every one, before he returns, is able to read with ease and pleasure, so that he can get at the wealth of knowledge that is to be had through English literature. Evangelical books are placed in their hands, to refresh the souls of the preachers themselves, and to constitute them fountains of living water to their own people. Having had this training, the students are able to translate the Book of Books, as well as other good books, into their respective languages. This work is a sure, quick, and economical way of giving the Gospel of Jesus to that "Dark Continent." Just now it suffers greatly from lack of funds, owing to the terrible coal strike in South Wales.

Littlehampton Home of Rest.—In connection with the four "Quiet Days" (November 19-22), Rev. Darlow Sargeant has made arrangement to welcome friends who would like to participate in the blessing which is sure to crown this season of waiting upon God. It is necessary, however, for such to communicate with him at 59, Oxford Gardens, W once. Many who have been privileged to attend a these gatherings at Littlehampton, have returned to their homes and to their work more fully committed to God and to his service.

Conference on Revival.

"Wilt Thou not revive us again, that thy people may rejoice in Thee?"

THE conference on Revival held at the American Tent, Tottenham, on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday last proved full of blessing.

On Tuesday Pastor Bagley, of Tottenham, opened the proceedings with a thoughtful address on the necessity of seeking an outpouring with earnest prayer, and Mr. Arthur Garstin drew from Acts iv. 23-33 many helpful points. No prayer meant no revival, and, conversely, real prayer meant revival. God, the chapter showed, had been waiting just ready at the moment to answer the prayer of his people.

"THE PLACE WAS SHAKEN."

The speaker described at some length scenes of revival in East London some twenty years since, and a glorious outburst of saving power in a chapel at Forest Gate, traceable to the believing, unswerving faith of one of the workers.

Mr. William Grove spoke on similar lines upon the words, "If two of you shall agree on earth as touching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done," and gave several instances of revival following prayer.

Mr. Denning, of Southsea, gave an interesting account of revival work in the tent at Southsea Common, and Pastor G. Turner followed with some weighty words. Those seeking for God at Pentecost, he said, waited not for the stroke of the clock, but to be lifted up to God's platform. A revival meant bearing fruit to God, and to do that we must abide in Him. We cannot tack on the grapes; the cluster must come as the result of unity with God, the God of power. It was the privilege of saints to continue in prayer. Other things than revivals might be seen in answer, but the trial of faith would bring blessed fruit. "I feel that a revival is coming, coming; let all of us agree, and join one with another, and rope others in, until there are circles of praying in all directions.

Mr. Wookey directed attention to the words: "Being in an agony He prayed." Some thought the Christian should always appear bright and happy, but never in agony. How could we look out upon a lost world and not be in agony? The speaker related some affecting instances of distress illustrative of the terrible sufferings of the poor and sinful, and appealed for more prayer of the character which wrestles

IN AGONY FOR SOULS.

Mr. Cockrem described revival influences on Ascot racecourse, where the preaching was on one occasion stopped, because so many were broken down and sobbing around. At Douglas, Isle of Man, also, the Lord caused the people to drop down on every hand, and soon the preaching ground was like a battlefield, as penitents fell as though under fire. It was a marvellous work of God.

Mr. Ned Wright, in moving terms, gave some touching personal reminiscences, and said we should approach the great subject in a spirit of deep humility. The congregation was much moved, and the day's meetings concluded amid expressions of deep gratitude for light received.

During the various intervals, the refreshment tents erected close at hand had been the scene of much earnest discussion and prayer. Two lady missionaries, leaving for China, Mr. Fuller Gooch, and other friends spoke a few stirring, helpful words. Expectancy ran high for the next day's gathering.

On Wednesday, after the preliminary hour of prayer, Mr. Leonard Weaver read Acts ii., and said, speaking on the day's subject, "The Word of God in connection with revivals," that one of the great contributory causes of revivals was faithful preaching. Peter, at Pentecost, did not hesitate to charge his hearers with the MURDER OF THEIR LORD.

The sense of sin needed to be brought home. No sentimental adoption of a creed would do, the Saviour from sin was the only remedy, since the great controversy of God with man was against sin. We must never lack manly, straightforward hard-hitting with the Word of God.

Mr. C. Galletly gave a clear analytical address on declaring a full Gospel, and letting the ungodly crowds see Christ in us, and Dr. McKilliam said, "There is a general feeling that we are on the eve of a great revival. I believe that God is always ready, but his children are not. I remember Reginald Radcliffe preaching in a church in Scotland. When he had finished the people went out, except a few who were anxious for an awakening. We felt disheartened, but Mr. Radcliffe simply asked God to bring the people back again. That was faith. Presently one little boy came peeping in, then another entered, and by degrees the whole church was filled with anxious souls.

Mr. W. R. Lane gave an earnest address upon the revival in Ezra i., and Mr. S. E. Burrow, after the interval for tea and a half-hour of praise and prayer, followed up by quoting from Nehemiah viii., remarking that the people must be brought face to face with the Word of God in its unalloyed simplicity. Then should we see the old results, tears of penitence, "all the people wept," songs of joy, "great mirth," and thought for others, "send portions." Turning to the aspect of individual dealing, he dwelt on the sincere religious enquirer, as personified in the Ethiopian eunuch and Philip's method of taking him through the Scriptures to

A PERSONAL CHRIST.

Short testimonies were given by Pastor Crowe and others, whilst the Browning Quartet, and also Mr. and Mrs. Baker, the blind singers from America, brought much blessing through song.

The last day's meetings were marked by increased attendances and much fervour.

Pastor Fuller Gooch uttered some memorable words, and said that there was much talk about revivals that came to little. They must be true and real in the matter. He believed we lived in times when the miraculous would return; he did not say in the same way as in previous revivals; but, in any case, if they honoured God, God would honour them, and the Holy Spirit would descend in power.

Several questions were asked with a view to clearing up difficult points, and after many helpful answers and comments the meeting was concluded with prayer.

In the afternoon Mr. Theo. Howard dwelt on the duty of believers to seek closer communion one with another on this great question of revival. He instanced Stephen and Barnabas as demonstrating how royally, with what fulness of blessing God equips his consecrated evangelists.

Mr. McVicker gave a graphic sketch, full of incident and pathos, which deeply touched the audience, tracing the origin of the Irish revival of '59 to a tea-table talk in which Mrs. Colville, a Gateshead lady, had come in contact with James McQuiltan. Mrs. Colville, in dealing with a Mrs. Brown, had said plainly but kindly, "My dear, you have never known saving faith in the Lord." McQuiltan was so affected on hearing this, that conviction struck him at the instant. Conversion followed, the neighbours gathered to hear the story, and the revival spread like a prairie fire. Those Irish workers were largely impressed with the thought that the more we expect, the more God gives, and the more is He honoured and pleased. "And," added the speaker, "it may be so again. People speak of the day of miracles as past. It is here. God is not a but lives to bless and save."

Mr. R. C. Morgan said he remembered, years ago, being taken, when a child, to one of Rev. J. Angell James's meetings. He did not remember anything that was said on the occasion, but had a vivid recollection of the one word "God" hung out over the pulpit. "Again and again," continued the speaker, "it comes back to me, it is God that we want; God is the revival. I have a strong feeling, not that there is going to be a revival, but rather I would put it that the work is reviving. God has infinite resources that we have not even dreamed of, and He can show to the world and its magicians the workings of his almighty finger. There is a great responsibility upon us. We must not let the lasting and Divine workings forty years since become a misty tradition, but rather use the inspiring facts of bygone days to become an increased impetus to the coming of the fresh revival which seems to be at hand."

At the closing session, which was attended by a large number of evangelists and workers, Mr. Russell Hurditch gave an interesting account of the '59 revival, and traced to its beneficent influences many of the privileges which Christians enjoy to-day.

Mr. Charles Inglis, after reading a few verses from Acts, declared his strong belief in a coming revival. He met indications of it on every hand, and found a general consciousness of the vast need of it. That being so it was necessary to realise that the people whom God can use are those who in unity of spirit and whole-heartedness of consecration, seek and have faith for a baptism of power. Let them beware of idolatry in the heart, but separate themselves from all known evil, from jealousy at the success of others, from unbelief, from slackness of service, from crookedness of life. The speaker concluded with a glowing appeal for increased faith. "Oh for a breath from heaven to fall on every one present!"

After Mr. E. H. Glenny and Mr. Harrison had spoken, Mr. Leonard Weaver concluded with a few practical remarks on definiteness in seeking blessing, the greater part of the audience rising to join in a final prayer of consecration.

Amongst other friends who took part were Messrs. E. H. Kirwin, Main, Pollard, Nobbs, and Bridgman.

Open-Air Mission.

A WELL-ATTENDED reunion of members and friends of this Mission was held on Thursday last at Exeter Hall, presided over by Sir William Willis. Several of the workers presented brief stirring reports on the "Great Campaigns" of the Mission this year.

A special address was delivered by Prebendary H. W. Webb-Peploe from "Honour all Men," in which he desired especially to encourage the workers and wish them God-speed in their noble calling as preachers upon our racecourses, at fairs, and wherever the masses congregated.

Rev. J. J. Willis spoke of a much-needed work having been successfully carried on at Great Yarmouth. In the centre of the beach there was a large concert hall holding 1500 people, which the Mission had more than once tried to secure for Sunday services, but hitherto without success. They had at last, however, succeeded in getting the permission of the Town Council to use it. This was an important step gained, and one for which they were thankful to God. Major Mackinlay and Lieutenant Kingscote spoke of work at Doncaster and Ascot races. Mr. Walter Gough, who had visited the Isle of Man, and Mr. Barry Wake, who had attended Peterborough and Nottingham Fairs, showed that their efforts had been crowned with success and blessing to many souls. The secretary, Mr. F. E. Cockrem, had paid his third annual visit to Berlin, where most blessed meetings had been held, some among the higher classes of society. There was greater need than ever for clear Gospel teaching on the Continent, which was so largely given over to Ritualism. The Open-Air Mission was, he explained, a foreign as well as a home missionary organisation.

Mr. and Mrs. Baker (the blind singers) rendered with great effect the duet "Looking this Way," and altogether the meeting was voted one of the most helpful ever held under the auspices of this Mission.

Pastor A. G. Brown's Anniversary.

A YEAR has passed since Pastor Archibald G. Brown was settled at Chatsworth-road, West Norwood. On Monday evening last the church was crowded with friends for the celebration. The pastor was in high spirits, and was able to report 184 additions to the membership during the year; half of these had been on confession of faith. The Sabbath attendances have been well maintained. Mr. Brown said he felt as if he were growing young again, and certainly his sprightliness of manner and freshness of matter betokened no symptoms of decrepitude. The Sunday-school presented Mr. and Mrs. Brown with beautiful bouquets, and gladness pervaded the whole proceedings.

Helpful addresses were given by Rev. W. Houghton, Upper Norwood, Pastor Miller, of Rochester, and Pastor Fuller Gooch.

Sermon to City Men.—On Monday last the midday sermon in St. Bride's Church, Fleet-street, was delivered by Dean Farrar to a large congregation. From Paul's words to Timothy, "Fight the good fight of faith," he made a most eloquent and telling Gospel appeal to his hearers. He pressed home (1) the need of being assured that the triumphant life of holiness is possible; (2) the necessity for personal resolve; (3) of earnest continued prayer; (4) for unceasing warfare with evil; (5) for watchfulness over evil thoughts; and (6) the danger of delay. It was a most impressive utterance, and was attentively heard.

Obituary.

REV. DR. W. COCHRANE.

THE death has occurred at Brantford, Ontario, of Rev. Dr. William Cochrane, one of the best-known and most influential ministers of the Presbyterian Church in the Dominion of Canada. Dr. Cochrane, who was a native of Paisley, went to Canada when quite a young man, and for close upon forty years he has laboured in the Christian cause in the land of his adoption. A man of unceasing activity and great organising talent, he was acknowledged by members of all denominations to be a powerful force for good both outside and inside the pulpit. From the references to his death which appear in the Canadian papers it is evident that Dr. Cochrane's loss to the Church with which he was connected will be severely felt.

PASTOR WILLIAM HAYWARD.

Berger Hall, Bromley-by-Bow, the London centre of the Home Mission work of the East London Institute, has sustained a heavy loss by the death of Pastor William Hayward, for upwards of eleven years its energetic superintendent. This faithful servant of God passed to his heavenly rest after several months of painful illness. The interment took place at the City of London Cemetery, Little Ilford. In every possible way the people of the neighbourhood showed their love and appreciation for one who had spent his life for them for Christ's sake. Floral tributes were placed on the coffin on behalf of the various societies connected with the Mission, and a most impressive proof of affection was given by the tear-stained faces of those who assembled.

REV. W. UNDERWOOD, D.D.

Intelligence reaches us of the death of the Rev. W. Underwood, D.D., which took place suddenly after falling to the floor while in the act of dressing, at Burton. He was born in 1812, and was trained for the ministry at Loughborough College. His first pastorate was at Wirksworth. He removed to London, and was one of the earliest pastors, if not the first, at Praed-street, the church now at Westbourne-park, over which Dr. Clifford presides. His health failed after eleven years' work here. On his recovery he accepted the presidency of Chilwell College, which he resigned in 1873. He has rendered very distinguished service to the Baptist denomination both with tongue and pen. Very widely loved and honoured, he has passed away from us to the higher realm of service.

REV. D. S. DAVIES.

By the sudden death of Rev. D. S. Davies, pastor of Union-street Church, Carmarthen, Welsh Congregationalism has lost one of its foremost ministers. He was found dead in his room. A very active minister, in early life he went to Patagonia, and among the pastorates he subsequently held was that of Ebenezer, Bangor. Since his removal to Carmarthen he published a lengthy and scholarly work on "Baptism," and was at the time of his death the editor of the Celt—one of the two Welsh denominational organs. A firm believer in total abstinence principles, he was never weary of advocating them, which he did with much zeal and intelligence. His last sermon was preached at Whitland on the Wednesday previous to his death, in connection with the quarterly meetings of West Carmarthen Association. He was born in 1842.

MRS. H. GRATTAN GUINNESS, SEN.

Our beloved and honoured sister Mrs. H. Grattan Guinness, sen., peacefully passed away early in the morning of November 3, after five days of unconsciousness. Her life was in the truest sense a sacrifice in the service of Christ and the Gospel, and, as such, a sweet savour unto God. She gave herself, her whole time, her remarkable talents, her health and strength, her children, her husband, and her life to the work of the Lord, and this without ostentation, or even a thought that it was in any way an act of singular and sacred worth.

Born in 1831, she was sixty-seven years of age at the termination of her earthly career. In the last thirty-eight years she was the devoted fellow-worker with her husband, Dr. Grattan Guinness, sen., first in evangelistic toils, and then in missionary undertakings. Prostrate by paralysis, the result of excessive labours, six years and nine months ago, she retained to the last her interest in the conduct of the East London Missionary Institute and in the progress of Christian missions in all lands; and, when unable to do more, maintained her correspondence with her children in the foreign field, her last act being to dictate an unfinished letter to her son in China. Her works remain as a witness for God, and her character will long be remembered, in the estimation of those who knew her best, as one of the most unselfish and noble which the riches of his grace has ever produced and brought to moral beauty and maturity.

The funeral was at Baslow Churchyard, in a spot which the dear departed one had herself indicated, between the church and the river Derwent. Friends were present from London, Liverpool, and other places. At the close of the service, conducted by Rev. J. Stockdale, of Baslow, and Rev. Mr. Salt, of Curbar, Dr. Guinness spoke to the large assembly of relatives and sympathising friends. A more touchingly beautiful address was probably never given by a husband at the graveside of a wife.

Oxford Letter.

[From Our Own Correspondent.]

THE commencement of term is being marked by a series of meetings at which the claims of the great societies are put forward. The annual gathering of the British and Foreign Bible Society in the Examination Schools was of exceptional interest. Bishop Mitchinson, in the chair, reminded us that a meeting of the society in Oxford was especially appropriate, it being the home of religious toleration and freedom of thought, symbolised by the existence of Mansfield and Keble, one on either side of the Parks. Then followed addresses by the Dean of St. David's, Dr. Barber, of Leys School, Cambridge, and Rev. W. Holman Bentley, for nineteen years missionary on the Congo. The power of the Bible in the homes of Wales, in shaking the conservatism of China, and in satisfying the heart of the heathen in Africa was forcibly illustrated.

The Archbishop of Canterbury spoke twice in Oxford last week. On Wednesday afternoon he addressed a crowded house in the Union on "Things Indifferent." Very powerfully did he plead for self-control, illustrating his appeal by a reference to the habits of smoking and moderate drinking. He declared that to say, "I don't care; let others go their own way, and I will go mine," was neither Christian nor manly. We are our brother's keeper, and the true principle is that of the Apostle, "If meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no meat while the world standeth." His Grace presided in the evening at a meeting of the National Temperance League, held in the Town Hall.

Principal Chavasse preached the first of a course of sermons on the present controversies in the Church on Sunday week. His subject was Auricular Confession. Taking as his text Joshua vii. 19 and 20, Mr. Chavasse, after a careful examination of the Liturgy, urged that there was not the slightest ground for the minister to claim a middle place between the sinner and God. It is God's property and his alone to forgive sins. The best confessor for a younger sister is an elder sister, for a younger brother an elder brother if they love the Lord, if not, a wise and discreet friend.

The preacher on Sunday week at Mansfield was Rev. John Thomas, of Liverpool. The sermon was a masterly exposition of Rom. viii., in which the preacher laboured to prove the special sonship established by the new birth in opposition to the "wider hope" which claims for all men the privilege of "sons."

Seamen's Christian Friend Society.—At the monthly muster of the Christian Harbour Lights, at the society's headquarters, London Dock, on Thursday last, most cheering testimony was borne by seamen and others to the saving and keeping power of the Lord. Mr. Hill reported that the past had been a prosperous month. The large hall had been crowded for the limelight lectures, at which numbers of seamen had signed the pledge. The Gospel meetings had been well attended, and many seamen converted. Gratifying testimony had come in from the society's coast stations, clearly showing that the Lord was working in the hearts of our brave seamen and fishermen.

The Howard Association.

THE annual report of the Howard Association points out the importance of a general agreement among friends of the Temperance cause regarding desirable legislation. With reference to the outburst of juvenile ruffianism in certain localities of the Metropolis, particulars are given of inquiries into the exciting causes of this class of crime and into the legal provisions for its repression. Regret is expressed that the carrying of pistols by young roughs, a practice which is responsible for so much mischief, is still permitted by law.

In accordance with a fundamental principle of the Association, that the prevention of crime and pauperism (especially by the education of the young in Scriptural truth) is of incalculably greater importance than their cure, or ultimate treatment, both the chairman of the Association (Mr. Francis Peek) and the secretary (Mr. Tallack) recently urged, in The Times, the desirability of promoting Biblical instruction amongst the young, as a means of the prevention of crime.

Mentioning this, the report says: "An experienced prison authority made some excellent remarks lately to the secretary of the Association, in reference to one of the radical causes of juvenile, as well as of adult crime and sin. He spoke of the necessity of educating the young in the conviction that their time here is short, even at its longest span, and that Eternity is to be prepared for, as a great and certain fact of supreme importance. But, in too many cases, this life is apt to be regarded as if it were all. And such a view tends to reduce men to the level of brutes."

The year 1898 marks an important period in English penal administration, by the passing of the Prison Act. This practically enables the Home Secretaries, in future, to make almost any regulation which may seem good to them for the management of the prisons. It authorises also some noteworthy immediate changes. These include a certain degree of classification for offenders; an extension of the number of appointed visitors of prisons; the opportunity for industrious and well-behaved short-term prisoners to work off a part of their sentence; and the restriction of whipping to cases of gross insubordination, with the condition that in every instance this punishment must be approved by a Board of Visitors and also by the Home Secretary.

Copies of the report may be had from Mr. William Tallack, at the offices of the Association, 5, Bishopsgate-street Without, E.C.

A "Friendly Circular."

THE following circular, sent out to the members of a community of the Society of Friends in a provincial town by certain leaders of the "meeting," has incidentally come into our hands. It is dated some eight years back, but the matters with which it deals are not of transitory importance, and we hope many of our readers will find it fraught with practical suggestion:—

"Dear Friend,—Having been appointed by our monthly meeting to call the attention of our members to the duty of 'keeping clear and correct accounts, and of carefully inspecting the state of their affairs once in the year, as well as to recommend them to make their wills and settle their outward affairs in time of health,' we have taken this method of urging upon members their duty in these matters. The importance of these practices, and the serious results of their neglect, are continually brought to the notice of all, and it is especially the duty of members of a Christian Church to see that they are individually clear in these respects. The valuable advices contained in our Book of Discipline on the importance, not only of making wills, but also of revising them as circumstances alter, call for special attention.

"We would also impress upon those Friends who have others dependent on them the desirability of insuring their lives or otherwise making provision for a time of sickness or old age."

[Signed by four Friends, two males and two females.]

Mr. W. Nobbs has of late been in poor health. He has, however, been able to undertake Gospel work occasionally. His address is 3, Shaftesbury-terrace, Hereford.

THE BOOK WORLD.

BOOKS FOR THE NURSERY.

A good book of pictures and stories for little folks is Happy Holidays (1s. Nelsons). Every page is gay, in harmony with the bright exterior.

The Travellers, and other stories, written and pictured by Mrs. Arthur Gaskin, is one of the brightest of nursery books, and sure to be a favourite with the little ones. (James Bowden.)

Darton's Leading Strings (1s. 6d. Wells Gardner, Darton, & Co.) contains many short sketches suitable for children's reading, and many of the illustrations are of a high-class character.

For mirth-provoking contents The Rosebud Annual is a well-known favourite. There are about 200 illustrations, all of them admirably printed, and the letterpress is amusing to match. Bright within and without, this book is "the very thing" for a Christmas present for the little ones. (4s. James Clarke & Co.)

A children's volume of exceptional excellence is The Golden Picture-Book, beautifully printed, with many coloured pictures, bound in covers strong and handsome. The secondary title tempts the little ones by setting forth the contents as "Pleasant stories wise and witty, Pages bright with pictures pretty." In quality and quantity the stories and engravings are "rich and rare." (5s. Nelsons.)

Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co. have issued, in Four Noble Women (1s. 6d.), a bright little volume, well illustrated, containing brief biographies of Miss Frances Willard, Miss Agnes Weston, Sister Dora, and Mrs. Catherine Booth.

The Paternoster Publishing Co. has issued two attractive intaglio cards bearing helpful verses by Miss Mercedes Rivolta. They are entitled Another Day with Jesus, one card giving the morning lines and the other the evening. (3d. each.)

The evils of auricular confession are set forth with remarkable force in The Practice of Confession in the Church of England, by Frances Power Cobbe, a booklet of which a fourth and revised edition has been issued by T. Fisher Unwin. (1s.)

The Oldest Trade in the World (1s. 6d. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier) is a series of "addresses to the younger folk," brief and pithy, by Rev. G. H. Morrison, of Dundee, which may also be studied with profit by older readers.

A remarkably useful work is Cassell's Miniature Cyclopædia. A new and popular edition, revised by W. L. Clowes, deals with thirty thousand subjects. This is a marvel of compression and cheapness. (Limp 1s., cloth 1s. 6d. Cassells.)

Nisbet & Co. have issued a second series of Rev. Sir Algernon Coote's thoughtful and spiritual addresses, under the title of "Twelve Sermons." (2s. 6d.) The eminently poetical style of the author is revealed in depth and tenderness.

A publication likely to prove of great value to such as use the telegraph is The Mariners' and Family Cable Code, compiled by B. T. Vickers for the use of naval and military officers, travellers, and residents abroad. (4s. S. W. Partridge.)

The Secret of Gladness (1s. Hodder & Stoughton) is the appropriate title of a beautifully illustrated Christmas booklet, by Dr. J. R. Miller, of Philadelphia. The subject is one congenial to that experienced writer, and he handles it with much grace and charm.

A capital edition of an old acquaintance has been issued by Messrs Wells Gardner, Darton, & Co.—The Surprising Travels and Adventures of Baron Munchausen. (3s. 6d.) The illustrations are numerous, and in harmony with the humour of the story.

A verbatim report of the admirable address on Social Reform, recently given by Lady Henry Somerset at Pontymoile, and appreciatively referred to by the Press, is now issued in pamphlet form (1d.), and may be obtained from the office of this paper.

A timely book, from the pen of Mr. Charles Hastings Collette, has the rather long title, Transubstantiation and the Sacrifice of the Mass Critically Examined. Mr. Collette is careful to name the authorities for all his statements. (1s. C. J. Thynne.)

Many housekeepers will give a hearty welcome to A Year's Cookery, by Phyllis Browne. It gives dishes for breakfast, luncheon, and dinner for every day in the year, with practical instructions for their preparation, and a special section on food for invalids. (1s. Cassells.)

Rev. James Anderson, of Emmanuel Church, Glasgow, has compiled a choice little book, entitled Daily Watchwords for Christian Living. It gives a verse of Scripture and a stanza of some favourite hymn for every day in the year. (R. Downie, 193, Main-street, Gorbals, Glasgow.)

The very thoughtful book, Handfuls on Purpose for Weary Gleaners (2s. 6d. Pickering & Inglis, 73, Bothwell-street, London), by Pastor James Smith, of Coalsnaughton, contains a great number of expository outlines and suitable illustrations, very suggestive and helpful to students and teachers.

A new serial of thrilling and adventurous interest has been begun by Messrs. Cassell & Co., entitled Perils and Patriotism (6d. per part). Its true tales of heroic deeds and startling experiences are sure to find myriads of readers. With the first part is given a coloured picture portraying "A Catastrophe on the Matterhorn."

The Gospel in the Wilderness (6d. W. F. Mack, 70, Park-street, Bristol), by Col. H. W. J. Senior, is a useful booklet. It describes the Tabernacle, its construction, fittings, and symbolical meanings, remarking on lessons to be deduced even from each detail. The illustrations are excellent, and add greatly to the reference value.

Those who cultivate the literary taste will find refreshment in the pages of The Pleasures of Literature and the Solace of Books. (3s. 6d. Wells Gardner, Darton & Co.) Compiled by Joseph Shaylor, this dainty little volume contains gems from the writings and speeches of great men. Andrew Lang writes a racy introduction.

The Pilgrim Fathers (Weekes & Co. 2s.) is a cantata written for the forthcoming choral festival of the West Midland Federation of the Free Churches. Mr. Thos. Facer, the talented composer of the music, has here given us some of his best. The cantata is admirably suited to the capacity of choirs likely to be attracted by the subject-matter of the work.

Though not actually a commemoration volume, Under the Shadow of St. Paul's, by Henry Johnson, is published in connection with the centenary of the Religious Tract Society. The book is very handsomely and fully illustrated, in many cases from original sources, and brings together some of the wealth of history and achievements which centre in and around St. Paul's. (2s. 6d.)

Comfort and Counsel. (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) This elegantly got-up birthday book is enriched with daily quotations from the late Mrs. Rundle Charles, the well-known Christian author. The thoughts culled from her writings are of a highly stimulating and profitable kind, and the book may be warmly commended to those in search of such a volume for personal use or presentation.

The Art of Smiling and other Papers, by Margaret Maclure (1s. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier), will be welcome in many family circles because of the homely and practical quality of the dissertations, which deal with themes bearing on everyday life, and are marked by sympathy and good sense. We gladly endorse the words of warm appreciation expressed in a preface by Lady Aberdeen.

Revival Method. By Rev. Albert Swift. (Morgan & Scott. 1d., 1s. per 100.) This booklet, setting forth plans of work and hints to workers, has been published in this country at the suggested of Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, who was associated with the author in past years. The counsels given on preparatory work, on the conduct of missions, and on following up will be found helpful to those in need of such suggestion.

The Church of England Temperance Society, 4, Sanctuary, S.W., send us Vols. III. and IV. of the summary and analysis of evidence given before the Royal Commission of Licensing, compiled by Mr. Foulkes-Griffiths, barrister. Vol. III. deals with the Scotch and Irish evidence, and Vol. IV. summarises the remedial proposals put forward by the various witnesses. The handbooks are valuable and suggestive contributions to a great cause.

Throughout the year Sunday Reading brightens many a home; as Christmas time draws near the bound volume is a source of delight in a multitude of Christian families. The gay exterior is a promise of good things inside; and the large number of excellent illustrations, and the great variety of stories, sketches, and interesting items amply fulfil the most extravagant of juvenile expectations. (3s. and 5s., according to binding. Wells Gardner, Darton & Co.)

A book of much present interest is Fairy Tales from Far Japan, translated from the Japanese by Susan Ballard, of the St. Hilda Mission, Tokyo. Mrs. Isabella L. Bishop commends the book in a prefatory note, and there are useful introductory chapters by the translator. Handsomely illustrated, the book will be at once instructive to grown-ups, who would know something of child-culture and of the people of the "Britain of the East," and entertaining to English-speaking boys and girls. (2s. 6d. Religious Tract Society).

Mr. James G. McClure, of Lake Forest, Illinois, acting on the suggestion of another, studied the subject of "finding our possibilities," and put his thoughts into an essay full of Christian wisdom and earnest feeling. He went further, and wrote on asserting, protecting, and developing our possibilities; and, adding chapters on time and opportunity, life and godliness, always in the same key, discovered that a book was in his hands. It is entitled Possibilities, and is issued by Marshall Bros. (2s. 6d.) The pages are calculated to prove helpful to many.

There have been many expositions of our Lord's teaching, described by some as parable, by others as narrative, regarding Dives and Lazarus. In a pamphlet entitled Here and Hereafter; or, Life, Death, and Eternity, Rev. G. W. Butler, M.A., rector of West Knighton and Broadmayne, Dorset, expounds a portion of the much-debated passage—Luke xvi. 19-26. The treatment is evangelical and purposeful, the tone being solemn, as befits the theme. We trust the author will be enabled to issue his study of the passage in its entirety. (6d., paper; cloth, 1s. Partridge & Co.)

We welcome part 2 of Sites and Scenes, in which Rev. W. T. Gidney describes the work of the London Jews Society. The two parts describe the whole of the society's operations in the East and in Africa during a period of ninety years. Recent developments in the East, and the visit of the Kaiser to the Holy Land, lend a special interest to the information given in part 2 regarding mission work in Jerusalem. All who follow up the many efforts made to spread the Gospel among God's ancient people will find much in this book to engage their prayerful interest. Portraits are given of the best-known workers of the society. (1s. net. London Jews Society, 16, Lincoln's Inn Fields, W.C.)

The Religious Tract Society has done a signal service to the present generation by producing the excellent Present-Day Tracts. Alike singly and combined in volumes, these essays in defence of the faith and for the furtherance of truth have performed an important ministry. Volume xiv. (2s. 6d.), containing Tracts 79 to 84, is as good as its predecessors. The writers are Rev. Drs. Stanley Leathes, H. R. Reynolds, D. W. Simon, and J. Murray Mitchell, also M. Kaufmann, M.A.; and the subjects cover a wide field of instruction, the Doctrine of the Trinity, the Nature of Christ, the Primal Religion of Israel, Non-Christian Religions, and Culture and Christianity. To many a studious minister a set of these volumes would be a welcome present.

A singularly readable work is Dr. Clifford's Typical Christian Leaders (3s. 6d. Horace Marshall & Son), comprising memorial tributes, publicly delivered, to the worth and memory of such men as Gladstone, Spurgeon, Liddon, Dale, Browning, Drummond, etc. Dr. Clifford takes a very wide and very charitable sweep in his critical estimates of these leaders of the world's thought and work, and it will excite surprise in many minds that he should label Darwin with the name of "Christian." His contention is that Darwin's scientific deliverances, fairly considered in the spirit of their author, make for a confirmation of revealed truth and do not militate against it. Keeping this reservation in mind the reader will find no small pleasure in perusing these brilliant sketches.

Those who have been taught how to pray are not in a general way content with book prayers. Yet some may derive help from such a compilation as Household Prayers, prepared for use in family worship, by Dr. W. Garden Blaikie (2s. 6d. Sunday School Union). In the preface we read: "The present collection of prayers is so constructed that it will not be difficult for earnest persons who use them to make them channels for the desires of their hearts. They are simple and direct, expressing the varied wants which the members of Christian families have need to pour out to God, and they introduce much of the very language of Scripture—the divine liturgy of earnest souls." Many other things, all good, may be said of the volume, the closing pages of which provide a scheme of Bible readings for a year.

Mr. Robert Culley.—A number of new gift or reward books issued includes Yuppie (1s. 6d.), Effie's Bargain (9d.), A Heroine in the Strife (9d.), and Shad and Shady (1s.), all of which will be read with profit by the young people; John Fletcher, Farmer (1s.) deals with problems better suited for the consideration of older people; Reggie's Dream (1s.), a collection of pithy little stories, well suited to boy readers; A Royal Letter (1s. 6d.), a series of Bible talks, is helpfully written and brightly bound, and Our Boys' and Girls' Annual (1s.) is, as usual, replete with bright reading and good illustrations. Rev. R. Corlett Cowell has produced a capital little book, entitled, Bird Minstrels: Their Ways and Wanderings. Papers on London insects, and travel in Arctic regions and elsewhere, follow the very suggestive chapters that furnish the title of the book.

The Y.M.C.A.

A new association has been formed at Lancaster. Successful missions to men have been conducted at Birkenhead Y.M.C.A. by Mr. Henry Armstrong, and at Waterfoot (Lancs.) by Mr. A. K. Yapp.

The Wolverhampton Association has initiated an effort for providing Sunday suppers to poor lodgers in the town. As a local paper says, "It is an interesting and commendable experiment."

The splendid gymnasium of the St. Helens Association has been re-opened after extensive alterations and renovation. Over 300 attended an "At Home," at the invitation of the president (Col. W. W. Pilkington), on November 20.

The autumn conference of the South-West Suburban District Union of Y.M.C.A.'s was held at Wimbledon, under the presidency of Mr. Albert A. Head. Addresses on the subject of "Bible-class Work" were given by Mr. A. C. Furse and Mr. W. H. Mills.

Last week a special mission for young men was held at Portman Rooms, Baker-street, in connection with the Central London Association. The missioner was Dr. Grattan Guinness, who was obliged, however, to leave his post in the middle of the mission in order to be present at the deathbed of his mother. The services of the closing days were taken by Mr. J. H. Putterill, and the effort was altogether full of encouragement.

The Wolverhampton Y.M.C.A. has made a successful experiment in the direction of reaching the inmates of the various lodging-houses of the town. On Sunday evening about one hundred and fifty of this class responded to an invitation from the association to supper, and were provided with a good meal. Following this was a lantern lecture, with an address on the subject of the "Prodigal Son." Workers and friends of the association joined heartily in the effort, which it is intended to repeat every month.

In connection with the forthcoming week of prayer, from November 13 to 20, the Glasgow Association has organized an effort designed to reach every young man in the city. It is expected that about two hundred special sermons will be preached on the 13th and 20th inst., by the ministers of Glasgow and neighbourhood, as a part of this endeavour; and a large quantity of special literature, embodying an appeal to young men by Rev. Dr. Stalker, is being circulated. The Birmingham Association has arranged for more than one hundred sermons in connection with the young men's Sunday movement.

A remarkable work has been done this year by the Army and Navy Christian Commission of the American International Committee of the Y.M.C.A. Although the war is closed, the work is still being continued, and appeals have been received from the highest Government officials, and army officers and men of all grades, for its permanent establishment. Among the supplies furnished free to the commission for the late campaign were over three million letter heads, and two million five hundred thousand envelopes, costing alone nearly 1000 dollars a week. The results in direct religious work were especially marked in the Southern camps. Evangelists, under the supervision of Mr. Moody, conducted regimental services and carried on personal Christian work. Through the kind co-operation of the Bible Society, the Commission was able to distribute sixty thousand Bibles and Testaments and sixty thousand hymn-books.

The Y.W.C.A.

A largely-attended social gathering in connection with the Dundee Association was held in the Kinnaird Hall last week. It was stated that a new restaurant, specially for women in business, is about to be opened in the city, and also a boarding-house to provide a home for those away from home. Helpful addresses were delivered.

The annual report of the Blackburn Association contains interesting accounts of aggressive work of an especially spiritual character. Meetings on behalf of missions, for the deepening of spiritual life, afternoon Bible classes, and gatherings for business girls, are among the efforts put forth. The published accounts are remarkably detailed and well kept. The Lady Superintendent, 19, Richmond-terrace, Blackburn, will be glad to answer enquiries.

The Glasgow Association held a conference on Saturday afternoon, Nov. 5, of secretaries from local branches and members of committee. About seventy were present, including Miss Brown Douglas, hon. secretary for Scotland, and Miss Marrable, hon. secretary for Ireland. The time was spent in prayer and free conversation upon methods of work, and such subjects as suggestions for the Week of Prayer, home Bible study, the development of the foreign work of the Y.W.C.A., etc. Meetings and classes are beginning with encouraging interest the winter session.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

* The Editor will be glad to receive "post-card" notes for this page, of* SPIRITUAL PROGRESS AND EFFORT in the Churches. They must be prompt, reliable, and NOT TRIVIALITIES*; and be accompanied by sender's name and address.*

Church of England.

There will be a meeting of bishops in London on Nov. 15 and 16.

Rev. Joseph Wood, D.D., Head Master of Tonbridge School, will succeed the Bishop-Designate of Calcutta at Harrow.

The Bishop of London will open the completed schools of St. Stephen's, Westbourne Park, on the 17th inst. The total cost has been £10,000.

Rev. C. H. H. Wright, D.D., of Liverpool, has been appointed Clerical and General Superintendent of the Protestant Reformation Society.

To promote "higher religious education" amongst Churchmen Rev. F. Teignmouth Shore is delivering a course of popular expository lectures in St. Mary's, Lewisham.

The Bishop of Liverpool has forbidden the vicar of St. Thomas's, in that city, to hear confession, except in the case of sick people who voluntarily chose to confess some burden which lay on their mind.

Captain Hanson, of the Church Army, has concluded an eight-days' mission in H.M. Prison, Lancaster, and Captain Spencer a similar mission in Ipswich Prison. It is believed that both missions will be productive of real, lasting good.

The Bishop of Bristol dedicated at the Cathedral, Bristol, last week, the "Bristol No. 1" Diocesan Church Army Mission and Colportage Van, which has been presented for work in the diocese by a gentleman in memory of his late wife.

Archdeacon Sinclair, preaching at Coventry, said he regretted that in our time regular churchgoers were only a minority of the congregations. The congregations needed stirring up to a warmth, an earnestness, and a zeal in Christianity.

Congregational.

Interesting meetings in connection with the L.M.S. were held in various Dundee churches on Saturday and Sunday last. On the latter evening there was a united missionary meeting in Ward Chapel, when missionaries from India, China, and New Guinea spoke.

At the recognition of Rev. John Eames at Eccleston-square Church, Dr. Horton said Mr. Eames was coming to London at a favourable moment—at a time when our Congregational churches had received an impulse from heaven, for undoubtedly in most parts of London there had come upon them a blessed visitation of the power of God.

Baptist.

A new church and Sunday-schools are to be erected at Walmer.

The Baptists at Portsea have celebrated the bi-centenary of the chapel founded in 1698, when they met in a barn on Portsmouth Common.

Rev. G. T. Howell, of China, gave a special address at Great Leighs on behalf of the Baptist Missionary Society. Mr. J. Herbert Tritton presided.

The new chapel of the London Baptist Association, to commemorate the presidency of Rev. W. R. Skerry, is now in the course of erection at Cranbrook-road, Ilford. The stone-laying took place on Tuesday last.

Rev. J. H. Shakespeare, having entered upon his new duties as secretary of the Baptist Union, is now installed at the Mission House, 19, Furnival-street. In an article from his pen, which appears in the current number of The Baptist Monthly, Mr. Shakespeare expresses his opinion that a forward movement by the Baptists is possible, and that the time for it has come; the only thing needed is to get at the ear and the heart of the Baptist people.

Methodist.

A medical mission has been organised at Hornsey-road Chapel by Rev. J. Sutcliffe Allen.

Rev. Robert Culley, Wesleyan Sunday-school secretary, estimates that the Sunday-schools will raise a quarter of a million for the Twentieth Century Fund.

Rev. Dr. Stephenson, founder of the Children's Home, having been ordered complete rest for six months, all his engagements for that period have been cancelled.

This week the Wesleyan Tweutieth Century Scheme is to be inangurated. Wesley's House in the City-road is also to be opened as a museum and residence for Christian workers.

The eleventh annual Junior Methodist Ministers' Convention, held in Londonderry last week, was a time of much blessing. Young ministers from all parts of the country were present.

An interesting conference on Sunday-school work has been held at Birmingham in connection with the Primitive Methodist body. Two hundred delegates were present, and many practical subjects were discussed.

At the invitation of Mr. and Mrs R. W. Booth, of Dublin, the Methodist soldiers in the Dublin garrison were entertained at tea last week in the schoolroom of St. Stephen's-green Church. A large number was present.

Rev. Owen S. Watkins, mentioned by the Sirdar in his despatches, along with other chaplains in the army in Egypt, for "unfailing and cheerful kindness to the sick and wounded at all times," will now probably proceed to Crete and resume the chaplain's duties there which he left to accompany the Nile expedition.

The Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church in conference at Springfield, Massachusetts, decided to call for a twentieth century thankoffering of £4,000,000 from the members of the Church, to be collected by January 1, 1901. The money will be devoted to the improvement of Methodist educational and charitable institutions.

The sum contributed to the Primitive Methodist Jubilee Thanksgiving Fund up to September 25 has been allocated to the several funds to be benefited by this connexional effort. The fund will not be finally closed till next conference. A sum of £11,400 is yet needed to make up the £50,000 originally aimed at, and efforts are being made to secure the balance before June, 1899.

An enthusiastic meeting was held last week in George's Hall, Dublin, to bid farewell to Dr. R. T. Booth, who sails in a few weeks as a medical missionary to Hankow, China. Dr. Booth, who has had a distinguished collegiate course, is going out as the first missionary of the Methodist Christian Endeavourers of Ireland. Felicitous valedictory addresses were also delivered by Revs. Dr. McMullen and Wesley Guard. It is hoped that Dr. Booth is only the first of several missionaries which the Irish Methodists in the near future shall send into the foreign field.

Society of Friends.

The damage caused by the desecration of the graves of the Penn family at Jordans proved not to be serious; the soil and grass have been replaced on the grave that was partially opened.

Thos. Newlin, of Oregon, Principal of the Friends' College there, is on a visit in its interests to Friends in this country. The institution he represents is doing good work, and is spoken of warmly by those who are acquainted with it. He was recently at the quarterly meeting at Kendal.

A minute has been published urging the avoidance of expressions that would wound a sensitive people like the French. It especially appeals to members of the Press to see that all their utterances should make for friendliness and brotherliness, believing that the mass of English people have nothing but goodwill for France.

Joseph G. Alexander has visited the continent. He attended the small Friends' meeting at the Depôt Central, Paris, and afterwards the McAll Mission. After taking part in the McAll boat missions on the river Yonne, he attended the Peace and Arbitration Conference in Turin, returned to France, and visited the Friends at Congenies and Fontanés.

Salvation Army.

The recently opened shelter for coloured men at Cape Town is filled nightly.

Rt. Hon. Cecil Rhodes has given another donation of £50 to the Kimberley Rescue Home.

During the impending winter it is intended to open a shelter in the Klondyke district.

Arrangements are being made to open the first shelter for Kaffirs in the native location near King William's Town.

The work in Florence has recently experienced a very blessed revival. Eighteen men and women publicly sought salvation at one service.

During the General's campaign in Holland he visited seven cities and conducted eighteen meetings, at which about 140 men and women came to the penitent form.

The Lord Mayor of Manchester has presided at the formal inauguration of Salvation Army rescue work in Manchester. The meeting took place in the Town Hall, in the presence of one of the largest gatherings that has been known to have assembled there on an afternoon.

Sir John Madden, of Victoria, Australia, says: "The governors of our jails, who, we think, ought to be able to form a very good opinion indeed on the subject, uniformly conclude their yearly report to the Government on the condition of the jails with a plain and hearty thanksgiving to the Salvation Army for the aid and assistance it has given them."

Presbyterian.

The United Presbyterian Church of Scotland have set apart November 22 to 29 as a week of special prayer for foreign missions.

An earnest call is made by the United Presbyterian Church for additional missionaries and teachers for work in Old Calabar. There is a great field for work and a splendid opportunity.

Fallen Asleep.

Mr. JAMES HAY, of Killyleagh, Ireland, a prominent Presbyterian.—Rev. CHARLES WAREING BARDSLEY, Hon. Canon of Carlisle, and formerly vicar of Ulverston.—Rev. JOSEPH FOSTER, vicar of Swinbrook, aged seventy-one.—Rev. THOMAS LANFEAR, vicar of Letcombe Regis for nearly thirty years, aged eighty-four.—Mr. THOS. HARRISON, of Telford, for many years a leading Wesleyan worker.—Mr. FRANCIS WOODMAS, an old and zealous Wesleyan local preacher of Houghton-le-Spring circuit.—Mrs. JOHN POWELL, superintendent of the Wesleyan Sunday-school at Staunton, Ledbury circuit.—Mr. THOMAS GROOM, a member of Emmanuel Congregational Church, Cambridge, for nearly half a century.—Rev. HERBERT CHARLES MOXON, recently assistant chaplain at St. George's, Cannes.—Rev. W. H. WHEELER, B.A., late vicar of BERROW.—Rev. ALEXANDER WILSON, prebendary of St. Paul's and vicar of Tottenham, in his eighty-fifth year.

☞ As it is found that infidels and others send papers to the persons whose names are inserted here, it is most desirable that all books and papers should be CAREFULLY ADDRESSED before being given away.

Workers are needed to help in visitation of the Holborn Infirmary, Archway-road, Highgate. Friends in the neighbourhood able to give their services in this direction on Sunday mornings should communicate with Mr. J. Leaver, 13, Pemberton-terrace, St. John's Park, Upper Holloway, N.

Croydon.—DEAR SIR,—Having lately had a most delightful convention in Croydon, we are anxious to retain the interest awakened if possible. We hear that in some places a monthly meeting has been successfully established. I shall be glad to know from any reader whether it has been found better to have such meeting in a specially hired room, or in the various churches and chapels of the town.

Clevedon, Addiscombe. GEO. BARLOW, Hon. Sec.

ITEMS OF INTEREST.

Home.

In 112 Welsh collieries where a ballot has been taken for the retention of Mabon's day, over 39,000 were in favour of the holiday.

The Lord Mayor's Fund for the relief of the distress in the West Indies has reached £41,000. An eighth remittance of £5000 has been forwarded.

The Admiralty have decided upon forming a Special Service Squadron of exceptional strength. It will assemble in Plymouth Sound at an early date.

In the Assembly Buildings, Belfast, the annual meeting of the Sabbath School Society has been held. The record of the year's work was most satisfactory.

Her Majesty is much pleased with the carpet made by the Armenian women of Hadjin, which was offered for the Queen's acceptance through the Duke of Westminster.

Grave doubts have been expressed by the Lord Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Wills, in the Queen's Bench, as to the legality of the sale of intoxicating drinks at the Palace of Westminster without a licence.

Considerable discussion is going on in Nonconformist circles in reference to the new Nonconformist Political Council, which is to hold its first conference in St. Martin's Town Hall on November 15. The opposition is being led by Professor Massie, of Oxford.

CHARITABLE CONTRIBUTIONS.—The late Mr. R. Ferguson has bequeathed £50 each to the Cumberland Infirmary at Carlisle, the Silloth Convalescent Institution, and the Carlisle Home for Incurables.—The late Mr. C. E. Blore bequeaths £1000 to Streatham Congregational Church, £100 each to the City Dispensary, the Royal Hospital for Incurables, the Brixton Orphanage, and Dr. Barnardo's Orphanage.

Foreign.

The French Cabinet crisis is over. M. Delcassé will remain Minister of Foreign Affairs.

At Hong Kong, Wei-Hai-Wei, Halifax, and Malta naval preparations are being energetically carried out.

Russian finance is in a very prosperous condition. The amount received for the financial year 1897 exceeding the estimates by 98,000,000 roubles.

A committee has been formed for the erection of a monument to Luther at Mansfield in the Hartz Mountains, the smallest town associated with the great reformer.

It is understood that the French Cabinet have decided to instruct Major Marchand to hand over the official buildings at Fashoda to the British and Egyptian forces.

The final settlement of the Philippines problem is expected to involve the retention of the islands by the United States, and the payment of the Philippines' debt of 40,000,000 dollars.

The German Emperor has presided at the consecration of the new Lutheran Church of the Redeemer at Jerusalem. He also visited the traditional scenes of Gospel interest in the locality.

Temperance Notes.

For 1899 the drink bill is estimated to be over £152,000,000, or about £3 16s. 5d. per head of the population.

The National Temperance League has issued an important letter, urging the need for the organisation of a "Close of the Century Congress" of the World's Temperance Workers during the year 1900.

An Antwerp paper, Le Matin, remarks on the prolonged drought in East London: "Happily the Londoner is a great enemy to water—as a beverage, be it understood. He prefers to replace it by whisky."

In furtherance of his crusade against the alliance between Christian Churches and the drink, Mr. Tennyson Smith has drawn up a form of pledge embodying the resolve to purify the Churches from complicity with the drink traffic. On the first two evenings of a mission at Gloucester nearly 400 persons signed this pledge.

Field-Marshal Lord Roberts, presiding at the annual meeting of the Army Temperance Association, claimed for the Association that it not only raised the moral status of our soldiers, and enabled them to perform their duties in a satisfactory manner while in the ranks, but it also assisted materially to obtain suitable employment for them when they returned to civil life.

Notes and Comments.

THE times call for the utmost vigilance and care on the part of all who wish to hold the truth in simplicity and sincerity Most Protestants perhaps would oppose the doctrine of a sacrifice in the communion on the ground that "Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many"; and ritualists like Lord Halifax would say, "No one denies that the offering of Himself is the one, only, true and acceptable sacrifice which makes satisfaction for the sins of the world." But his lordship, like all his school, holds that the so-called sacrifice on the altar, which can only be obtained by means of the offices of a priest, is the same as the sacrifice on Calvary. On one occasion he expressed himself thus—

It is the glory of the Eucharist that, through the instrumentality of the body and blood which He gave for the life of the world upon the cross, and which He still gives us under the veils of bread and wine in the sacrament of the altar, Jesus Christ perpetuates on our behalf, here below in the visible sanctuaries of his Church, the functions of his eternal priesthood: it is our dignity, and the glory of our consecration as a royal priesthood, that He has entrusted this offering of the sacrifice made on Calvary to human agencies, and that He permits it to depend upon us whether He, the great High Priest of our profession, shall be allowed to exercise his priestly functions at our altars or no.

A good deal of patient, discriminating teaching is required to counteract such insidious influences as these.

Talk about the questions of the day? There is but one question, and that is the Gospel. It can, and will, correct everything needing correction.

So said Mr. Gladstone on one occasion. And he was right. Questions, needs, dangers, sins, all spring out of the soil of human nature, and there is only one power that can touch human nature and improve it. Some "new need" only shows some new direction in which the Gospel must be made to operate. This way of speaking of the Gospel must not, however, be taken as an excuse for idle waiting, for the Gospel must be applied by living men to the needs of which they are conscious.

There can be no doubt that our conception of the needs of men, of our own needs, will always correspond to our conception of Jesus Christ and his work. If we only want a teacher, and an example and an ideal, we shall not require Him to be the only begotten Son of God. But if we need a sacrifice for our sins, a Saviour to save us from them, a Mediator between God and men, we shall feel that a mere man, no matter how good he is, cannot do all this for us; that we must have one whom we can call our Lord and our God Slight impressions of the evil of sin, a feeble desire for pardon and eternal life, a faint consciousness of our own moral helplessness, are always accompanied with low and derogatory views of our Lord's person and work. A true view of self will prepare for a true view of the glories of "the Saviour of the world."

Christian Union is finding practical illustration at Ipswich, where a curate has frequently taken part in Wesleyan services, and the vicar some time ago organised united prayer meetings, which are held in turn at the parish-room, the Wesleyan Schoolroom, and the Congregational Hall. The spiritual oneness of the mystical body of Christ is accentuated in services of this nature, and the spirit of brotherly love exhibited in such a manner as to unite more closely together those who hold the Evangelical Faith.

The conduct of the retiring mayor of Calne, Wilts, deserves recognition, because it illustrates a devotion to Christian principle too rarely met with. This official, Mr. W. A. Webb, is a deacon of Castle-street Baptist Chapel, superintendent of the Sunday-school, and hon. sec. of the Abstainers' Union. The customary course, on the Mayor's retirement would have been to provide a banquet, with champagne toasts, for the town officials and dignitaries. Instead of this Mr. Webb followed the Scriptural method of inviting the poor, the maimed, the lame, and the blind. There being no blind, however, in the town, the others were invited guests at the Town Hall. A suitable banquet was spread before them, and music followed by the Mayor's daughters, and addresses were given by friends who were interested in this new departure. A noble example has been set that may be emulated without any detraction from the dignity of the civic office.

A recently-discovered document, in the form of a certificate to a minister ordained by John Wesley, sets at rest the question whether the founder of Methodism believed or not in the validity of an ordination by other than episcopal hands. The sacerdotal party in the Anglican Church are never tired of asserting that on this point John Wesley continued a "loyal member of the Church" to his death, and this assertion has been disseminated widely by them in the form of tracts among rural Methodists, to their great perplexity. The following is the text of the document, with the unmistakable signature of John Wesley at the foot :—

Know all men by these Presents, that I, John Wesley, Master of Arts, late of Lincoln College in the University of Oxford, did on the third Day of August in the Year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and eighty-eight, by the Imposition of my Hands and Prayer, and in the fear of God, set apart Thomas Owens for the Office of a Deacon in the Church of God. Given under my Hand and Seal, the 10th Day of August in the Year above written.—John Wesley.

Not a moment too soon has a strong, authoritative voice spoken out on the frauds connected in so many instances with the formation of limited liability companies. The Official Receiver estimates that in seven years—1891 1897—twenty-eight millions sterling have been stolen from the public by fraudulent promoters of companies compulsorily wound up. The Lord Chief Justice of England, in receiving the Lord Mayor on his appointment to office, took the opportunity of calling his attention to a class of fraud which is rampant in this community—fraud of a most dangerous kind, widespread in its operation—touching all classes, involving great pecuniary loss to the community—a loss largely borne by those the least able to bear it—and even more important, much more important than this fraud which is working insidiously to undermine and corrupt that high sense of public morality which it ought to be the common object of all interested in the good of the community to maintain—fraud blunting the sharp edge of honour and besmirching honourable names. I need not tell you I am alluding to the frauds practised in abuse of the law relating to the formation of companies with limited liabilities.

His lordship would like such rogues ostracised by honourable men in the business world, and the law that deals with their crimes made more stringent. The Church also has her plain duty—to preach and testify against covetousness.

Efforts are being made for the more religiou observance of the Lord's Day in Germany. The Continental Sunday is not on its trial; it is about to be greatly modified, and for the better. New laws are constantly being made, prescribing what shall and what shall not be done on Sundays. As yet, however, theatres and concerts have not been interfered with by the authorities. A most remarkable Bill is, however, to be laid before the local Parliament of the Duchy of Brunswick. It provides that at three o'clock in the afternoon on Sundays and festivals all musical and theatrical performances, all races, all pleasure parties, all games, including skating, all parties and gatherings in private houses and gardens which disturb the peace of the Sabbath must cease.

Fishing on Sunday afternoons and evenings is also forbidden. Whether these prescriptions will become law is, of course problematical. Still, a decided tendency among the authorities to restrict Sunday amusements and work prevails. This is good so far as it goes, but it will need the mighty working of God's silent spirit in individual hearts, when law has done its best, to create new creatures in Christ Jesus.

The Licensing Committee of the County Council have done well, so far as it goes, in refusing the licences of certain music-halls, and in declining the use of the Queen's Hall and the Alhambra for Sunday concerts "for the sake of private gain or the purposes of trade." The hollow pretence that these concerts were held in the interests of the public, when all but about thirty seats at the end of the Queen's Hall were charged for, has received its final exposure, and, unless the Council reverses the decision of its committee, is not likely to be raised again. Some of the daily newspapers are scornful of the attitude of the committee, on the ground that the Lord's Day Observance Act is a century old, and "is out of keeping with the spirit of the times." It is a new plea that a statute is obsolete simply because of its age, especially when it has worked as well as this has done. How about Magna Charta!

The County Council will also command the sympathy of all true citizens in the plan just promulgated regarding the better housing of the working classes. There is no more pressing social problem, and none that has more serious moral and spiritual consequences. It is their purpose to sweep away gradually all the over-crowded courts and slums, and provide the same amount of accommodation somewhere in the county of London, so that the dispossessed inhabitants will not be sent on the streets to form other over-congested districts near by. This great scheme will not be easy to carry out. What will ensure its success will be a determined public opinion behind the reform, which will be conducive to the physical, social, and moral welfare of all concerned.

The verdict of manslaughter brought against two women for neglecting to provide medical aid for the late Mr. Harold Frederic, so causing his death, will bring home to the community the perilous aspects of the so-called Christian Science which has recently been imported from America. This is the latest of those "substitutes for Christianity" which ever come and go like fungi, flourishing for a brief period only to be superseded by some other new-fangled and dangerous error. Their existence shows that when true faith has been given up, credulity is ever prone to usurp its place, to the grievous loss and detriment to the welfare of its victims. Superstition has been called the child of religion; it is rather the shadow which earnest and intelligent faith helps to dispel, and the darkness that succeeds its eclipse.

At the Chester Diocesan Conference, Rev Hilton Stewart, of New Brighton, said:—

> Isaiah, for instance, is read with the same intonation and with the same lack of expression as the Gospels; smaller words are raced over, breath is taken in the wrong place, to say nothing of wrong accentuation; and the laity say with truth—as he heard it said the other day—that the parsons read the lessons as if they had never come across them in the Bible before, or as if they thought that Bible-reading were the least important feature in the Church Service.

The same complaint applies to many Nonconformist ministers. No part of a religious service is more helpful than an intelligent and careful reading of God's Word. Of all books the Bible needs devout study before it is read in public. The mind of the writer or speaker is not caught in a hasty haphazard selection of a chapter. It is with reverence, as a revelation from God, that the book should be opened.

The Bishop of Liverpool's utterances on the question of Ritualism form a refreshing contrast to those of most of his fellow-Bishops, and in his recent diocesan address he did not spare those who are doing their best to unprotestantise the Church of England, and to "assimilate its worship as far as possible to the gaudy and sensuous worship of Popery." He claimed what is surely the unquestionable truth, that of the meaning of the vestments and ceremonies of the High Church clergy, the average worshipper knows little and cares less. Herein is one of the perils of the situation. It is easy for those who think that these extravagances of dress and form are mere questions of a more or less ornate worship to prefer toleration to resistance; but if they realised the symbolical meaning of every detail of these sacerdotal services, and that behind the forms is a whole system of dangerous doctrine, they would speedily put an end to them. Under these circumstances, it is of the utmost importance that intelligent Episcopalians should really study the subject, and not let the issue go by default, as in the case at present.

The fact that Liverpool has long been favoured with an Evangelical bishop seems to have had a distinct effect upon the religious faith and life of the city. The Liverpool Daily Post has lately taken a religious census of the city, and finds that the High Anglican party has a very small following, only some 4335 persons at the evening service, whereas some 95,000 persons were found in the rest of the places of worship at the same hour. The number of sittings in ritualistic places of worship in Liverpool is 9000, out of a total of 200,000. Protestantism may there be said to hold its ground, but, for all that, it seems passing strange that in a land which has been its citadel we should have taken to counting heads. No doubt different places would yield different results, and very likely one of the worst from the Protestant point of view, would be London; but London, unfortunately, never leads in any but reactionary measures. We often have to look to the provinces to maintain our best national traditions, and to lead us upward to better things.

The Church Times is greatly exercised over the difficulty that is being experienced by translators of sacerdotal formulæ into Chinese to find suitable terms in the vernacular for the "three orders of the ministry." It laments the fact that

> There is a strong desire among missionaries in China [prevailingly of the C.M.S.] to exclude the word "priest" from translations of the Prayer-book in favour of some more or less satisfactory equivalent for presbuteros.

The friends of evangelical religion will be glad that this is so, for it means the preservation of New Testament conceptions in their purity. Our contemporary, indeed, claims that "the sacerdotal idea has its roots struck deep in the New Testament writings," but it is forced to confess that it is not till two or three generations after that of the apostles that we "find a sacerdotal terminology in full possession." That is to say, these terms do not appear till Christianity had been in the world long enough to become contaminated by heathen associations.

The assertion that the sacerdotal idea is deeply rooted in the New Testament is surely astonishingly inaccurate. It is altogether foreign to the teachings and practice of Jesus Christ, and is distinctly disclaimed by St. Paul in the Epistle to the Galatians, which was written expressly to expose and denounce the budding sacerdotal heresy of the Churches of Asia Minor. In the Epistle to the Hebrews we have an elaborate argument, proving how the older Jewish ideas of the orders of priesthood were superseded by the Great High Priesthood of Christ. And, finally, we have the announcement in 1 Peter of the equal and universal priesthood and kingship of all true believers. Nowhere do we find formulated, or even hinted, the "exclusive" orders of the ministry. This was a late outgrowth of the second century, read into the revealed Word, and grafted into the church system by men who had been (so far) imperfectly converted from their old heathen and Jewish notions.

It is matter for much gratification that in the American State elections the Tammany candidate for the New York State has been defeated, and that the corruption for which that word stands has received so decided a condemnation. The efficacy of the new law providing for the presence of special deputies at the polling booths to prevent illegal voting was very marked, numerous arrests being made. The New York police and the deputies worked together harmoniously to uphold the law and preserve order. We trust that this is a return to the appreciation, by the electorate in the great American capital, of that righteousness which exalteth a nation. Nothing but the high moral principles of integrity and honour, the outcome of true religious conviction, can in the long run satisfy the best instincts of a community.

The Premier's speech at the Guildhall banquet on Lord Mayor's Day was reassuring as to the immediate relationships of the Empire to foreign Powers, but by no means optimistic as to future contingencies. We are made to feel that we do not enjoy the confidence of our neighbours. The one decidedly hopeful sign is the deepening sense of friendship with America, of which fresh proofs are constantly coming to hand. This is a fact that must tell for prosperity and brotherhood all over the world. The interests of the two great nations on the opposite shores of the Atlantic are all on the side of peace. In the bringing about of this new feeling of unity the Churches have considerably led the way, and it is to them we must look for the uplifting of the sentiment into something better than a mere military alliance. The task has been entrusted to us of taking the van in civilising and Christianising the world. It is only as we keep these supreme ends in view that we shall make the solidarity of the English-speaking peoples a permanent blessing to the whole world.

We think that justice has hardly been done by the Press to the language of Lord Salisbury on the Czar's Eirenicon, which was not so cold and chilling as some seem to believe.

> I offer the most hearty tribute to the motives by which that has been dictated. I admire the character which could have produced it, and, as far as assistance or sympathy from us can help him in the task he has undertaken, that sympathy and assistance is entirely at his disposal. In some respects the era of these great propositions—which I think will be an epoch in the history of war—has been marked by unhappy omens.

We may allow that the "omens" amid which this great document was launched were "unhappy"; but truth is not dependent on these things. It may turn out in the long run that they have been made to work in its favour. But at this stage of the development of the question, what could the Prime Minister have said stronger than that he thought the Rescript will be "an epoch in the history of war"?

The following telegram through Reuter's Agency gives one of the incidental results of the recent victory at Omdurman:—

> The first British missionaries to work in the Soudan since 1875 will leave London next week viâ Marseilles. The party will, on its arrival, be in charge of Dr. F. J. Harpur, the C.M.S. senior medical missionary in Egypt, who is now in Cairo. Those who are leaving England are Rev. R. Sterling, M.B., who has been lately working in Palestine, and Rev. Douglas M. Thornton, of Cambridge.

The promptitude with which the opportunity of evangelising the Soudan has been seized by the C.M.S. is delightful. Usually, the soldier has followed the heels of the missionary in Africa; in this case the process is reversed. It is doubtful whether the soldier or the missionary has the harder task. The Mohammedan fanaticism which for fifteen years resisted the British military power will probably be no less stubborn to resist the appeal of the Gospel. But the goal aimed at is most glorious, and the ultimate result will be no less sure.

The Fashoda incident offers a striking parallel to the spiritual life. Men who have suffered their hearts to be overrun by the forces of worldliness and sin, and who break away from their evil ways, are apt to find more enemies in possession than they had suspected. Once we surrender the sovereignty of the soul, it becomes the hunting-ground of any wandering influence, and openings are given to the chance tyranny of evils, of whose existence and power we are unaware till we try to drive them forth. Nothing but constant and earnest watchfulness suffices for the complete isolation of the soul from evil.

HOW TO PROMOTE REVIVAL.

"I will meditate also of all THY work, and talk of THY doings."—Psa. lxxvii. 12.

WE cannot get up a Revival, but we may help to bring it down. To remember and to recount the works of the Lord and his wonders of old makes us receptive, and leads to Revival. God always gives when we are ready to receive.

The first effect of the outpouring of the Spirit at Pentecost was that as the Spirit gave them utterance they spake the wonderful works of God; for from the days of Moses it had been commanded:

Take heed to thyself and keep thy soul diligently, lest thou forget the things which thine eyes have seen, and lest they depart from thy heart all the days of thy life: but teach them thy sons and thy sons' sons...that they may learn to fear Me all the days that they shall live upon the earth, and that they may teach their children.

In accordance with this is the preface of Psalm lxxviii., "A Psalm for Asaph, to give instruction," in which he recounts the wonderful works of God:

1 Give ear, O my people, to my law:
Incline your ears to the words of my mouth.
2 I will open my mouth in a parable;
I will utter dark sayings of old:
3 Which we have heard and known,
And our fathers have told us.
4 We will not hide them from their children,
Telling to the generation to come the praises of the LORD,
And his strength, and his wondrous works that He hath done.
5 For He established a testimony in Jacob,
And appointed a law in Israel,
Which He commanded our fathers.
That they should make them known to their children:
6 That the generation to come might know them, even the children which should be born;
Who should arise and tell them to their children:
7 That they might set their hope in God,
And not forget the works of God,
But keep his commandments:
8 And might not be as their fathers,
A stubborn and rebellious generation
A generation that set not their heart aright,
And whose spirit was not stedfast with God.

It is, therefore, evident that God wills to have his wonderful works remembered and recounted for his own glory and for the good of men. His people of old were to teach them diligently to their children at all times and in all places. And not without result, for once and again it is said:

When your children shall say unto you, What mean ye by this service?
When thy son asketh thee in time to come, What is this?
When thy son asketh thee in time to come, saying, What mean the testimonies, and the statutes, and the judgments which the Lord our God hath commanded you?
When your children ask their fathers in time to come, What mean ye by these stones?

And the children are exhorted continually to remember past history, and seek information concerning it:

Remember the days of old; consider the years of many generations. Ask thy father, and he will show thee; thine elders, and they will tell thee.

There is no saying how much we have lost by forgetting these instructions. Our most meditative poet, Wordsworth, wrote:—

The child is father of the man,
And I would wish my days to be Bound each to each by natural piety.

We speak of the solidarity of the race; we need no less to think of the continuity of the race, and primarily of the solidarity and continuity of our own individual life. Whether we perceive it or not, the years of man's many generations, and the days of every individual, are bound each to each by the working out of God's eternal purpose.

There is no piety so natural as the observing, remembering, and recounting, of the praises of Jehovah, and his strength, and the wonderful works that He hath done. Our life may be a rope of sand as far as our own experience is concerned, each grain independent of the rest; or each day and hour may be knit together by observing how all things are working together for good to them that love God, to them who are called according to his purpose. And this is no less true of the history of God's created universe, from the fall of the Shining One out of heaven, and his temptation and overthrow of man, to his own overthrow and the delivery, by the Man Christ Jesus, of the recovered Kingdom, to God even the Father, that God may be all in all.

It may be humility to refrain from speaking of what we have done; but it is disobedience to refrain from speaking of what God has done.

There is no such "higher education" as teaching our children his wondrous works. There is no such effective way of winning their souls for God. There is no way so certain to begin and continue a Revival as remembering the years of the right hand of the Most High. M.

Relief for Tired Hearts.

By Rev. T. L. CUYLER, D.D.

ALL around us are multitudes of tired people. They are tired out with bearing the heat and burden of toilsome days. Some carry a great load of care as to how they shall make both ends meet, and discharge the bills for life's necessities. Others are worn out with anxieties about the morrow, and what it shall bring with it. A burden of spiritual discouragement weighs down Mr. "Despondency," and Brother "Fearing," and Mrs. "Little-Faith." Another has grown weary of waiting for success in his labours, and is tempted to throw down his seed-bag and sickle in utter despair. Others still are weary of waiting for hoped-for answers to prayer.

Is there no relief for all these tired and burdened hearts? Yes, if they will but hear and heed what their loving Master has to say to them. To the Christian with scanty purse He says, "Your life consisteth not in the abundance of things a man hath." "I counsel thee to buy of Me gold tried in the fire that thou mayst be rich." Only think how rich anyone is who has a clear conscience here and the assurance of heaven hereafter!

To the desponding, Jesus says: "Fear not, little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." To those who are getting tired of waiting for results, his message is, "Be not weary in well doing; in due season ye shall reap if ye faint not." There is a wonderful in this single golden assurance, "Lo, I am with you alway"; it is a tonic that ought to put fresh iron into the blood.

The most common cause of weariness is the attempt to carry an overload of care. And this is not always a wise forethought for the future or a proper providence for life's "rainy days." It is sheer worry. The Master's word for such overloaded Christians, who toil along like jaded pack-horses, is this: "Take no anxious thought for the morrow." "Cast thy burden upon the Lord, and He shall sustain thee." If you will only drop everything that is superfluous and sinful, He will enable you to carry the legitimate load. When He bids you cast your care on Him, it is added, "For He careth for you." The literal meaning of that tonic text is, "For He has you on his heart." The infinite God who rules the universe has poor little sinful you and me on his heart! Our big loads are not a feather to Him. He knoweth our frame; He remembers that we are but dust. Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth us poor weaklings. He says to us, "Give me your burdens." He who guarded the infant Moses among the river reeds, and supplied the widow's waning cruse of oil, who watched over sleeping Peter in the dungeon, and piloted Paul through roaring tempests—He it is who says to us, "Roll your anxieties over on Me; I have you on my heart." How foolish we are when we and determine that nobody shall carry it but ourselves!

When God says to us in effect, "Give Me your load," He does not release us from our share of duty, or of personal responsibility. No more does our atoning Saviour, when He bore the guilt and penalty of our sins, release us from repentance of those sins, or from obedience to his commandments. God's offer is to lighten our loads by putting his grace into our hearts, and so underneath the load. He supplies strength. His all-sufficient grace is made perfect in our weakness, so that God becomes the chief bearer of our burdens. It was the Christ in Paul who bore up under toils and persecutions—who defied Nero, and conquered the powers of darkness. This divine doctrine of trust is a wonderful relief and rest to weary believers.

IT TAKES THE TIRE OUT of the soul, as the mother's bosom takes the weariness out of the child when it comes in and lays its head down there for repose.

Remember that it is not honest work that wears many sensible Christians out; that is, those who have sense enough to obey the laws of health, and know their own limitations. It is the ague-fit of worry that consumes strength, and furrows cheeks, and frets the nerves, and often abridges life itself. That old athlete who drew the Gospel-chariot from Jerusalem through Asia Minor and Greece, and finally to the gates of Rome, who had the care of all the churches on his great stout heart, never complains, in all of his epistles, of being tired. He was doing his Master's work, and left results in his Master's hands. He knew whom he believed, and whom he was serving; by patient waiting on God he renewed his strength, so that he could run without getting weary, and could walk without ever fainting. You have a perfect right to ask God for strength equal to the day, but no right to ask Him for one ounce of strength for to-morrow's toils, or trials, or temptations. It is to-morrow piled on top of to-day that is tiring you out. A Christian's faith and his good common-sense should always harmonise.

The Evangelical Alliance.—In our report of the opening meeting of the Alliance Conference at Brighton, it appears that we somewhat misinterpreted some remarks by the president of the meeting, Captain Bingham. His main contention was that if those who agree on the fundamental truths of the Christian faith could not co-operate in supporting certain societies which are on an undenominational basis, such as the Bible Society and others, it was a farce to talk of Christian reunion.

Sunday at the Museums.—The Rev. Dr. Peake, secretary of the Lord's Day Observance Society, writes to point out that those advocates of the Sunday opening of museums who favour providing shelter in this way on wet Sunday afternoons will find small encouragement in the figures supplied by the hon. secretary of the Sunday Society. The attendances which he reports this year "on a thoroughly wet afternoon," may be compared with those which he gave for the corresponding Sunday of last year. In 1897 they reached an aggregate total of 12,228; in 1898 they were only 6,023.

A Protestant Library.

AN Evangelical and Protestant Free Lending Library has been founded in the village of Thornbury, Gloucestershire, by a local gentleman of well-known Christian principles, Mr. James Spencer Palmer. In a circular-letter announcing his project, Mr. Palmer says:—

That we are passing through a very serious crisis in our national history appears to me to admit of no doubt whatever, and that is my apology, if any be needed, for my present course of action. I may say that I have studied what is termed the Ritualistic Question more or less for the past thirty years, and I have seen nothing during that time to alter my conviction—on the contrary, it has been materially strengthened—that what really prompted "The Oxford Movement" was an attempt on the part of the Church of Rome to regain the position in this country which was lost to her at the time of the Reformation. Is it not more than probable that what Rome failed to do in the past by force, it would seek to accomplish by finesse, in which it has ever proved itself a cunning adept?

Let those who doubt this, study Mr. Walter Walsh's book, "The Secret History of the Oxford Movement," and see if they can disprove the facts which he brings forward in evidence of this very thing. It is there very clearly shown that the efforts of Rome have hitherto been, alas! all too successful; and why? Because it has enlisted on its side not only the open among the English clergy, but also a large number of the rank and file of the English people, including, it is to be feared, many godly souls from whom better things might have been expected, who, led away by false charity in themselves, and jesuitical sophistries on the part of others, have unconsciously helped on what they must now see to be a fearful evil of gigantic growth.

The people of England have at last been aroused from their seeming lethargy and are looking facts in the face. At such a time, with the public interest awakened, a book like Mr. Walsh's is of incalculable value. Written with studied moderation, and bristling with undeniable facts and indisputable evidence, it cannot fail to carry conviction to independent minds seeking to know the truth on the matter. When the existence of an evil is known, the person in possession of that knowledge is under a solemn responsibility to God to utter the needful word of warning to those around him; and, further, he is sadly wanting in true Christian love and charity if he fails to do so, let the consequences be to him what they may. The man who tries to please everybody in order that his own path may be smooth, and his worldly interests advanced, frequently winds up by pleasing nobody, while he certainly does not please God, unto whom we are exhorted to study to show ourselves approved.

Do the people of England, Bible-flooded, privileged England, fully realise what it is many of them are welcoming back as fast as possible? I trow not. Only a few days back a clergyman of the Church of England said to me, "Half the people that are taken up with modern Ritualism do not know

WHAT ROMANISM REALLY IS."

This is perfectly true, and therefore they cannot see the connection between the two; and even if they did, there is reason to fear that many would not be much concerned; for indifference, alas! characterises a large portion of the community, and before people can know what error is they must know what truth is.

Error of every kind can only be successfully met by the sword of the Spirit which is the Word of God, and modern misty views of the inspiration and authority of the Scriptures are powerless against it. The spiritual warriors of former days, such as Wesley, Whitefield, and others, were men of power, men who believed God, and who went forth in the calm consciousness of the truth of his unerring Word. But things are uttered nowadays, enough, as a friend of mine has remarked, to make Wesley and Whitefield "turn in their graves." Of what use are persons who are not themselves assured of the inspiration and authority of the Word of God to go forth to battle against the enemy? As well might we import into the British army a shoal of jelly-fishes, and expect it to stand its ground against a stern and relentless foe. It is a remarkable fact, too, that modern Ritualism is closely connected with Rationalism. Readers of Essays and Reviews and Lux Mundi will not need much argument from me to be be convinced of that.

Decay of "Experimental Religion."

IN a letter on this subject to The Times of Nov. 9, Sir E. R. Russell, editor of The Liverpool Post, says:—

Comprehensive and particular as the correspondence in your columns on the present state of the Church has been, I have not found expressed in it a view which I feel to be important and which I crave permission to state. A larger proportion of Anglicans than for many centuries past believe that an important miracle took place at their baptism, when they were incapable of conscious spiritual sensation; that a miracle takes place every time the elements are consecrated in the Lord's Supper; that for anything they know this miracle may be partly physical; that although they cannot, and would rather not, say what the miracle is—and for legal reasons are quite clear that it is not transubstantiation—their vague sense of it has something to do with their reverence for the rite, and with their proper reception of Communion; that the miracle partly depends on the due and regular episcopal ordination of the priest who consecrates; that their spiritual health largely depends on the sacrament thus understood and secured—much more largely than on the spiritual cultivation of their minds and hearts by original meditation and prayer; and many have advanced so far in the sacerdotal direction that this is their mood.

Instead of that

which was the idea of the old Evangelicals, and instead of keeping up their religiousness by Bible reading and other sustaining spiritual exercises, they cannot feel sure of themselves without frequent confession and absolution. They speak on this subject as if their religious ideal was intermittent sin and sufficiently frequent sacerdotal clean-slating; and they speak thus in the most sincerely pious manner, without any perception either of the lowness of spiritual tone in this mood, or of its liability to be regarded with grim amusement by all who have a sense of humour.

No such change has occurred in Scotland—though very important changes have taken place there. No such change has occurred among Irish Protestants, who, so far as I know, have not changed at all. But whereas in 1830 there was no material difference between the religion of England, Scotland, and the Protestants of Ireland, the religion of Anglicans at the end of the century is essentially different in and, therefore, I am almost inclined to say, in essence, from Orthodox Nonconformist, Presbyterian, and Irish Church religion. Even opponents of sacerdotalism give no consideration to the place which the Evangelicism of Scott the Commentator, of Romaine, of John Newton, of Daniel Wilson, of Simeon, and (coming later) of Baptist Noel, the Sumners, Dallas, Goodhart, and Montague Villiers, took, as they thought for ever, in the structure of the Church's spiritual operation.

Admiration of the zeal of the Ritualists among the poor is the greatest protection that they enjoy. But let us realise that according to the diction and meaning of religious matters from the time of Law, and Wesley, and Wilberforce, down to the Puseyite triumph—and even now according to the locutions of English experimental religion as it is understood among the populace in England, America, and the Colonies—by these zealous, charitable, stimulating, and inspiring clergy, by all their efforts and all their rites, for the salvation of their people's souls. The processes are different from those that used to be deemed vitally essential. That realises to us the great change in religion at its very base, so far as the individual is concerned, that has taken place under the influence of the Catholic revival.

Either experimental, as distinguished from sacramental, religion will, under the influence of the Primate's charge, be abandoned by the minority who still cherish it, or these Anglicans will be disposed to become Nonconformists, as will other Churchmen, from hostility to anything Roman. Others who hate sacerdotal doctrine just as much, and who are superior to the desire to stay in the Church for mere social status, will yet see good reason to remain in the national Establishment, but they will be apathetic and somewhat contemptuous members.

Fifty years ago a religious man used to mean a man living in constant concern, introspection, and self-examination on points and shades of his own spiritual condition and experience. This described the average religious man.

THE HIGHER TYPE OF THE RELIGIOUS MAN

was the man calm, serene, and rejoicing in his religion; and many of us, if we cast our minds back, are able to remember men, especially among the Evangelical clergy, in whom this type was, I may almost say, celestially exemplified. It is now possible to be a religious man—at far less expenditure of mind, with much less—and perhaps no—spiritual experience, and in a comparatively coarse sphere of mental exercise. The religious person now in the Church of England is usually a person whose experiences of feeling both in thoughts at odd times and at services are entirely elementary; who considers that he or she may legitimately be quite happy if concrete sin has not been committed, or has been confessed and clean-slated, and rites have been observed; and whose active religious thought at its best is a mere polemical interest in highly esteeming everything sacerdotal, and despising every other form of religious occupation or observation.

In the course of a reply to the above, Rev. A. E. Barnes-Lawrence writes:—"Experimental religion" is not the privilege of any one school in the Church, and as a consequence the Evangelicals and their work are overshadowed and apt to be overlooked. But they are not "dead"! Sir Edward Russell himself must be sorely puzzled to explain how a party that is dead can contribute £300,000 a year to one only of its many missionary societies, and send forth an ever-increasing stream of its sons and daughters to the mission field, besides maintaining a vast number of religious and philanthropic institutions for home needs. Nor can he have sufficiently weighed the solid fact that yearly 3000 or 4000 educated persons, mostly Church people, gather for a week at Keswick, not to picnic, but simply for the deepening of that experimental religion which he deems so nearly extinct. Could Simeon or Carus see the Keswick and numerous similar conventions, he would exclaim, "What hath God wrought!" Fifty-two years ago Daniel Wilson could gather thirty or forty Evangelical clergymen to the Islington clerical meeting. This year it numbered 750, mostly younger men.

How Long?

God's beautiful earth is a-weary;
  She sighs for her Sabbath of rest;
Her children each day in their thousands
  Sink down on her pitiful breast.
She curtains them from the daylight,
  And shelters them safe from the strife;
And hushes to slumber the hearts without number
  That break in the battle of life.

God's beautiful earth is a-weary:
  Her cry goeth upward—"How long?
How long ere the midnight of weeping
  Be lost in the morning of song?
How long ere the strife and the discord,
  The grief and the struggle, shall cease,
And the nations shall meet at the crucified feet
  Of the glorious 'Prince of Peace'?"

How long? There is One who knoweth;
  And the signs that gather and throng
Speak, clarion-like, his answer
  To his listening Church—"Not long!"
Not long ere the voice of the Highest Shall hush all the discord and strife,
And call from death's slumber the hearts without number
  That broke in the battle of life.

Martyrs' Messages.

(From Letters Written while Awaiting Martyrdom.)

A SAFE RESIGNATION.

I COMMIT my cause unto Christ, the righteous and just Judge, who will, another day, judge these debates and controversies; whom I humbly beseech to cast his tender and merciful eyes upon the afflicted and ruined churches, and shortly to reduce them into a godly and perpetual concord.—Robert Samuel (1555).

A TIMELY PRAYER.

For God's sake beware of Popery: for though it appear to have in it unity, yet the same is in vanity and anti-Christianity, and not in Christ's faith and verity. The Lord grant all men his good and holy Spirit, increase of his wisdom, increase of contemning the wicked world, increase of desiring heartily to be with God and the heavenly company through Christ Jesus.—Rowland Taylor (1555).

BY WAY OF REMEMBRANCE.

Now is the time of trial, to see whether we fear more God or man. It was an easy thing to hold with Christ while the prince and world held with Him; but now that the world hateth Him is the true trial who be his. Wherefore in the name and in the virtue, strength, and power of his Holy Spirit, prepare yourself in any case to adversity and constancy. Let us not run away when it is most time to fight. Remember that none shall be crowned but such as fight manfully, and he that endureth unto the end shall be saved.—Bishop Hooper (1555).

A SIGHT FOR TEARS.

It is a lamentable thing to behold at this present in England the faithless departing both of men and women from the true knowledge and use of Christ's sincere religion, which so plentifully they have been taught and do know, their own consciences bearing witness to the verity thereof. If that earth be cursed of God which, continually receiving moisture and pleasant dews from heaven, doth not bring forth fruit accordingly, how much more grievous judgment shall such persons receive which, having received from the Father of heaven the perfect knowledge of his Word by the ministry thereof, do not show forth God's worship after the same?—John Philpot (1557).

PRAY, PRAY, PRAY!

My dear wife, riches I have none to leave behind me, wherewith to endow you after the worldly manner: but that treasure of tasting how sweet Christ is unto hungry consciences (whereof, I thank my Christ, I do feel part, and would feel more) I bequeath unto you and to the rest of my friends. To all you that love me in the Lord, I say, retain the same feeling of heart always—pray, pray! I am merry, and I trust shall be merry, in spite of all the devils in hell. I utterly renounce myself, and I resign myself wholly unto my Christ, in whom I know I shall be strong as He seeth needful. Pray, pray, pray!—Laurence Saunders (1555).

COMFORT AND COMPANY.

It is much better for me to die in Christ's quarrel and to reign with Him, than to be shut up and kept in the prison of this body, unless it were to continue yet awhile in this warfare for the benefit and profit of my brethren, and the further advancing of God's glory. . . The true Comforter in all distress is God alone, through his Son Jesus Christ. Whosoever hath Him hath company enough, although he were in a wilderness all alone; and he that hath twenty thousand in his company, if God be absent, is in a miserable wilderness and desolation. In Him is all comfort, and without Him is none.—Archbishop Cranmer (1556).

THE CASE OF THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Let us pray that God would have mercy on his Church of England; that yet once, when it shall be his good pleasure, it may clearly see and greedily embrace, in the faith of Jesus Christ, the will of the Heavenly Father; and that, of his infinite mercy, He would either turn to Him the raging and ravening wolves, and most subtle seducers of his people, which are by them altogether spoiled and bewitched; or that, of his most righteous judgment, He would drive these faithless feeders from his flock, that they may no more be able to trouble, and scatter abroad Christ's sheep from their shepherd—and that speedily. And let everyone that hath the Spirit (as St. John saith) say, Amen.—Bishop Ridley (1555).

HEAR THE WORD!

My dearly beloved, hearken to the Word. It alloweth no massing, no such sacrificing, nor worshipping of Christ with tapers, candles, topes, canopies, etc. It alloweth no Latin service, no images in the temples, no praying to saints dead, no praying for the dead. It alloweth no such dissimulation as a great many use now outwardly. It alloweth not the love of this world, which maketh men to do many things against their consciences, for in them that love the world the love of God abideth not. It alloweth no gatherers elsewhere than with Christ; but saith of others that they scatter abroad. It alloweth no lukewarm gentlemen; but if God be God then follow Him, if Baal and a piece of bread be God, then follow it. It alloweth not faith in the heart that hath not confession in the mouth. It alloweth no disciples that will not deny themselves, that will not take up their cross and follow Christ.—John Bradford (1555).

The British Chautauqua.

THE British Chautauqua, although only started four years ago, bids fair to compete in interest, if not in numbers, with the sister society in America. Four Summer Schools have been held, three in Wales and one in Scotland. These have been attended by many Sunday-school teachers and Christian workers, who unanimously agree that no more pleasant way of spending a summer holiday has yet been devised.

It has been one of the charms of the Summer School that the lecturers have mingled freely with the members; and many will remember the inspiring words spoken and lessons given, as well as the sparkling wit and amusing anecdote, which circulated as members gathered in little groups on mountain side or by the sea. The seasons of prayer and fellowship, the instructive lectures, the stirring addresses, left lasting impressions. The Summer Schools are intended as a stimulus and an inducement to serious practical study, and for this the Chautauqua course provides. Taken as a whole, the scheme provides a three-years' course, each year's study being tested by an examination—preliminary, intermediate, and final.

This being the third year of the Society's operations, there are now students reading for each of the three examinations. The text-books for the present year are: For the preliminary examination—"When were our Gospels written?" by Tischendorf; "The Ministry of the Lord Jesus," by Rev. Thos. G. Selby. For the intermediate examination—"The Books of the Prophets in the Historical Succession," vol. i., by Professor G. G. Findlay; "Landmarks of Church History," by Professor Cowan. For the final examination—"The Credentials of the Gospel," by Professor Agar Beet; "The Work of the Holy Spirit," by Professor Candlish. The examinations will take place in March and June next.

At the Edinburgh assembly, held in August last, it was determined to make a more vigorous effort to increase the usefulness of the Society, and Mrs. Benham, a lady known throughout the kingdom for her interest and energy in the Sunday-school cause, was appointed organising secretary. Under Mrs. Benham's supervision, and with her assistance, Chautauqua circles are being formed all over the country, for mutual help in the study of the text-books.

A programme of lectures and meetings for social intercourse is being arranged for the winter months; and this new departure will doubtless add largely to the influence which the British Chautauqua already exercises among Sunday-school teachers and Christian workers in general. Mrs. Benham's address is 57, Finsbury Park-road, London, N.; and she will gladly give full information to any who may be interested in the movement.

Jamaica.—Writing with reference to the school at Westwood, Jamaica, for the education of girls of African descent, Mrs. Ryland Trestrail (Manor House, Milton, near Northampton) wishes it to be understood that the various Protestant communions in the island are represented on the managing committee, and also on the trust deed of the school.

Methodists to the Fore.

IT was fortunate that a minister who was discussing THE CHRISTIAN more audibly than wisely at one of the Wesleyan functions last week was not aware of the close proximity of a member of the staff! His grievance lay in the supposed "arrogance of a paper appropriating to itself the title of THE CHRISTIAN." If our friend will acquaint himself a little more fully with our real aims and purposes he will soon realise on what a slender foundation his conception is based. Those who know us best would be the last to express such a judgment. The raison d'être of our paper is to help forward, to the best of its ability, work done for Christ by all who love the Lord Jesus in sincerity and in truth—Methodists, or to whatever other evangelical community they may belong, in church or slum, at home or in the mission field. But this by the way.

John Wesley's old chapel in City-road was the scene of some notable gatherings on Wednesday and Thursday, whose objects were numerous and varied. But not the least interesting and important feature was the incidental evidence of a

on the part of the different sections of that much subdivided body known generally as Methodism. More and more the necessity presses for a "united front" so far as practical work is concerned, whether among churches of different names, or those with modifications of the same name—all united at heart in one grand denomination—Christian; and it was, therefore, reassuring to hear more than one decided disclaimer of any desire to work otherwise than in perfect harmony with other churches. This was the more welcome in view of the exclusiveness which has characterised much of the Methodist work of our day. To join in one, in practical effort, the members of its own family, will be a forward movement and will assuredly lead to more active co-operation with other branches of Christ's Church militant here on earth.

How far this desirable object will be reached by the raising of "a million guineas from a million Methodists" time will prove. It will not, by merely strengthening Methodism as such—and, frankly, this is the tendency which, judging by the past, we fear the most. But if this vast fund, when raised, be devoted to the furtherance of direct evangelistic effort among the masses, such as Wesley himself would have rejoiced in, that "Christ may be all and in all," then no one will grudge the enrolling of the converts for spiritual instruction and service among the ranks of those who love that great preacher's name.

The public inauguration of this fund was the subject of the first day's meetings. As a result of this no less a sum than from circuits within twenty miles of London. Two years are allowed for the hoped-for completion of the scheme.

The second day's proceedings centred their interest in the opening of Wesley's house as a "Methodist Museum and Residence for Christian Workers," to which were added the functions of dedicating a "Centenary Memorial" window, and the unveiling of a tablet "in memory of a good man," the late Henry Smith, Esq., who for nearly a lifetime was associated with Wesley's Chapel, of which he was steward for thirty-nine years.

The pleasing fact was announced that the whole of the sum required, £10,000, had been raised for the permanent endowment of Wesley's house as a home to which members of all branches of the Methodist family would be always welcome, and, more particularly, as the of the Methodist New Connexion, emanating from the historic chapel of which John Wesley was the founder.

In the forenoon a powerful sermon was preached by Dr. A. T. PIERSON, and the subsequent proceedings, addressed by various leaders of Methodism, were characterised by all the earnestness and enthusiasm which so unique an occasion deserved.

Genesis xxviii.

CONSIDER well this ladder. The like to it earth never saw, uniting the bed on which the pilgrim lay with the highest heaven, where God stood above it. As such it pictures the Lord Jesus, who thinks it no robbery to be God's fellow, but who stooped to our low estate when He lay as a babe in Mary's arms.

The common uses of a ladder may instruct us as to our daily use of the Lord Jesus. By it we ascend, and through Him we rise to the things that are above. It would seem as though his ascension had cast a bridge between earth and heaven, over which we may send our thoughts and prayers to our Father. Seek, then, those things which are above. Let your heart and mind thither ascend, and continually dwell with Him who liveth and reigneth with the Father and the Holy Ghost, one God, world without end. By Him we have access unto the Father. He comes to the head of the ladder and listens to our breathing and cry.

When you pray, be satisfied with nothing less than this. As soon as you utter the word Father, the whole Godhead is there intent to hear what you need. Oh, be sure that you have ordered your thoughts before calling on Him, and that you have something worth his hearing.

But the ladder also affords means of descent. And it is through Jesus that good and perfect gifts reach our hands. Best of all, it pleased the Father that in Him all the fulness should dwell, that out of his fulness we might receive, and grace for grace. It is blessed when we have learnt to wait quietly at the foot of God's ladder, sure that delays are not denials, and that the angels are even now on their way towards us. They started when we first began to pray (Dan. x.).

What disappointments there are in life! We had thought that we were to be dowered with Rachel, and, lo! Leah is substituted. Most of us begin life with such sunny hopes and anticipations of what it would bring. Surely, we say, all will be prosperous and happy. The sun of success, and love, and peace will shine upon our pathway. Friends, pleasure, contentment shall fill the barge as it floats slowly and easily with the current. When the first sorrow comes, we are startled, and say to ourselves this is only a passing shower, it will soon be bright again; and we can hardly believe it, when the dark clouds begin to roll up into the sky, and there is hardly a patch of blue left.

It is remarkable, however, that the strength of our life originates in just these experiences. In after days Jacob spoke of Reuben as his might, and the beginning of his strength, the excellency of dignity, and the excellency of power. The names of Leah's children are suggestions, therefore, of the blessings which accrue through the disappointments of our lives. Let us dare to trust God about them, and to believe that he is elaborating his perfect plan. For the Leahs of the world there are great compensations. God remembers them, and hears them. Broken-hearted, forsaken, weary of life, they are the mothers of stalwart sons. But there is, after all, no compensation to be compared with the love and presence of Jesus. "He that is called in the Lord, being a slave, is the Lord's freeman; likewise he that is called, being free, is Christ's servant." Oh, take the Blessed Lord to be the complement (the completement) of your lack!

There is little in this narrative to commend Jacob, and nothing to choose between him and Laban. They are well matched one against the other; and, if anything, the worldly advantage seems to lie with Jacob. The heir of the promises deals with the child of this world on the very principles which many of the children of the world would disown, and gets the best of his cunning antagonist. We cannot wonder at Laban. He had not had the early training, the ladder-vision, the Divine promises that Jacob had enjoyed. He knew no better. But that Jacob should descend to such tricks is most melancholy.

But is this the only case of the kind? Are there not many professing Christians, who occupy leading positions in the religious world, that stoop to methods and practices, which are good enough for worldlings, but utterly foreign to the principles of Christ, and bring the conscience under perpetual condemnation? And yet there was a radical difference between the two. In the one there was, amid all the inconsistency and sin, the germ of the Divine nature, the rare faculty of faith in the unseen, qualities of soul in which the other had no share. And therefore God would not spare him. As for Laban, he drops out of the inspired page; whilst Jacob is destined to pass through terrible and fiery trials, in virtue of which the evil is eliminated, and is made Israel, a Prince.

If only he had trusted the Divine promises, made first before his birth, confirmed by his father, and repeated at Bethel, there would have been no need to descend to such evasions and subterfuges. This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith. O Son of God, give us that victory!

WEDNESDAY, November 23.

These chapters give us a marvellous insight into the immeasurable grace of God. He knew what was in Jacob's heart, and could see his shuffling and shiftiness. There was not a thought in his mind or a word on his tongue but He knew them altogether. And yet He cast the mantle of his forgiveness and protection over this most unworthy soul. "God came to Laban, the Syrian, in a dream by night, and said unto him, Take heed that thou speak not to Jacob good or bad." And, more wonderful than all, we are told in a later book, "He hath not beheld iniquity in Jacob, neither hath He seen perverseness in Israel." Not that God did not see much that grieved Him in his child, but He would not dwell on it, and refused to be turned aside by it from his gracious purposes, and proceeded to treat Him as though He had been always loving and obedient.

What comfort these reflections yield! At the beginning of Christian life we think that we have some claim on God, or that we may be able to make one. Then we are placed in a sphere in which our inherent evil is exhibited to the full, with the twofold result of our being greatly surprised on the one hand, and beginning to wonder, on the other, whether God will still favour us.

But there is no real ground for the one or the other. We certainly need not be surprised at any revelations that are made of our own baseness. All that Jacob did, and much more, is possible to us. But Jesus knew this before He began to love us. He did not set his love on us because we were good, but to make us so. And He will not cease till, by loving, He has made us all He intends.

Genesis xxxii.

Still Jacob is full of his own plans. He tries to adjust the difference with Esau by his own skill and subtlety. It seems impossible for some natures to renounce their own designs and let God manage on their behalf. "He sent messengers before him to Esau." He fawns on him with fulsome obsequiousness, speaking my lord Esau and thy servant Jacob. He divides his camp, and provides that Rachel at least shall have time to escape. His one thought was either to appease him with a present or to turn with his swiftest camels to fly.

It was necessary that such a man should be brought to an end of himself, and therefore the angel of the Covenant, which could be no other than the Son of Man, entered the lists, and began to wrestle with him. At first he held his own, as he had done so often before, and it became needful to touch the hollow of his thigh to extract the confession that his name and nature were Supplanter and Cheat, and to force him to cling about the neck of the angel, intent on being blessed. This narrative has too often been taken as teaching the power of wrestling prayer, but that is not its meaning. The one object is to show how necessary it is for God to bring us to an end of ourselves, to level us in the dust before Him, and to induce us to forego our scheming and plotting in favour of a simple faith. Will not God who bade us return deal with all that obstructs and paralyses our obedience? Let us be still before Him, till He shall make bare his holy arm.

FRIDAY, November 25.

How useless our planning and contrivances are. When a man is right with God he is safe, apart from his own ingenuity, having only to act as God directs; but when there is controversy and variance, we are not safe, whatever we may do or say.

We may always tell whether we are living on God's plan, and in living humble dependence upon Him. If so, we shall be quiet and restful in the face of overwhelming and threatening danger; but, if not, we are perturbed, restless, scheming, and full of devices and plans.

Do you dread Esau to-morrow? Humble yourself before God, lie down in the place of death, hand over to Him the entire matter. "Acquaint now thyself with Him, and be at peace." And when Esau meets you, you will find the lion changed to a lamb. The billow which threatened to overwhelm you will pass under you, lifting you as it sweeps past, and you will be able to look afar over the crest of the mighty waves. As an old man said to me lately, "I have had a good many trials in my life, which seemed very formidable when they were coming over, but they don't seem so now that they are passed and gone."

God is a rock, his way is perfect, and He knoweth them that trust in Him. Trust ye in the Lord Jehovah, for He is the Rock of Ages. At his rebuke the mountains shall be levelled, and the valleys exalted, iron gates opened, stones rolled away, and Esaus pacified. Jacob need not have condescended to evasion if he had only trusted utterly.

SATURDAY, November 26.

Genesis xxxiv.

Here was a sad descent, that the child of the pilgrim race should go down to Shechem, and buy a parcel of land, settling in close contiguity to the world of his time. He had bitterly to repent of his transgression in this respect, when Dinah was dishonoured, the worst passions of his sons evoked, whilst he was made to stink among the inhabitants of the land. O children of God, it is impossible for you to come into close association with the people and ways of the world without suffering bitterly either in yourselves or your children. Remember that we are chosen out of the world, and have no part nor lot with it.

The Son of God is come, and we are in Him that is real and true, even Jesus Christ, but the whole world lieth in the wicked one. "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any love the world, the love of the Father is not in him." Notice what a panic of fear Jacob was brought into. "I shall be destroyed, I and my house." If he had been living a consistent life, he would have no fears of this kind, his faith would have grasped the Divine promises and assurances. He would have seen that his sins could not make God run back from his promises to preserve and bring him again to Bethel. He would have known that he must receive chastisement for his lapse from the pilgrim spirit and the separate life, but he would have dared to believe in God's delivering help. Let us not go down to Shechem; but if we do, believe that even sin cannot cut off God's love and faithfulness.

Home Missions.

Scotland.

THE Scottish auxiliaries of the McAll Mission have been holding their annual meetings. At a large gathering in Glasgow it was stated that from the West of Scotland £1000 had been sent last year to the Paris headquarters. Dr. Marshall Lang, Sir John Cuthbertson, Rev. C. E. Greig, and others pleaded the claims of the work commenced in the sister country by that earnest Scotchman, the late Dr. McAll. Meetings were also held in Edinburgh and Greenock.

Rev. John McNeill, after his short rest from the labours in Dingwall and Invergordon, etc., begins work in Portree on Sabbath, November 20. He thereafter proceeds to Stornoway on November 22, and, after a special season there, will return to the mainland, beginning again in the Black Isle in December. It is expected that Mr. McNeill will go to Caithness in January, and thereafter to Sutherlandshire, but neither places nor dates have yet been arranged. We understand (says The Northern Weekly) that Mr. McNeill has placed himself at the service of the Highland Free Church Committee till the end of next May.

A meeting of the Church of Scotland Women's Foreign Mission Association was held in the Religious Institution Rooms, Glasgow, last week, to hear Dr. Mitford Mitchell give an account of his recent visit to the mission stations in India. Dr. Mitchell said his first introduction to missions in India was to the Free Church Mission and the Wilson College, Bombay, where a work was being done deserving of all honour. He was sorry their own institution in Bombay had been abandoned, but he hoped that on no future occasion would their Church abandon any field of mission work. When leaving Poona he carried away the idea that no better and more thorough work was being done anywhere than by the missionaries at that place. At Calcutta they had their great institution, where splendid educational work was being carried on. Much as he admired the missions at Poonah, Calcutta, Madras, and Sialkote, the Eastern Himalayan mission possessed features which could not be found elsewhere.

A new series of mid-day religious meetings for business men was commenced in the Bible Training Institute, Glasgow, last week. The hall was crowded to overflowing. The sermon was delivered by Dr. Whyte, Moderator of the Free Church. Dr. Whyte said one of the most beautiful of the Psalmist's sayings was—"On Thee do I wait all day." He sometimes wished that David had condescended to give them some particulars to show the busy man, the statesman, the king, the man with the cares of the world upon his shoulders, and of the Church, and of the family, how to manage to find time to wait on God all the day. However, it was perhaps better that David did not give them a diary. Everything that was legitimate and right could be made sacramental and evangelical by the Word of God and prayer. To their ships, their banks, their offices, their shops, and their studies let them bring the Word with them, and they would sanctify all things around them.

The annual public meeting of the British Women's Temperance Association (Scottish branch) was held last week in the Free Assembly Hall, Edinburgh. Mrs. Blaikie, who presided, remarked that their Association had been twenty-one years in existence, and that they had not been idle, for they had now 209 branches in Scotland, and over 19,300 members. During that time, she said, they had learned that the only way to put a stop to drunkenness was to put the drink right away out of the country. Miss Agnes Slack said that though they were still behind America, Canada, and Norway, they were nevertheless making advances in the temperance cause.

Mr. James Guthrie, Brechin, referred to the applications for liquor licences made by the Lipton Company. Many men and women, ministers and ministers' wives, he said, had applied for shares, and got them. No sooner, however, had they been got than it was intimated that the company was to become connected with the "trade," and that it was to make a great flotation of spirits of all descriptions, so that every person who subscribed and obtained shares was a partner in the liquor business. He called upon all ladies and gentlemen who were present that night, and who had shares in Lipton's, to sell these shares, as he had done.

Dr. John Smith said he liked moral suasion, but he was also convinced that they could have no end of this question without legislation, and that there never was a time when legislation was more urgently needed than at this hour. In many ways they were making progress, but he would ask them if they thought that the great evil had any lighter hold in Scotland to-day than it had twenty years ago.

Through the instrumentality of Mrs. Todd Osborne, a soldiers' home has been opened at Inverness. A large number of soldiers are quartered in the town, and hitherto they have had no such place of safe and profitable resort.

. . . .

At the fifteenth annual meeting of the Scottish Auxiliary to Irish Missions held last week at Edinburgh it was stated that the sale of the Word of God by the colporteurs has considerably increased. The work is being carried on with increasing vigour, greater facilities being afforded of reaching the people with the Gospel.

. . . .

The Wesleyan Methodist Mission in Edinburgh has celebrated its tenth anniversary under the ministry of Rev. G. Jackson. In addition to the Sunday congregations, which are very large, there are many branches of work, including a mission church in another part of the city. It is now proposed to erect premises for the carrying on of the work. A splendid site has been secured, and the Conference, besides advancing a loan of £15,000, commends the effort to the generous support of Methodist friends in England and Scotland. The anniversary services were largely attended, and the preachers and speakers included Rev. J. H. Jowett, Birmingham, and Rev. H. Meakin, of the South London Mission.

The Aldersgate "Mid-day."

SPECIAL services were arranged last week in connection with the usual mid-day meeting. Mr. R. C. Morgan spoke at the first three, particular consideration being given to the subject of revival, the speaker referring to the strong necessity of so preaching the truth as to cause a sense of deep conviction. In the old revivals the unconverted saw and heard terrible things as they wrestled, in agony of soul, for salvation. A study of Revelation x. suggested many thoughts from "eating the little book," sweet in the mouth, but subsequently bitter.

Mr. W. R. Lane, who spoke on Thursday and Friday, after giving cheering accounts of the aggressive Christian work by and amongst the soldiers at Aldershot, spoke some invigorating words on "tribulation working patience," illustrating his remarks by a comparison of life to a carpet factory, where, amidst the whirl and clatter of machinery, the designer's pattern is all the time being woven out.

Messrs. Hodder, Garstin and other friends took part. Mr. and Mrs. Baker, the blind singers, sang each day with their accustomed tenderness. Mr. Lane was able to report encouraging results from a mission at Bermondsey Town Hall, and similar signs of blessing were reported from Dr. Guinness's meetings at Portman Rooms, and also from the Sunday services in the Tottenham Tent.

Homes for Working Girls in London.—The united anniversary tea party of the past and present inmates of these homes was held at Portman Rooms, Baker-street, W., on Wednesday evening, November 9, between 600 and 700 young women being present. At nine o'clock an informal meeting took place, at which Lord Kinnaird presided, addresses being delivered by Rev. Marcus Rainsford, Rev. F. S. Webster, and Mr. John Shrimpton, interspersed by solos, etc. It was very pleasing to observe so many gentlemen friends present, who from time to time conduct the weekly Bible Talk in the various homes.

Christmas Letter Mission.

THE late Miss E. B. Elliott, who founded the deeply-interesting Christmas Letter Mission, made timely provision for the continuance of the work. We are pleased to receive specimens of the letters prepared for the coming season, and to observe that they contain the same full Gospel message which Miss Elliott delighted to proclaim, and in the faith of which she passed to her rest.

Those who know the Letters hardly need to be reminded of their useful variety—some for workhouses, others for railway, cab, and 'bus men; some for mothers, others for servants; some for children, others for the sick and aged; some for the blind, others for "general" use. The annual report gives some account of the encouragement attending the distribution of the Letters.

An Irish secretary tells of the welcome they receive in our Sister Isle:—"The people in the union look forward with much pleasure for their letters. I find they read them over and over during the year. They cheer the poor people in their lonely life. Many of our old folks are true Christians and they prize the letters." The next is a report of a distribution in an English workhouse:—"The letters are given to the master, who distributes them on Christmas morning. Those for the infirmary are placed upon the patients' pillows for them to find on awaking; they are very much appreciated and eagerly looked for year by year."

Letters for cab, tram-car, and omnibus men were again generously supplied by the kind helpers of former years, and were even more eagerly sought for by the men than usually. Although some of the helpers had been called Home during the past year, the number of letters distributed has not been less—owing in great measure to the kind help of Mrs. Dawes, who not only herself supplied double the number of letters she had sent in former years, but also enlisted several new helpers.

The City missionaries, who undertook distributions among cab, tram-car, and omnibus men, say that the letters were, in almost every instance, most thankfully received, and the men were much touched by the tokens of remembrance and sympathy. One man told the missionary that he had in consecutive years received seventeen letters from him, and that he had carefully kept them all, and often read them over. Others send them on, when read, to friends or relatives abroad.

Reports from India, Canada, France, and other countries are full of interest. The Mission also issues cards of choice design, conveying greetings and bearing words from Holy Scripture. Correspondence on the subject should be addressed to the publishers, Messrs. Hazell, Watson, and Viney, 1, Creed-lane, London, E.C.

Offers of kind help in supplying large institutions will be gratefully received by Miss E. Thornton, Eastfield House, Broxbourne, hon. sec.; but if friends like to work by deputy, Miss Duke, Beaumaris House, Surbiton, will gladly receive any small sums, which would be spent in sending letters to needy parts.

Salvation Army Social Work.—Mrs. Bramwell Booth has invited the friends of the Women's Social Work of the Army to meet her at Holborn Restaurant on Tuesday next, Nov. 22. There will be a reception at seven, followed at eight by the annual meeting of the work, Hon. Dr. Cockburn will preside. Mrs. Booth will appeal for the maintenance and furtherance of the work. Friends wishing to show their interest may obtain tickets (3s. 6d. each) of the secretary, 101, Queen Victoria-street. A feature in the programme is an exhibit of some of the productions of the Social Scheme Industries.

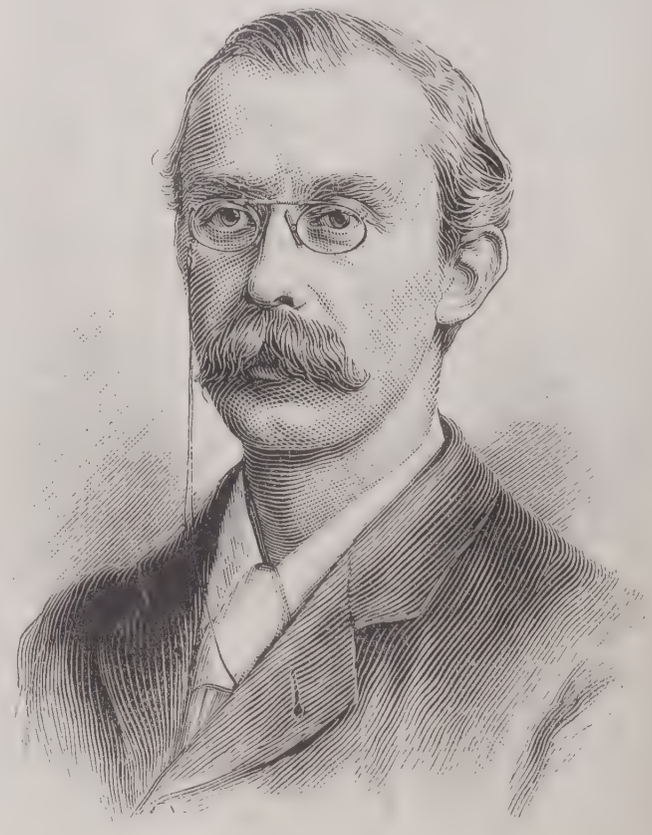
Littlestone-on-Sea Convalescent Home.—In connection with this useful institution for respectable women and girls of any denomination, a site has been given for a new home, the villas at present in use being inadequate. Eight years ago the Home was started in a small villa with twelve beds; it has since been increased to thirty-one beds, and 1500 patients have been received for visits of from two to eight weeks each. Mr. E. H. Tubbs, Hon. Director, "Bradley," 33, Laurie Park-road, Sydenham, S.E., is anxious to obtain assistance towards the permanent building fund. The cost of the new home will probably be £5000, and will contain about 75 beds and one ward specially adapted to the requirements of mothers with their infants. As the managerial work is sustained entirely by honorary workers; all donations are applied directly to the work.

An Historic Church.

CARR'S LANE 150th ANNIVERSARY.

WITH the exception of the Society of Friends, who were in evidence in Birmingham in the middle of the seventeenth century, the Congregational Church at Carr's-lane can claim connection with the first Nonconformist church, built in 1689, and called the "Old Meeting House." In the eighteenth century Arianism, which afterwards developed into Unitarianism, made great headway, and it was the avowal of Arian doctrine by the pastor, Rev. W. Howell, that led to the withdrawal of some of the congregation.

Mr. England, one of the seceders, was a great benefactor to Carr's-lane chapel, and the silver sacramental service presented by him is still in use. The chapel was commenced in 1747 and opened in November, 1748, when the members invited Rev. Gervas Wylde to become their pastor. The first chapel was built for 450; its deacons were Mr. England and Mr. Kendal. Mr. Wylde was an earnest, devoted minister, and soon filled the chapel. He died Nov. 14, 1766, and was succeeded by Rev. T. Punfield, and the latter—in 1792—by Dr. Williams, famous in his day as a metaphysician and theologian — one of the earliest advocates of foreign missions and a founder of the London Missionary Society. After three and a-half years he became president of the Yorkshire Independent College, then at Rotherham, and now federated with others and known as the Yorkshire United College, at Bradford.



In 1796 Rev. Jehoiada Brewer became minister, but he resigned in 1802, and took with him a large number of the church and congation to Livery-street; they afterwards removing to Ebenezer Chapel, Steelhouse-lane, which was built for him in 1818, although he died before it was opened. In 1801 the first Carr's-lane chapel was taken down, and in 1802 the second chapel for 800 persons was opened; but Mr. Brewer only preached in it one Sunday before his removal.

To this chapel came in 1805 Rev. John Angell James, to commence one of the most memorable pastorates in English Nonconformity. Telling of his conversion, Mr. James once said:—"If I have a right to consider myself a Christian; if I have attained to any usefulness in the Church of Christ, I owe it, in the way of instrumentality, to the sight of a companion who slept in the same room with me. He bent his knees every night in prayer, and that roused my slumbering conscience, and sent an arrow to my heart; for, although I had been religiously educated, I had neglected prayer, and cast off the fear of God. My conversion followed, and my preparation for the work of the ministry. Nearly half a century has rolled away since then, but that little chamber and that praying youth are still present to my imagination, and will never be forgotten, even amid the splendours of heaven, and through the ages of eternity."

Rev. J. H. Jowett.
(From a photograph by H. J. Whitlock, 11, New-street, Birmingham.)

On Christmas Day, 1818, the congregation decided on rebuilding, and subscribed nearly £4000 there and then. The present building was erected at a cost of £11,000. The last slate, found intact on the restoration a few years ago, was inscribed with the date, "30th July, 1819, at the stone-laying by Rev. John Angell James, and 30th October in the same year the last slate was laid by H. L. Holland, the builder, in the presence of S. T. Whitwell, the architect."

Mr. James remained pastor for fifty-four years. In 1854 Mr. R. W. Dale became co-pastor, and succeeded him in 1859, when Mr. James died.

The biography of this remarkable man has just appeared,* and we hope in our next issue to give some account of the same. Those whose acquaintance with Dr. Dale was confined to his public acts and utterances will find the portraiture admirably completed by the glimpses afforded of his private life and epistolary influence. Being a man of varied erudition and steady judgment, he was consulted by theologians and politicians of many schools; and not the least instructive feature of this noble biography is the selection that it gives of his voluminous correspondence. The pages delineate a career of great activity, and touch upon so many questions that it may with truth be pronounced "a liberal education" in matters affecting Free Church life and polity.

"Dr. Dale embodied all that was best and highest in our national and denominational life. He took a large heart and a commanding mind into every sphere of his manifold service. As theologian, as ecclesiastic, as educationalist, and as patriot his influence is graven deep and clear upon the thought and sentiments of the English-speaking people. By his personality and teaching the church at Carr's-lane has obtained a moral and spiritual influence almost unique."

So said Rev. J. H. Jowett, M.A., to his congregation at St. James's, Newcastle-on-Tyne, on July 7, 1895, when announcing to them his acceptance of the call to him to become the successor of Dr. Dale (who had died in March of that year). Mr. Jowett began his ministry at Carr's-lane on October 6, and has fully justified his place in

THIS NOTABLE SUCCESSION.

Carr's-lane has become the mother church, with several daughters, in the course of this century, during which Birmingham has grown so rapidly. In 1748 its population was 23,000. The population of the city and suburbs is now nearly 700,000, and there are within this area thirty-five Congregational churches and missions, giving accommodation for about 18,000 persons. There are twenty-two ministers, and an Association of the Congregational Churches exists, of which Alderman Edwards, J.P., is president this year.

We may give the following personal items relating to the present pastor of Carr's-lane, before proceeding to indicate some of its principal activities. Born at Halifax August 25, 1864, Mr. Jowett was educated at Hipperholme Grammar School, and entered Airedale College in 1881. At the end of the year he won the Brown scholarship, and for four years studied at Edinburgh University. He returned to Airedale for a year, and finished his college career with another year's theological study at Mansfield College, Oxford. The invitation to St. James' Church, Newcastle, was accepted August 7, 1888; his ministry, however, did not commence till October 6, 1889. While a youth he attended Square Congregational Church, Halifax, of which the pastor was Rev. Eric A. Lawrence, who had himself been a member of Carr's-lane church.

It is as a preacher that Mr. Jowett is best known. His style in the pulpit is just such as we could imagine Bunyan's would have been if he had been called to the same service—an entire absence of the theatrical, no sign of self-consciousness, just

SPEECH FROM HEART TO HEART.

Yet how eloquent he is in his simplicity, how beautiful is his choice of those plain words that all know, those words which suit the old, old story better than florid rhetoric! "I stand to-night," he said, on the occasion of the New Year's service in 1894, "as the Lord's ambassador, and this is my message: 'The Lord hath sent me to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound.'" This is the keynote of his preaching, he is no mere theological critic, nor is he content with the bare exposition of the Word: he rightly esteems himself one who has been called to the spreading of glad news; he makes at once for the citadel of the soul.

We have but little space left to indicate the far-reaching activities of this historic church. The chapel is filled at every Sunday service; the Thursday evening service also has an average attendance of about 800, drawn from all ranks and denominations, clergymen as well as Free Church ministers being frequently present. Thursday being market day (and consequently later trains are run than on other days to many of the surrounding towns within thirty miles), there is always a large proportion of strangers who prefer the service at Carr's-lane to places of public amusement.

On Monday nights there is a great women's meeting; a band of 100 ladies, under Mrs. Jowett's leadership, meets for prayer before the service in the church, which they conduct. Here for an hour nearly 900 women will attend, many of whom are drawn from the "slum" area lying close to the chapel, in which each month by these ladies.

This service and visitation work is the central pivot around which revolves a ministry of Christian service which is an example far and wide. The "parish" is systematically worked. The Monthly Record, containing the Home Messenger and Church news, is regularly distributed, a savings bank is carried on, a free dispensary is held, the sale of 1d. tickets for a hot bath and towel at the Corporation Baths, and an innumerable list of agencies indicating that the Gospel is not only preached but practised.

Nor is this work confined to women. An old chapel in Moseley-street was recently bought and turned into a hall for the men's school and recreation-rooms. Here classes and meetings every night are in full swing with an earnest band of voluntary workers under the honorary superintendency of Mr. F. N. Sharratt. At Cattell-road Hall, Small Heath, similar mission work is carried on by Mr. J. C. Grant, while branch Sunday-schools and mission services are held in Board Schools at Dartmouth-street and Sherborne-road. Christian Endeavour Societies, Bands of Hope, a Sunday night school for ragged children, the pastor's class of young people of the congregation under sixteen years of age, on alternate Wednesdays, a home reading circle under Miss Dale's leadership, and the splendid classes for young men under Mr. Hindmarsh and Mr. Hugh Lewis, as well as the girls' evening home for flower girls, all testify to

THE VIGOROUS LIFE OF THE CHURCH.

Another indication that the present minister is alive to the needs of the times is found in the re-seating of the gallery with separate patent chairs (as shown in our illustration) in place of the old pews. Not only has this greatly increased the accommodation and added materially to the personal comfort of the occupants, but it has helped to break down the caste tendency which often distinguishes gallery from floor, all classes being now fairly distributed throughout the whole building. Further, it encourages the attendance of isolated or solitary persons (young business men and women for instance, living in lodgings), who have a definite seat of their own instead of being sandwiched in the middle of a long pew.

CARR'S-LANE CHAPEL, BIRMINGHAM.

Notwithstanding that £7000 has just been spent on the renovation of the chapel, installation of electric light, and structural alterations to the lecture hall and school-rooms, the noble idea was conceived of celebrating the anniversary by contributions beforehand (not collections on the special Sunday) to purchase a movable iron church to seat 300 persons, fully equipped, to be used as the nucleus of new work in new and rapidly-growing suburbs. This has been done, and about £500 thus subscribed as a thank offering for the many tokens of the Divine blessing.

On Sunday last Rev. Dr. Brown, of Bedford, preached in the morning, and Mr. Jowett at night. On Tuesday evening a great social gathering of past and present members of the church and congregation was held in the Town Hall, when Mr. Jowett presided, and addresses were given by Dr. Robertson Nicoll and Rev. H. Arnold Thomas (chairman-elect of Congregational Union). Last night a great young people's meeting was held in the chapel, and addressed by Mr. Jowett, and to-night a public meeting is to be held, at which Mr. Albert Spicer, M.P., will preside and Dr. Guinness Rogers, Dr. Monro Gibson, and Mr. Jowett will speak.

With such a record behind, and with such a vast work in hand, Carr's-lane Church may justly "thank God and take courage" for all that the future may demand.

Systematic Bible Study.

IN these days of high pressure and haste it is to be feared that the continuous and systematic study of the Scriptures is widely neglected. The proposed "Ten Weeks' School for Bible Study" in London, at the opening of the new year, is therefore to be welcomed. The lecturer, as already announced, will be Dr. W. W. White, late Professor of Hebrew and Old Testament Literature in Xenia Theological Seminary, U.S., and latterly of Mr. Moody's Bible Institute, Chicago. The special objects of his lectures will be to secure a more comprehensive and thorough knowledge of the sacred records; to suggest the best methods of study and to stimulate to a continuance of it.

A meeting for conference on the coming course of lectures was held at the offices of the Y.W.C.A. in George-street, Hanover-square, on Friday last, Lord KINNAIRD presiding. There was a good and very representative attendance of friends, showing a manifest interest in the proposed series of addresses. The CHAIRMAN said he had met Prof. White on his recent visit to India, and heard good reports of his work in different centres there. He seems to have the gift of making his theme attractive, and of imparting to his students some of his own enthusiasm. In this London ten weeks' school it is especially desired to reach students and young business men, as well as Christian workers generally throughout the West End of the city. While thanking God for all that has been done in the past in this direction, we want much more done at the present time, and Professor White's visit is timely and providential.

Miss HABERSHON, having gained some acquaintance with Professor White's methods in America, spoke enthusiastically of his lectures, and proceeded to outline the course of the proposed meetings in London. They will be held in the following different centres On the Tuesday afternoons at 5.30 the gatherings will be in King's Hall, Holborn Restaurant, so as to reach medical students and City men. On Tuesday evenings at 8.30 there will be meetings in Kensington Town Hall. At 12 noon and 3 p.m. on Wednesdays the centre of meeting will be the Y.W.C.A., George-street, W. Thursday afternoon will find the lecturer at Hampstead Conservatoire, and the same evening at 8.30 at Mildmay Conference Hall. Rev. C. Fox's church at Eaton-place, S.W., will be the meeting place on Friday afternoons, and in the evenings of that day the gatherings will be in the Polytechnic, Regent-street. On the Saturday afternoons it is proposed that Professor White should address the young men's meeting at Aldersgate-street, so long conducted by Rev. F. B. Meyer, who will then be absent in India. Local committees at each centre will carry out the arrangements. The series will begin on Tuesday, January 17, and continue for ten weeks.

In a lengthened address Dr. Pierson dwelt on the marvellous unity of the Bible, and strenuously urged the systematic and synthetic study of the different books composing it. He spoke highly of Dr. White's reverence for the Scriptures as a Divine and fully-inspired record, and of his ability as a teacher.

Earnest prayer followed from Preb. Webb-Peploe, Dr. Monro Gibson, and Rev. F. B. Meyer.

FROM OTHER LANDS.

Bible Work in S. America.—2.

By Mrs. ANDREW MILNE.

BEFORE writing of the work in other countries of South America, some new developments of the work in Argentina might be mentioned. The English congregation of the first Methodist Episcopal church in this city has undertaken the support of a Bible missionary. The man is a native and a fruit of the work here, and is now engaged at work in the province of Cordova.

As most of the towns have already been visited, some of them repeatedly, it is desirable to have some means of reaching the farms, not now so few and far between as twenty-five years ago. A Bible-coach, with accessories, will cost from £30 to £40, the money for which is being raised locally. This will give a new and interesting feature to the work, from which we may expect important results.

Recent letters from one of our men, now in the province of Corrientes, speak encouragingly of having been on many occasions invited into the houses to read and explain the Scriptures. A kind donor in England has offered "to give £5 a year for three years to the support of a Biblewoman for the Conventillas tenement houses on hearing that the remaining £55 have been promised."

URUGUAY.

The Republic of Uruguay is the smallest in South America. In point of climate, industry, products, and, I might say, evangelisation, it is on a par with the province of Buenos Aires. The whole country was thoroughly canvassed with the Scriptures years ago, when Montevideo was the headquarters of this agency; but of late it has been in almost constant political turmoil. This, together with the exceeding costliness of living and transit there, has greatly hindered the work. There are two Bible distributors in the Republic at present, but sales are comparatively meagre.

There have been Spanish services in the city of Montevideo since 1868. There are now several prosperous congregations there, as well as in several of the country towns. There is also a first-class mission school in the capital under the auspices of the W.F.M.S. of the United States, conducted by capable and devoted Christian ladies.

About a hundred miles from the capital and on the margin of the River Plate is a Waldensian colony, planted some forty years ago. They have their own pastors and services in French, and by their strict observance of the Lord's Day and weekly prayer meetings in the farm kitchens (forcibly reminding one of like sacred and happy occasions in the Scotland of our young days), their condition forms a strong contrast to the surrounding indifference.

PARAGUAY.

Next in order comes the Republic of Paraguay. This has been called "the garden of South America." It is land-locked, connects with the ocean by the rivers Paraguay, Paraná, and La Plata at Montevideo, just a thousand miles directly south from Asuncion, the capital. The climate is healthy and the resources great. There is much good land, and stock-raising is the chief industry.

The vernacular of the interior is Guarani. The only portion of Scripture translated into it is the Sermon on the Mount, but on account of the many dialectic variations this is of almost no practical value. Whether this is due to warfare, immigration, or some other cause, is difficult to tell, but the fact remains.

For more than a century and a half the Jesuit missionaries had absolute control over Paraguay, and at the time of their expulsion in 1776 the whole was thoroughly Christianised after their manner. We have read somewhere that the Indians were brought in gangs to the river and baptized by sprinkling with a broom. To-day all that remains to mark their having been there are the ruins of the houses they built and the orange groves they planted. Not a vestige of any spiritual, moral, or intellectual enlightenment. If they reduced the language to writing it was entirely for their own aggrandisement, for there is not to-day, and probably there never was, a single individual who learned the art of reading through the Guarani.

The South American Missionary Society has a mission to the uncivilised Indians of the Chaco of Paraguay, and the Methodists have several preaching stations in and around Asuncion. Our colporteur there is a native Paraguayan, and speaks both Spanish and Guarani, but so few can read, even in Spanish, that sales are meagre.

The Women's Foreign Missionary Society of the United States has also a good school in Asuncion. Where Spanish is spoken, something is being done, but except for Mr. Grubb's work in the Chaco the poor Indian remains in his native darkness.

Dr. Craver, superintendent of the Methodist work in Paraguay, relates the following incident, which has already been published:—"I received a call some weeks ago from an intelligent farmer who lives about thirty leagues inland. He came to make inquiries about religion. I found he had a Bible, and had imbibed its spirit to a wonderful degree. He had not had the opportunity of attending any service, but had great spiritual insight in the things of God. It was to me a striking example of the way that God's Word instructs a man when he reads it in a reverent spirit, even without an interpreter." Since then this man has given very clear testimony as to his faith, and holds on his way patiently bearing virulent persecution on account of it.

Buenos Aires.

Pondicherry and its Needs.

WRITING en route from Pondicherry to Panruti, Miss Reade says:—

"There are at present several French Protestant families at Pondicherry, and the wife and children of the Governor are also Protestants; but there is no Christian agency whatever, and it makes one's heart ache to think of them, with nothing—year in and year out—to help them and to cheer them spiritually. There are several families of English Protestants also who are not much better off, a short visit once a month from a Madras chaplain and the regular Sunday service held by the British consul in his absence being their only public means of grace.

"What a happy thing it would be if it were laid on the heart of some French pastor who knew English, or an English minister who knew French, to take up this field of work, and care for the varied interests connected with it. There is the Bible Society's depôt, with its agent and Biblewomen, to supervise work embracing Hindus, Mohammedans, and Roman Catholics—there are the French and English steamers that come into port there.

"In fact, Pondicherry presents a wide field of service to one who can give his whole time and strength to it. A married couple would be better than a single man, though any true worker would be better than none. It is a sphere more suitable for a gentleman than a lady. I do most earnestly trust that this appeal may find its way into the hearts of some Christian brother and sister, and that they or he may be led to give themselves to this work."

West Indian Hurricane.—Rev. S. Sunderland writes from 84, Longbridge-road, Barking, E.: "May I correct a printer's error that appeared in my statement last week. The amount received through The Christian was given as £551 7s. 3d. It should have read £55 17s. 3d."

Destructive Flood in China.—Mr. Alfred H. Baynes, Secretary Baptist Missionary Society, writes on Nov. 8:—"I have this morning received the following telegram from Rev. R. C. Forsyth, of Tsi Nan Fu, one of the missionaries of the Baptist Missionary Society in Shantung, dated Nov. 7: 'Yellow River left its bed near Tsi Nan Fu; now flowing north-east; 2000 square miles are flooded, crops ruined, hundreds of villages destroyed, cattle and grain swept away, a million people suffering, tens of thousands camping out, winter approaching, famine imminent. Shantung Conference appointed relief committee. Publish tidings; start subscriptions; relief works projected; humanity demands immediate and generous action.' Contributions for the relief of the tens of thousands of sufferers from this appalling calamity will be thankfully received either by our treasurer, Mr. William R. Rickett, J.P., or by myself, at 19, Furnival-street, Holborn, E.C., and such sums will be promptly cabled out to China for immediate use."

India and Missions.

THE Bishop-designate of Calcutta (Dr. J. E. C. Welldon) presided recently over a large meeting of men held in Exeter Hall, in connection with the jubilee celebration of the C.M.S. Speaking as a missionary, he delivered a striking address, in the course of which he said that when the bishopric of Calcutta was offered to him, he told the Secretary of State that unless he were allowed a free hand to encourage and support Christian missions in India he would not go. To make Christians in India Christians, he said, is no insufficient task for the best of men in that vast country; and when the day comes that Europeans in India shall live as Christians ought to live, the conversion of India will not be far off.

Coming to the object of the meeting—to stimulate among men an interest in the cause of Christian Missions—the speaker said that it had happened to him in the natural course of events to reflect of late more than of old on the call of the Church to Christian men to enter upon the foreign field of labour; and they who meditated upon it would find that the call of Christ was as clear as could be. If the call comes (said Dr. Welldon) as it came to me, without seeking it, and without desiring it, then great is the responsibility of refusing to obey it. I felt that responsibility as a Christian, but I felt it yet more as a clergyman. A clergyman by his office must set before men an exalted standard; and he who appeals to the sovereign motives of life must be prepared to act upon them himself.

Speaking of the opportunity and responsibility of the British Empire, Dr. Welldon said: I am not only a Christian, I am also a patriot; and next to the Church of Christ the British Empire is to me the most inspiriting fact on earth. But the British Empire would never rise to a true conception of its magnificent opportunities unless its citizens felt that they were called to spread throughout the world, and especially amongst the subjects of the Queen, not only the arms, the arts, and the civilization, but also the religion of this country. His reading of history had shown him that empires had risen, had prospered, and had decayed, and he could not doubt that the British Empire would in time decay unless it was sanctified and preserved by the Divine spirit of Christianity. In his judgment, therefore, he who set forth Christianity among the colonies and dependencies of the Empire was doing a service not only to the Church, but to the Empire itself. An empire, to be permanent, must rest upon character—it could not rest wholly upon force; and he knew of no safeguard for character, no stronghold that could preserve men from the temptations and seductions of life except the faith of Jesus Christ our Lord.

No matter what our responsibility was to other parts of the world, there could be no question of our responsibility to India, and it was important to know that statesmen, no less than missionaries, recognised that this country was bound to India by the most intimate and sacred ties of obligation. The history of Christian missions in India was indeed a remarkable tale; and many would thank God for the progress that had been made. But whether they took a favourable view of that progress or not, the fact was clear that the ancient religions of India were breaking down; they were being sapped by Christianity, and if India did not become Christian it would become a country without God. He looked forward to the time—it might be far off, very far off—when the Gospel should be preached to all nations. That result was certain; the only question was whether they should help to bring it about. In conclusion, the speaker asked who of his hearers would devote their lives to the missionary service of the Cross.

The Nyassa Industrial Mission is not unknown to our readers. We told a story some time ago in connection with the life and work of Mr. Deeath, one of the missionaries. Interesting particulars of the enterprise are given in a little paper, Tidings of the N.I. Mission, copies of which may be had from the secretary, Rev. A. Walker, Shoreham, Kent. The Mission will, it is hoped, soon be self-supporting, but at present it requires the encouragement of those who feel for the woes of Africa.

South African Natives.

THERE is now in this country, on a visit from Cape Colony, Rev. J. S. Moffat, formerly Assistant British Commissioner in Basutoland and Matabeleland. Last week he attended, at the Westminster Palace Hotel, a meeting called by the committee of the Aborigines Protection Society, and gave an address with special reference to the Bechuana prisoners.

Mr. Moffat said it was fashionable to sneer at the Aborigines Protection Society and its friends, but his experience led him to think that they knew more about the native races in South Africa than the Colonists did, most of the latter being very ignorant on the subject. It was right that the Home Government should shrink as much as possible from interference with the Cape Government; but public opinion in this country could influence the Colonists a great deal. Although the society was abhorrent to many, there were in the colony many people who wished to do right.

The cause of justice towards the natives met with many difficulties. There was land hunger, to satisfy which it was only necessary to do a little shooting. Then there was the strong desire to compel the natives to work for the whites. With regard to the Langberg campaign against the Bechuanas, he solemnly declared that it was not only unnecessary, but was by interested parties. He knew what he was talking about, because only a few months previously he was Civil Commissioner and magistrate in the district where the war began. After being defeated the people were put into trains at Vrybourg and sent to Capetown, their country having been confiscated. The Cape Government called them rebels, though it had never been proved that they were so, and indentured them to farmers for five years. Mr. Moffat, who could speak their language, which none of the officials could, visited them in the compound where for a time they were kept. Scores of them in the different batches that successively occupied the compound declared that they had not wished to fight. They had defended themselves, but why they were attacked they did not know. They had not come to Capetown willingly, nor were they willing to be indentured to the farmers, for they thought that would mean slavery, as indeed it did.

With the assistance of Mr. Rose-Innes, he tried to bring the subject before the Cape Courts. He selected the case of two natives, but every obstacle was thrown in his way, and finally the two natives were spirited back to Vrybourg. Mr. Moffat followed them, and managed to secure a hearing from the magistrate. It was then said that they were arrested for refusing to be indentured, but the magistrate declared that there was no case, and they were set free. Mr. Moffat thought this was a test case, and that all the Bechuanas would be liberated. The Premier of Cape Colony, however, declared that it was not a test case, and the prisoners were indentured to Dutch farmers in the West Colony. He had nothing to say against the treatment of them by these Dutch farmers. But the question was, What right had the Government to remove the Bechuanas from their own country and practically compel them to work for strange masters? A few of the Dutch farmers were releasing the Bechuanas, surprised, as they had told him, to find that their new servants were civilised people, able to read and write, and

BETTER CHRISTIANS THAN MANY OF THE WHITES.

Unhappily other masters through mistaken kindness gave wine to their Bechuana servants, who for the first time in their lives were becoming drunkards. Unhappily, too, the iron was entering the souls of these people. At one of their meetings they told him they knew, as he and his father had said, that the religion of Christ was good, but now they felt unable to think about it. The advocates of the Government alleged that it was necessary to bring these poor people to Capetown, because they would have starved in their own country. To put it mildly, that statement was not correct. To some extent he rejoiced to say the system was breaking down, but not fast enough, and when Bechuanas were released they were 1500 miles from home, and there was no provision for sending them back.

Rev. Wardlaw Thompson insisted on the illegality of the system applied to the Bechuanas. If it were passed over in silence it would be used against other natives. Dr. Clark, M.P., having twice visited Bechuanaland, could testify that the natives were not savages. Their standard of morality and intelligence was very high. He deeply regretted that the Home Government had not vetoed the Cape measure by which the Langberg territory was confiscated.

Japanese Jottings.

By GEO. C. NEEDHAM.

THE joy of fatherhood in the Gospel of Christ is unspeakable. The royal Master whom we seek to serve in Japan has permitted us to share in this supreme happiness. On one occasion sixteen persons took their stand as confessors of the blessed Name, and at another service twenty-two, one having been a professor in a Christian school, who had not previously taken up his cross to follow Jesus. Some of these may have practically renounced heathenism in the past, but others were fresh from their temples. Whether each one has fully and really entered into life eternal God knoweth. As in the homeland, we have found professed Christians here also "who had no root in themselves," and soon withered away.

I am well persuaded that if a native evangelist can be found who has the Spirit of God upon him, and the Word of God on his tongue, who can preach the Gospel simply and tenderly, it would be an investment well worth the making to send such a man unfettered through the land. There are good men employed by the various societies, but others are needed, responsible indeed to some board or foreign mission, who would move through the empire, heralding the story of the Cross and emphasising the atonement made for sin. I am on the look-out for such a man, or such men, and I am sure funds could easily be provided to support them. Fifty pounds a year would go far in this kind of work.

The tendency of Japanese preaching is towards rationalism. They too often preach Christianity as a comparative religion, arguing its antiquity, its ethics, and its civilisation as superior to Buddhism and other religions. But the lack is in not preaching Christ as the life-giver; as a personal Saviour now ready to save. Their style tends too much towards the classical. Some of these interlard so much Chinese with the native tongue that the common people cannot understand them. They shun the colloquial, and their allusions to Greek and Roman philosphers smack of the pedantic. Have not some missionaries sinned in this direction also? And if our memory has not played us false, there are British and American preachers whose jugglery of words and profundity of mental acquirements have buried far out of sight the Cross of our Lord Jesus Christ.

It has been our privilege to see much of the missionary life at home and at work. There are devoted men and noble women in Japan who count not their lives dear unto themselves, and who in earthquake and flood, in famine and fevers, have stood at their post, and proved their faith in God.

Nagasaki, September 30.

Boys' Home, Venice.

WE have at present 400 lads under our care; the greater part of them are orphans, and unable to pay anything towards their keep. A few are paid for by kind friends in America and England, while five are partly supported by their friends. The Lord has been working among our boys, and lately two have made profession of faith in Him.

One of our lads, the son of Roman Catholic parents, went home for a short vacation this summer. He left quite unexpectedly, so forgot to take any books with him; the only thing, however, he did not forget to take was his Bible. The result was that after a little while the father of the lad came to us, asking us to take also his second son, offering to pay for the two 35 frs. a month.

We have been joined to the American Episcopal Methodist Church, but that church is only able to give us a grant of £200 a year. We are in great need of help just now. Mrs. Hammond, 14, Compton-road, Winchester, will receive the offerings of English friends.

The Kaiser in Jerusalem.

IN a graphic description of the visit of the German Emperor to the "Church of the Holy Sepulchre" at Jerusalem, the special correspondent of The Daily Chronicle of Friday last says:—

"The persistent attempt through centuries to bring all the scenes of the Great Sacrifice under the same roof does not commend itself to those who can read their Bibles and compare things for themselves. This by the way, but it is very characteristic of all things in the Holy Land, and it cannot be passed over without a word of observation. At the very threshold of the bizarre edifice, where Latins and Greeks tout for the sale of candles to the pilgrims, was to be found the Muslim guard to keep the peace between Christians.

"Here, as elsewhere, the meretricious arts of the mere vulgar competing showmen are in too conspicuous evidence. The impression produced is stagey, like a wax-work show, and not in the least devotional—the excess of hanging lamps, the profusion of ormolu, the abuse of gilding, the lack of drawing notable in the hanging pictures, only too visible in 'the dim obscure,' the artificial mystery of gloom, all go to shock and not edify the most devoted believers in 'the Carpenter's Son.' Just outside are to be found the successors of the traders whom Christ drove out of the Temple—down there on Mount Moriah. The beggars, who had all been arrested by a trick and put in prison during the Imperial visit, were indeed absent, and if the traders were not in the courtyard or quadrangle they were inside gloating over the great advertisement the Kaiser's 'haj' was giving them, and hating one another none the less because both sides had a share in acting as showmen to the pseudo-relics which have been enshrined along with the rock-tomb of Joseph of Arimathea. This is no question of Protestantism or Catholicism; it is a question of simple decency, and decency and order are not to be found in the Church of the Holy Sepulchre.

"That here was Abraham's offering of Isaac, which was more probably where the Temple stood and the Mosque of Omar stands; that here, in this very hole, stood the cross of Redemption, that there was Christ's prison, that over yonder was the great agony, and so on—all this could not fail to be destructive of the very idea of devotion. They forced on the mind saturated with Biblical lore a certain sceptical attitude, which made one glad to get out into the warm air under the broad blue expanse of sky, and into the acceptance of the general fact that, whatever incrustation superstition or ignorance has brought upon the place, here at least is holy ground trodden by the feet of Christ and his Apostles."

Miss Procter's Schools.

WHILE on a tour in the East, representing the National Council of the Y.M.C.A., Mr. J. Stuart Holden visited Schwifat, Mount Lebanon. He writes:—

"I found a small branch of both the Y.M. and Y.W.C.A. in the school, each having about twenty members, all of whom were professing Christians, and some of whom I found to be very bright indeed. We had a very blessed time in the meetings I held amongst them, and many seemed desirous of really living for Jesus. I think I shall never forget my last sight of Schwifat, when some of the elder scholars stood upon the high wall, waving farewell and singing choruses with happy faces and voices. Truly God is honouring the work there carried on by Miss Procter and her devoted helpers.

"I regard this work as one of the best educational missions—judged from the spiritual and soul-saving standpoint—across which I came during my whole tour. This definite aim of winning the children for Christ seems to be well borne in mind, and everything works towards its accomplishment. I can only commend the work to the interest of all God's people whose sympathies are with out-and-out work for God amongst the children of the Lebanon."

Further particulars of the work, also a descriptive letter from Rev. J. J. Luce, of Gloucester, are given in the annual report, copies of which may be had from Mr. T. J. Knight, Bush Hill, Winchmore Hill, N. A deficiency of £100 on the building account will, it is hoped, through a challenge promise by a friend, be cleared without delay.

HERE is a riddle for a text, children. What is that which we each one, rich or poor, possess—which cost nothing at all when we first had it, yet which may become worth a great deal to us? It has no voice, yet we hear it every day and hour. It has no body, yet we constantly see it. It is like a faithful friend, for it never leaves us, and will cling to us all our lives, whether we like or dislike it. It will follow us to our graves, and will, I expect, watch even over our tombstones.

Ah, someone has guessed the answer! I have been speaking about names. Yes, that is the short text I shall take to-day:

Our Names.

Now for four short lessons from this short text.

First, let me ask you, "What is the use of your name?" Why have you, each one, a different name? One is Harold, another Jack, another Ethel, another May. Why did father and mother take the trouble to give you these different names? Why should they not be satisfied with simply calling you Boy or Girl, as the case might be?

The reason is, of course, that you may be distinguished one from another. When your teacher calls for Herbert, she wants Herbert, not Tom or Charlie. When a letter comes for Eva, it is Eva who opens it, not Dora or Winnie. Those names of yours keep you separate one from the other. You are not just a crowd of children, all alike, with only one name between you all, like a flock of sheep, or a swarm of bees. Your names are really tokens of love. They show that you are thought of, and watched over with a separate, distinct care. And it is not only by your parents and friends that you are, each one, separately loved, but by Someone far more tender and wise. You know—don't you?—that I mean God, our Heavenly Father. Perhaps you did not think that He knew you by your name, that He cares specially for you. But if He knows everything that can befall even a tiny sparrow, do you not think He cares much more for you, a little child? He loves children. He loves you. And the first thought I want you to take hold of is this: that in heaven your is a well-known name.

And now, having learnt something about the reason for our having names, what can we do with them?

First, let us try to bear a good name.

I have shown you that our names are useful to distinguish us one from another. Now, it is a sad thing, but it is true, that some names distinguish their owners in a very unpleasant way, namely, as being particularly bad. And when a name has got into that state, it is not at all a valuable possession. We call it truly enough a bad name. I trust none of you will ever possess this sort of name. The way to avoid it is to keep yourself from being mixed up with dishonesty, cruelty, and lying. If your life is pure your name will be unspotted. A man with a bad name cannot be trusted. Good men will not employ him. Nobody will have confidence in him. But a good name, as the Bible says, and as you will find, is better than great riches.

Then, try to live so that your name may be a fragrant name.

There are names the very sound of which makes our hearts tender, names which we like to speak and hear. It is because they call up to our mind their gentle, unselfish, loving owners. The very name has a perfume about it, just as the jar that has held rose-leaves is scented by them even after they have been removed. Let your life be full of kind and thoughtful actions; let your lips be filled with loving words, and your name will be sweet in the ears of those who know you. Ah, how fragrant is the blessed name of Jesus! It is truly said of Him, "Thy name is as ointment poured forth." Let us live in his company, that we may catch some of that fragrance and give it forth to others.

Ah, it is very easy to tell you to seek to bear good names and fragrant names. It would never do if I left off at that point. That would not be enough for any of us. If we could, by our own efforts, attain these names, it might be enough for this life; but what about the next? No, I have yet to tell you the most important thing of all. It is necessary for you to have an enrolled name.

What list is it in which your name must be enrolled, that you may be safe in the world which is to come? There are many volumes in which your name appears. There is the roll-book at your school, there is the big family Bible at home, there is the list of candidates for the sports, there is, maybe, the register at your Sunday school, there are the birthday books of your friends. Do I mean any of these? No; I am thinking of a list of names which no one on earth has ever seen—a list which is in Christ's own keeping, and which is called the Book of Life. It is a list of those who are alive, not alive as to their bodies, but alive in their souls—alive unto God. There are many names there of those whom we know and love. Many Bible saints are there. Moses' name is written down in that wonderful roll; so is Paul's, and those of his fellow-labourers (Phil. iv. 3) and countless others of those who lived before and since.

And what of those whose names are in that wonderful Book? Ah, it is they, and they only, who are permitted to enter heaven. It is those "who are written in the Lamb's Book of Life" who go in at those glorious gates, and dwell with the loving Saviour for ever.

Is your name there? If not, there is no reason why it should not be written down this very day. Come to the Lord Jesus, acknowledge yourself to be a sinful, helpless child, cast yourself upon Him, and accept by faith his gift of eternal life. Then your name also will be enrolled in that unseen list, and you will be safe for time and for eternity.

E. J. P. Littlewood.

Be Ye Perfect.

Matt. v. 48.

Be simple, O young Christian,
Make Jesus and his cross
Your love, your aim, your glory,
All other things but dross.

You know the right—then do it.
Let nothing tempt astray;
Be honest, O young Christian,
Care not what others say.

Be loving, O young Christian,
Be noble, brave, and true,
Tender-hearted, kind, forgiving,
As Christ forgiveth you.

Seek only his approval,
Strive not for lower fame;
Be humble, O young Christian,
Let others praise or blame.

Flee Satan's smooth soft whispers,
Flee from his subtle power;
Be holy, O young Christian,
Soil not life's pure white flower.

Be perfect, O young Christian;
By others do not mete
Your life—the Perfect Standard
Is Christ the All Complete.

THE EVANGELISTIC FIELD.

Flower Girls' Mission.

A GRACIOUS work of the Holy Spirit is being vouchsafed to the Clacton-on-Sea Orphanage in connection with our friend Mr. John A. Groom's Watercress and Flower Girls' Christian Mission. Much prayer has been made of late by Mr. and Mrs. James Groom, the resident foster-parents, and all the staff of assistants.

For some time past there has been a deep and earnest spirit of inquiry among many of the elder girls in the institution. A few weeks since, the usual Sunday evening service was marked by evident spiritual power, accompanied by deep feeling. Eight of the house girls, under deep conviction of sin, knelt and prayed for mercy; and one after another they found peace in believing. Night by night since this work has gone on, so that now upwards of fifty of the elder children give evidence of having passed from death unto life. The younger ones are also participating in the blessing.

The Holy Spirit is doing great things also at the London centre of the mission in Woodbridge-street, Clerkenwell. There are indications of the coming of a great spiritual refreshing upon every department of the work. G. H.

Mr. Nix at Tunstall.

MR. JOSIAH NIX has concluded an eight days' mission in connection with the King-street Wesleyan Church, Tunstall. Large crowds of people attended the services, and the mighty power of God rested on the mission from beginning to end. The plain, straightforward appeals of the preacher to the consciences and hearts of his hearers exerted a force which many were quite unable to resist. During the mission about two hundred persons passed through the inquiry rooms, and many Christians were very richly blessed. The evening service on the closing day was an occasion which will never be forgotten by those who were privileged to be present. On the Saturday previous Mr. Nix held a "merry meeting" for the promotion of the Temperance cause. In connection with this and other services of the mission nearly two hundred pledges were taken. J. W. KEYWORTH, Minister in Charge.

Evangelists' Movements.

Mr. RALPH WILLIAMS has recently concluded a fourteen days' mission at the Memorial Chapel, Rivenhall. All the meetings were well attended, and conversions are reported.

Rev. A. V. G. CHANDLER writes that the United Mission conducted by Mr. W. R. Lane at the Bermondsey Town Hall proved a time of great blessing, many each night professing Christ.

Rev. THOMAS WAUGH has just concluded a most successful mission in the Broadway Chapel, Cardiff. Over 200 seekers entered the inquiry rooms; a considerable number of these were the sons and daughters of our families.

Rev. H. HANDLEY, vicar of St. Thomas's, Camden Town, N.W., writes, with reference to the results of a Church Army Pioneer Mission in his parish, that a body of volunteer workers is to carry on weekly street preaching, followed by a mission hall service.

Mr. JAS. SHIELDS, of the Evangelisation Society, has concluded a fifteen days' mission at Horeb Union Church, Padiham, Lancashire. It has been a time of great refreshing to believers, and many have been led to accept Christ as Saviour. D. MUXWORTHY, Pastor.

Under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A., Mr. A. J. SMITH recently held a fortnight's mission in Crieff. The results were the bringing in of a number of young men, the stimulation of the Association in its work, and a great blessing to Christians generally. Since Mr. Smith's visit the Association has rapidly increased in numbers.

During four Sundays of October, Mr. J. S. HARRISON has been preaching at the St. Giles' Christian Mission. Many of the lads from the Homes have professed to take Christ as their Saviour, and some sisters who have wandered into the ways of sin have found cleansing in the blood of the Lamb. Mrs. Harrison helped in the services by singing the Gospel and pointing the anxious to Jesus.

Mrs. E. L. BAEYERTZ lately concluded a sixteen days' mission in Byrom Hall, Liverpool. The meetings were well attended, and deep interest created. Over 300 passed through the inquiry room. The members of the Church were greatly helped and strengthened by the meetings. Mrs. Baeyertz asks for prayers that her physical strength may be increased, as she has been suffering from extreme bodily weakness. F. G. W.

A work of God is going on at present in connection with services at the Gospel Hall, Kilbirnie, Ayrshire. From the first the interest has been marked. The preacher, Mr. JOHN FERGUSON, is greatly helped nightly to tell the story of redeeming love to large crowds. Numbers of men from the Glengarnock Steelworks adjoining come to hear the Gospel. The meetings are being continued, and we are only sorry there is not a larger hall in the town. F. McL.

The churches in Sowerby Bridge, Yorks, have been greatly blessed as the result of a ten days' mission conducted by Mr. HENRY THORNE, under the auspices of the Free Church Council. Members of churches have been quickened and undecided ones led to yield themselves to Christ. At the young people's service on Sunday afternoon, November 6, upwards of a hundred lifted their hands for prayer. Mr. Thorne's visit to Sowerby Bridge will long be remembered. G. S. SMITH, Congregational Minister.

Mr. CHARLES GALLETLY, of the Evangelisation Society, has finished a five weeks' mission in Mr. Charrington's great hall in Mile End. During his stay the congregations have increased, and many hearts were won to the Lord. "He does tell you some straight things, and rub it in thick. I thank God I have heard him." There are not a few who, if they could not quite express themselves in the same manner, would be able to say they thanked God for the blessings they received. Some, whose souls had been stirred up, pressed forward on his last night to shake hands and say good-bye to the man whom God had used to convey blessings to their souls.

Mr. FRED. G. WILLARD, Sion Chapel, East Grinstead, Nov. 27-Dec. 12.

SERGT. PULLINGER, Sunday, Nov. 20, Old National Schoolrooms, Windsor.

MR. W. S. VEALE, Gospel Mission Hall, Hailsham, Sussex, commencing Sun., Nov. 27.

Mr. WILLIAM LUFF, Thursday, Nov. 17, West Green Baptist Chapel, Seven Sisters-road; Sunday, 20th, Hope Hall, Berkhamsted; Monday, 21st, Conference Hall, Stratford; Thursday and Friday, 24th and 25th, Macclesfield; Sunday, 26th, Tring.

Requests for Prayer.

That a mighty outpouring of the Holy Spirit may be felt in the churches of Stony Stratford.

For a mission to be held at Wickham Skeith, Suffolk, by Rev. J. B. Barraclough, Nov. 21 to 27.

For special blessing on the meetings at the Polytechnic, Regent-street, every Sunday afternoon and evening.

Personalia.

Lady Henry Somerset has modelled a statuette of Miss Willard. It is about eighteen inches high, and represents Miss Willard in the characteristic attitude of standing on the platform. A number of casts of the statuette are on sale, the proceeds to be devoted to the Duxhurst Homes.

Rev. A. D. Paterson, Free Church Presbyterian Minister at Madeira, was arrested at Funchal on October 31 on a charge of proselytising. He was liberated on bail. This charge has been hanging over Mr. Paterson's head for more than a year; he is preparing his defence, which will be a general denial of the indictment.

Dr. T. L. Cuyler, of Brooklyn, writes on November 3:—"Last Sabbath I preached for the late Dr. John Hall's congregation. That great church have not given a call to any minister yet. The reports that appear in the different newspapers are mere conjectures, and some have not the slightest foundation. The place will not be easily filled."

Bibles and Tracts.—The British and Foreign Evangelical Tract Society and Prayer Union have inaugurated a movement to distribute Bibles, Testaments, and Gospel portions in various languages, together with the tractate "Are these things so?" by Cheyne Brady. The ordinary work of the Society, the dissemination of Gospel tracts by means of existing missionary agencies and personal effort, is also continued. Further information regarding the work may be obtained from the secretary, Mr. S. E. Roberts, 10, Paternoster-row, E.C.

"WISDOM AND FOLLY."—Proverbs iv. 10—19.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"My son, if sinners entice thee, consent thou not."—Prov. i. 10.

A FATHER'S ADVICE (10).

YOUTH is impatient to be free from restraints of home. Mother's love palls, father's counsel is old-fashioned. In one sense there is no safer place in the world than "tied to your mother's apron-strings." The lad who will listen to his father's advice is bound to succeed, for that fact proves that he has love, reverence, wisdom, and many good qualities which ensure success. As the mother moulds the character in infancy, so the father guides the footsteps up the hills of life when the child is able to walk.

ILLUSTRATION.—The pilot boat guiding the vessel into harbour. The guide leading travellers past the pitfalls and chasms of the Alpine mountains.

BLESSINGS OF OBEDIENCE (10).

Young people want to see and know for themselves. They do not wish to take the wisdom of their seniors. In the science of life, the bad and the good which our parents have proved we have the privilege of learning. They have bought their wise sayings in the expensive school of experience. They offer it to us free.

Long life follows "as the day the night" from obedience "in the Lord" because—

(1) The obedient avoid crimes and mistakes;

(2) They choose the right path without the weakening experience of failure;

(3) Body, mind, and spirit are thus preserved, and last longer.

WISDOM'S PATH (11-13).

What is wisdom? "The fear of the Lord, that is wisdom; and to depart from evil, that is understanding." Teaching in the way of wisdom, and leading in right paths, are just theory and practice. "Instruction" is the food on which wisdom feeds. The man who fears the Lord has all his faculties quickened, and any new fact that he can lay hold of about God or man, he stores by in his memory for future use. Without instruction, religion degenerates into a mere flaccid cant phrase. Instruction is its life.

THE WAYS OF THE WICKED (14-17).

The contrast is between goodness and sin. A man is known by the company he keeps. Heredity and home life are important factors in our education, but our companions are more important still.

Fools to avoid: The cruel boy, the scoffer at sacred things, disobedient to parents, the swearer, the selfish, and the lewd. You cannot get into the company of these without being tarnished. And the stain of an evil sentence, or the sight of a lewd picture, once impressed on the mind, can never be entirely got rid of. Total abstinence from the way of the wicked is the only method of safety. "Avoid it." It is no cowardice to run away from the devil. To parley with him is to be lost. The same devil does not tempt everyone. Some have to run away from a public-house. Some from their own thoughts. Whatever the temptation may be that so easily besets you—avoid it.

THE CONTRAST (18, 19).

As the sun rises in the morning, dispelling the darkness, it gradually reveals to the eye trees and flowers, rivers and mountains, buildings and people, it floods the world with light, making plants to grow and the heart of man to rejoice. Such is the life of a righteous man—innocent childhood, pure youth, active, useful manhood, peaceful old age. Development all along the line.

As the sun declines in the west, all beauteous things are lost sight of, flowers close, damp atmospheres envelop all things, evil creeps out from its lair and stalks abroad. Life is crushed out of all. Such is the life of the wicked. All good is cramped until it breathes no more. Conscience goes to sleep, faculties decay, and only the brute beast remains to devour its fellows.

A father lay dying, and gathering his sons round him said: "My boys, I have no wealth of gold or lands to leave to you, but I have a legacy to bestow which will, if you use it, give you a better start in life than all the riches that men covet. I leave to you the fourth chapter of Proverbs."

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

Protestant Evangelical Communion.

Sir,—I am thankful to see that you call attention to several articles in The Rock upon the present crisis in the Church of England. That excellent journal by no means exaggerates the situation, now accentuated by the Archbishop of Canterbury's charge, that the doctrine of the "Real Presence" in its corporal aspect of consubstantiation may be taught by the clergy and believed by the laity without in any way infringing the law of our Church, or contradicting our Prayerbook and Thirty-nine Articles. And it rightly says, "we believe the Primate's charge to be the knell of the Establishment." Disestablishment may not come to-morrow; but whenever it comes, and come it must, one very important result will be a rapprochement of some kind with the orthodox Evangelical Nonconformists of our land. I do not think that separation of Church and State will come from within the National Church, but through the not unnatural impatience of the democracy, both religious and secular, at Romanism pure and simple being held and practised in it, with the tacit sanction of the legislature.

You call it "a significant and hopeful sign of the times" that The Rock should express a "yearning for home

REUNION AMONG THE EVANGELICAL CHURCHES."

And you add these words, "It is the first time that the hand of Churchmen has been so uncompromisingly held out to Nonconformists." This is not the case, however. Thirty years ago I commenced my opposition to Roman sacerdotalism in the form of Ritualism within the Established Church; and from that day to this I have maintained the conflict, looking up to God to keep me steadfast in this faith. Through his grace I have never faltered or turned aside from this Protestant Evangelical attitude, though I have known many persecutions and endured much hardness for it. Nor has the defection of a large section of the Evangelical section, with which I have been united, during the last ten years, weakened my resistance, simply because I determined always to look away off unto the Lord Jesus. On the contrary, I have been constrained to oppose as strenuously the movement on the part of neo-evangelicalism to make peace with Sacerdotalism, by some form of compromise, in the interests of what is mis-called "Church Defence." Along with that attitude towards semi-Romanism I have always strenuously advocated overtures with Nonconformists who are orthodox. And even in your own columns I have been permitted to suggest more communion, with united communions of the Lord's Supper, and clerical or pastoral meetings to discuss Biblical as well as ecclesiastical matters. Therefore, I strongly support what The Rock says, and suggest that some practical steps in this direction should at once be taken. I believe that to be the spirit of the Gospel, the very mind of Christ.

Little must be expected from neo-evangelicalism, which is slowly, but only too surely, being inoculated with what an eminent clergyman calls "baptismal regeneration and a modified sacerdotalism." As you say, this section has "rather clung to Churchism," and it will do so still more in the future, partly on political grounds, and partly in opposition to disestablishment. No doubt, by and by, some members of this section, which is certainly increasing in numbers as it grows more sacerdotal, will become alarmed, and will return to the "old paths," minority of Protestant Evangelical Churchmen. But this will not alter the situation very much. Nor is "reunion" at all likely as long as the National Church continues an Establishment. The present practical course is, therefore, that of communion and fellowship. There is a form of such communion now in conventions and conferences, and in connection with such movements as the Evangelical Alliance and the Protestant Church Congress. But this has been of a very limited and unofficial character; and to a certain extent inevitably disingenuous on one side. The time and conditions are ripe for something more serviceable in the way of fellowship. Why, then, should not The Christian take some steps towards such inter-communion between the "old paths" minority, known as Protestant Evangelical Churchmen, and the orthodox Nonconformists? It would pave the way for something more real when Disestablishment arrives, and which is certain to come very suddenly, though perhaps not immediately. For some reason or other, such Nonconformists have rather sided with neo-evangelicalism; and I cannot acquit them of blame in the matter. Could not a change of attitude and of action be so secured by The Christian, as to draw Nonconformity nearer to the section of Churchmen represented by The Rock, The English Churchman, and The Protestant Observer? With united fervent prayer, I believe it can be done.

With regard to what you say, that "a distinguished Evangelical clergyman wrote to Dr. Horton that we in the Church of England are helpless, and look to Nonconformists to rescue our country from this detestable 'tyranny' of sacerdotalism," I can only express my dissent. Evangelical Churchmen are not helpless, though I admit that they are more helpless than they were ten years ago. But why? (1) Because a large section of such Churchmen have abandoned the "old paths." (2) Because they have allowed sacerdotalism during the last ten years to secure almost absolute control of all the financial executive of the National Church. (3) Because, along with the political aspect, they cling to the principle of Establishment as a sine quâ non. Has Dr. Horton, for instance, asked that "distinguished Evangelical clergyman" whether the help for which means aid in maintaining the National Church—I believe that was meant by the clergyman—or is he prepared to put politics and the principle of a State Church entirely in the background—in fact, to sink them altogether? If he is not, how can there be any real communion with Nonconformists, much less "reunion"? The laws of the Church of England exclude their ministers from our pulpits, and even more from joining in Holy Communion. And our bishops have carefully insisted on those laws being observed, even where they have allowed all sorts of illegal services. If, however, this "distinguished Evangelical clergyman" is prepared, why should he not encourage and enable The Christian to initiate a movement for communion and fellowship in the meanwhile? Reunion might then come later on in full or modified shape. I suggest that Dr. Horton might well push the matter with his correspondent, as to whether he is prepared to make union of Church and State a secondary consideration. And I add that, if he is sincere, I and many other "old paths" brother-clergy would support him in the movement for inter-communion and fellowship in Christ Jesus. Meanwhile, all who yearn for such inter-fellowship can pray, without ceasing, unto God for it.

Wm. Adamson, Vicar of Old Ford, E.

The Lord's Supper.

Dear Sir,—After dispensing the bread and wine as symbols of his precious body and blood, our Saviour said, "This do in remembrance of Me." If "in remembrance," how can He be present? He also said, "I will not drink of this fruit of the vine till I drink it new with you in my Father's kingdom," clearly implying his absence for a time. He never said that the bread was to become a manufacturable, fragmentary, inanimate part of Himself, after consecration. Such a theory would suggest belief that every door is our Saviour, for He said, "I am the door"; we must believe that every vine is our Saviour, because He said, "I am the true vine." Our Lord expects no man to give up his reason. The command was beautifully simple, and nothing could have been devised to keep in memory his precious death so effectually and so innocently as this little act before retiring to rest.—Yours obediently,

C.

Dear Sir,—I am deeply thankful that you have called attention to the subject of "laymen" officiating at the Lord's table. I have been making inquiry lately on this matter, and was surprised to find that some of our good Evangelical Protestant churches are in the dark as to the Scriptural mode of conducting this service. Some of the darkness of Rome still clings round this ordinance, and I hope that now the subject has been brought forward many of our ministerial friends may be enlightened. We have a great fight at the present day with the doctrines of Rome and her imitators, and it behoves us to be clear and sound ourselves on this and kindred subjects.—Yours faithfully,

Gerald R. Coultas.

Decay of Family Religion.

Dear Sir,—Having recently had occasion to interview between forty and fifty youths (who were applicants through an advertisement inserted in the daily newspapers) with reference to a vacant clerkship, I was sadly impressed with the utter godlessness of their individual and family life. Only two ever went to the house of God, and that but occasionally. Their parents, with the exception of two mothers (who went sometimes), these youths stated, never attended any place of worship on the Sabbath.

The majority of these youths were fairly educated, and most of them admitted that they had attended Sunday-schools or Bible-classes.

This statement is another proof of the increasing indifference to religion on the part of the people, and it is particularly distressing concerning the youths of the metropolis, and should move the hearts of many to increased efforts on their behalf.—Yours truly,

Amicus.

Theatre Meetings at Lambeth.

The Royal Victoria Theatre, Lambeth, has been for many years one of the most popular places of amusement in South London. During the present winter the Bible Christian Methodists are turning it to another use by holding in it a series of "Sundays for the People." In the afternoon there is a P.S.A., and in the evening an evangelistic address is given, often illustrated by lantern slides. The Mission is superintended by Rev. D. J. Rounsefell, the pastor of Waterloo-road Church, who is assisted by Rev. H. W. Horwill, M.A. The success of this effort to reach the inhabitants of a region which has recently become notorious for "Hooliganism" has been very remarkable.

Since October 2, the first Sunday that the theatre was occupied, there have been large and increasing congregations. Many persons have signed the pledge and professed faith in Christ. The expense of hiring the hall is so great that the Waterloo-road Church needs generous support from outside in order to carry on this extension. Rev. F. B. Meyer, B.A., whose own church is in the neighbourhood, has sent a letter warmly commending the movement, and expressing the belief that Christian people could hardly do better than help to relieve the superintendent of financial responsibility. It is therefore hoped that many friends from other churches will come to the assistance of a mission which is actually carrying the Gospel to hundreds who would not be induced to enter an ordinary place of worship. Mr. Rounsefell's address is 9, Kempsford-road, Kennington, S.E.

The Sea.

O glorious, beautiful, frolicsome sea!
Rippling gently o'er golden sands,
Where tiny mermaids and sailors wee
Sail miniature ships to fairy lands,
On greenfringed lakelets, and streams that stray
Midst many a fortress and castle gay.

O thou relentless, treacherous sea!
When the hurricanes rise and storms lash thee,
When thy waves by the tempest's rage are tossed;
How many the lives that in thee are lost;
For low in the depths 'neath thy glistening waves
Are myriad on myriad of human graves.

O wonderful, beautiful, sorrowful sea,
To many the gate of eternity!
The time will come when thy waves no more
Shall leap and dash on this sand-fringed shore;
Thy graves be opened, entombed ones free,
When thou shalt yield up thy dead, O sea!

Harriet Julia Evans.

The Temperance Ironsides.—The annual meeting has been held in Exeter Hall. Mr. T. Kyffin Freeman presided. Resolutions were carried expressing satisfaction with Rev. H. Price Hughes' recent utterances on the question of liquor sellers holding church office, and expressing regret that the Salvation Army should accept pecuniary help from brewers and publicans.

Obituary.

MR. DAVID COLVILLE, GLASGOW.

This Christian brother, who died recently at the ge of eighty-six, was distinguished for his high hristian character. Deeply interested in mission ork, he gave a loved daughter to the mission field. or twenty-seven years an elder in Kent-road hurch, Glasgow, he was known as a succourer of any. He occupied a position of great influence and ealth, being proprietor of the largest steel works n Scotland. One of his sons is Mr. J. Colville, I.P., well-known for his interest in Christian work.

REV. W. MURRAY MACKAY.

By the death of Rev. W. Murray Mackay, senior inister of Young-street Free Church, an outstand-ng figure has been removed from the East End of dinburgh. Mr. Mackay was a native of Halkirk, aithness. Educated at Edinburgh University and ew College, he was ordained to the pastorate of oung-street Church in the year 1859, where he ontinued working until his death. He was thus ne of the oldest ministers in the city, and was enior minister in the East End. Without taking uch part in public or ecclesiastical affairs, he evoted himself for nearly forty years with single-earted devotion to the people over whom he was laced, and by self-denying interest in all that per-ained to the wants of the needy secured for himself he character of the poor man's friend. Some years go failing health compelled him to seek the aid f a colleague (Rev. John M'Cracken), and on his etiral received from the congregation tangible okens of their esteem and love.

DR. F. C. MAXWELL.

Mr. Frederick C. Maxwell, LL.D., of Manor ouse, Clapham, who died on 6th inst., after a ngering and very painful illness, was a son of the te Rev. Robert Maxwell, a highly esteemed Wes-eyan minister. Dr. Maxwell, a graduate of Cam-ridge University, was for some time a master of he Persse School, Cambridge. While there he sserted his rights as a Nonconformist against the nterference of the then head master, by whom he as compelled to leave. This caused loud protests n the newspapers of the time, and although Dr. axwell had to suffer, there can be no doubt that is case aroused so much indignation among both beral Church of England men and Nonconformists, nat more respect was subsequently shown to the eligious opinions of conscientious Dissenters. hortly after his exclusion from the Persse School r. Maxwell began his most successful career at lapham. He was eminently a teacher of boys. is moral influence was great. He was a loyal nd strongly-attached Methodist. For some years e was a local preacher; he took an active part in ircuit and Connexional affairs, and was especially nterested in the educational work of the Methodist hurch.

CANON BELL.

Many will mourn the departure of Rev. Charles ent Bell, D.D., honorary canon of Carlisle, and or over twenty years rector of Cheltenham. Those ho did not know him by personal intercourse steemed him for his broad Christian sympathies, hile others entered in some measure into his mind nd sentiment as they read his poems and other roducts of his thoughtful pen.

During recent years Canon Bell has lived in re-irement at Ambleside, and has enjoyed fairly good ealth. Last week, in London, he attended the edding of his daughter, and repaired to the ational Club, Whitehall Gardens, where he was a ell-known guest. On Friday morning he expired hile in the act of dressing; he suffered from a eart affection, and to this is attributed the uddenness of his death.

Canon Bell was a son of Mr. Henry Humphrey ell, and born in 1819 at Ballymagaigan, co. Derry. e was a graduate of Trinity College, Dublin, and ntered the ministry of the Church of England in 843. He laboured at Hastings, Hampstead, mbleside, and Rydal before taking up work at heltenham in 1872. He was the author of any hymns and poems, also of several exposi-ory and devotional works. Many will recall is warm interest in the Evangelical Alliance; hen at home he boldly advocated its claims, and hen abroad he consistently promoted its excellent bjects.

The Y.M.C.A.

Y.M.C.A., BELFAST.

A week's mission has been concluded at the Belfast Y.M.C.A., where Mr. W. M. Oatts, of Glasgow, was the evangelist. Evangelical meetings were held throughout the Sunday. At the afternoon service the Great Hall, which holds 1600 people, was crowded to excess. Throughout the week evenings the meetings were very largely attended, and many interesting instances of conversion were recorded.

Prior to the public meetings, which were held at eight o'clock, Mr. Black, the general secretary, had arranged for gatherings for young men only, at seven o'clock. Tea was provided at these gatherings, and large numbers of young warehousemen accepted the invitations. After a season of social fellowship, they adjourned to the general meeting. Mr. A. W. Vance, the well-known Gospel singer, with the Fellowship Choir of the Association, led the praise each evening. The closing meeting proved most impressive; at its close a number proceeded to the steamer, where Mr. Oatts embarked at a late hour for Scotland, and sang some hymns.

A number of the local clergy were present each evening. Mr. Oatts's visit to Belfast was the result of an arrangement by which Mr. Black, the secretary of the Belfast Y.M.C.A., is to give a return visit for one week's mission to Glasgow. This interchange of secretarial service might be adopted with much advantage throughout the Associations.

BRIEF NOTES.

The annual meeting of the Bristol Association on Nov. 7 was one of the most successful on record, The Association has nearly 800 members, its junior department numbering over 200.

The new report, issued from Exeter Hall, of the London Central Association, is a model of artistic get-up and of convenience in size. We hope it will be read by all country friends of young men in London.

The autumn conference of the South-Eastern District Union of Y.M.C.A.'s was held at Folkestone on Wednesday, Nov. 9. Mr. J. Steinle, of Eastbourne, accepted the duties of secretary of the district for the ensuing year, in succession to Mr. J. Clarkson Wallis, of Brighton.

Sir James R. Fairfax, president of the Sydney Association, gave recently a reception to the members and their friends, at which there were present six hundred persons. Mr. David Walker, the esteemed general secretary, shortly completes his twenty-first year of service in this position.

In connection with the Totterdown Association, Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Bennett gave an "At Home" on Friday last. It was announced that there would be "a book reception," and members and friends were asked to contribute. There was a large attendanse, and over 600 volumes were received on behalf of the Association.

The work of Mr. A. K. Yapp during the past twelve months, as organising secretary for the county of Lancashire, has been productive not only of much benefit to existing Associations, but in the formation of branches at Blackpool, Darwen, Preston, and Stockport. The new rooms of the Darwen Association were opened on Saturday, Nov. 5, by Lord Kinnaird. Already the Association has some three hundred members enrolled.

A large number of workers representing Metropolitan Associations assembled at Exeter Hall on Tuesday week, Nov. 8, for the annual "Radley's" meeting. Sir George Williams presided, and brief reports were given of the work at many centres. Among the most interesting, perhaps, were those of the French, Dutch, and German Associations in London. The proceedings were varied by an address from Mr. Charles Fermaud, secretary of the Central International Committee at Geneva. When the work of this committee began, twenty years ago, there were on the Continent no secretaries giving their whole time to the work, and no Associations owning their own buildings, whereas there are to-day a hundred and twenty of the former and over a hundred of the latter. Eight new Associations have been started in Finland.

Rev. James M. Gray, D.D., Boston, Mass., recently gave four days' addresses at the Association in Montreal on the general topic of Bible study. He spoke in one lecture on "Tracing the Records; or, how the Bible came," showing how we receive the Scriptures, through the printed Bible, the manuscripts, and various versions, and the testimony of our Lord and his apostles. This address was eminently helpful. In a special address on "How to Master the English Bible," he explained the method which has been associated with his name for some time past of the synthetic study of the English Bible. He dwelt upon the importance and necessity of reading the books of the Bible continuously and repeatedly before attempting an analytic study of particular portions. In two Bible studies he took up the first Epistle of Peter, the first Epistle of John, and the Epistle to the Romans, and proceeded to develop and outline the thought of each epistle.

The Y.W.C.A.

The annual meeting of the Brighton Association was held at the Royal Pavilion on Thursday afternoon last. Lady Chichester, in a short address, said she considered there was much cause for thankfulness and encouragement to go forward. Miss Clark (resident secretary) spoke of her labours during the past two years, and also stated her decision to leave Brighton and engage in foreign mission work. Mrs. Hatt Noble gave a stirring address, and Rev. J. B. Figgis also offered some words of congratulation on the success of the new undertaking.

Lingfield Training Colony.—On Saturday, at the Training Colony in Lingfield, the foundation-stone was laid by Rev. Dr. Paton of a new set of buildings, which will provide accommodation for the unemployed men sent by Guardians and others, and for ten "house brothers," whose life is spent along with these men in their work by day and their social leisure hours. The stone was a memorial stone, on which the words were inscribed, "This stone, laid by his father, perpetuates the memory of W. P. Prayer Union for Israel.—From its initiation some years ago we have occasionally called attention to this Union, the object of which is to band together, irrespective of denomination or society, those who are, or will become, intercessors for Israel. During the past two years fifty branches of the Union have been formed in England and abroad, with monthly meetings for united prayer, whilst many hundreds have been added to the roll of remembrancers. The Friend of Israel, its organ, has been the means of awakening much fresh interest. Further particulars regarding the Union may be had from the hon. organising secretary, Mrs. Osborn-Howe, 16, Westwell-road, Streatham Common, S.W.

THE BOOK WORLD.

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

The smaller annuals issued by the Religious Tract Society are fully up to the well-known standard of excellence. Friendly Greetings (2s. 6d.) has coloured pictures and many engravings. Light in the Home is the old "Tract Magazine" greatly improved. The Cottager and Artizan is bright and beautiful, and sure to be welcome in the homes of the people. For the nursery there are Our Little Dots and The Child's Companion, both of them the "very thing." (1s. 6d. each.)

Dr. Barnardo's Bubbles is a weekly or monthly treat in many homes. In yet another form it appears every six or twelve months, a bound volume, gay within and without. The eighth volume is equal to the best of its predecessors. Such a collection of coloured pictures—115 in number—is assuredly unexampled; and the contents could hardly cover a wider field. Among the series of illustrated articles may be mentioned those on "The British Empire," "Wild Flowers of the Month," "Robinson Crusoe," "Visits to the Zoo," and "Types of the British Navy." Rev. Theodore Wood's Natural History articles are particularly worthy of notice. Poetry, humour, fun, pathos, history, science, art, biography, geography, "Star Studies," are all well represented. (Coloured boards, 3s. 6d.; cloth gilt, 5s. Children's Book-Room, 158, Aldersgate-street, E.C.)

STORIES FOR YOUNG PEOPLE.

A capital volume of stories from life is Brave Deeds of Youthful Heroes. (2s. Religious Tract Society.) There are many excellent illustrations.

O'er Tartan Deserts, by David Ker (3s. 6d. W. & R. Chambers), presents a capital picture of life in Central Asia. There are many exciting situations, as the name of the author warrants us to expect.

The author of "Probable Sons" has given us another striking little story in A Thoughtless Seven. (1s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.) Wholesome words and wise counsels find timely expression in the vivacious pages.

Dr. Jolliboy's A.B.C., with exceedingly clever illustrative drawings by Gordon Browne, may be described as an alphabetic romance that will charm the small people while it leads them into the vestibule of knowledge. (2s. 6d. Wells Gardner, Darton, & Co.)

Rev. Dr. A. N. Malan needs no introduction to "our boys." His new volume, Schooldays at Highfield House, is an addition to the Boy's Own Book Shelf, and its stories, brightly written and well illustrated, will be read and re-read with delight. (2s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.)

Dr. Cubitt's Cubs, by A. B. Romney, and Mother's Little Lady, by Edith King Hall (6d. each), are good little books for children. A more substantial story is The Mystery of the Manor House, by Mrs. Henry Clarke, M.A. (1s. 6d.). The scene is laid in Devon and Cornwall, and there is plenty of movement in the story. (Blackie & Sons.)

A volume of stories by G. A. Henty, G. Manville Fenn, David Ker, W. H. G. Kingston, and other writers of a like fame will hardly require description as to its character, and certainly will need no commendation. Dash and Daring is a budget of near a score tales, longer or shorter, telling of war experiences and sea perils, adventures in Cuba and Spain, Russia, and West Africa. There are illustrations to match the exciting narratives. (5s. W. & R. Chambers.)

Among the latest small books of the Sunday School Union are Four Little People, by Ada J. Graves, and Nelly's Work, by E. Chilton (9d. each). For older children Frank Mundell has produced a capital little volume of Stories of Alpine Adventure (1s. 6d.), in which some of the delights and dangers of the pastime are depicted with illustrations. The Splendid Stranger, a Story of the Monmouth Rebellion (2s.), by Robert Leighton, is a lively book. What with a description of the battle of Sedgemoor, and the appearance of Daniel Defoe on the scene, the pages are as interesting as they are readable.

Phœbe Deacon, by Hude Myddleton, appears in a second edition, illustrated by Caroline Manning. There is animation and morality, and a book which young people may read to profit as well as for entertainment. The Rose of Dawn, by Lilian R. Knights, is a first century tale, dealing largely with Britain at the time of the Roman occupation. The heroine is a Christian who was converted through the instrumentality of a soldier who witnessed the life of Paul during imprisonment. Rev. Robert Middleton, of St. Michael's, Norwich, writes a hearty introduction. It is a point of interest to know that the author is about to enter upon mission work in India. (3s. 6d. each. Jarrold & Sons.)

NEW YEAR ADDRESSES.

Again we welcome "Messages for the New Year" from the pens of friends who have long made it a practice to issue such at the present season.

Wealth out of Want, by Rev. E. W. Moore, is founded on 2 Kings iv. 2; blessed lessons for the present being derived from the old-time story.

Rev. Marcus Rainsford speaks of the Great Helper in An Ancient Truth applied to Modern Life. Scripture and experience are the teachers.

Miss Sophia M. Nugent, in From Desert to Harp, dwells upon experiences and words of David; and the points she makes are founded on appeals to (1) God, (2) the living God, (3) my God, (4) the God of my Life, (5) God my Rock, (6) the God of my Strength, and (7) God my Exceeding Joy.

"Ye are even My Witnesses," by Rev. C. A. Fox, is a searching address to Christians, who are shown to be Chosen for Divine (1) Revelation, (2) Occupation, (3) Communication.

Lastly, we notice Channel Beds, not Pitchers, by Rev. F. B. Meyer, based on John vii. 37. The pages enlarge upon the operation of the Spirit in believers: (1) Effortless, (2) Abundant, (3) Constant, (4) Life-giving.

These booklets (1d. each. Partridge & Co.) are all of a helpful order, and many will welcome them for enclosure in letters and circulation among friends.

The Scripture Pocket Book is now issued in a greatly improved form, brought up to date, with elastic bands round corners. The letterpress pages contain much useful information on days and places of interest. (1s. 6d. and 2s. Religious Tract Society.)

Year by year Mrs. Charlotte Skinner addresses her sisters in Christian life and service. Her new book is Uncrowned Queens. (1s. Partridge.) Whether deriving lessons from the stories of Bible women, or pointing morals from present-day experiences, Mrs. Skinner is a good and wise counsellor.

In her new volume of verse, Sunlit Spray from the Billows of Life, Mrs. M. A. Chaplin shows her broad Christian sympathies and firm adhesion to Protestant principles. The pages bear many evidences of a deep spiritual experience. A portrait of the author appears as a frontispiece. (Boards 1s., cloth 2s. W. Wileman, 27, Bouverie-street, E.C.)

A Haunted Town, by Ethel F. Heddle (6s. Wells Gardner, Darton, & Co.). A story of Scotch folk, the scene of which shifts between golfing St. Andrews and the maelström of London society. Those who understand the broad northern dialect will enjoy the tale, which is lacking neither in the tragic nor the pathetic. But we have not discovered the appropriateness of the title.

Those who wish to have Christmas or New Year cards or calendars for 1899, with mottoes of a definitely religious character, and artistically got up, may be recommended to patronise Mr. E. Kaufman, 5, Paternoster-square, E.C. The selection is varied, but all are pretty and tasteful. The calendars are worthy a special note; two of them have monthly quotations from the writings of Spurgeon and Rutherford.

Dr. A. T. Schofield has issued, through The Religious Tract Society, another series of practical papers on health subjects; and they have been gathered in a neat volume, entitled Health at Home: Second Series. (1s. 6d.) Dealing with cleanliness and food, the training of children and the claims of old age, the laws of health and the treatment of the sick, this is a very useful little book. Dr. P. K. Picard contributes a paper on cholera epidemic.

Having for some years kept an open mind on the relation of science and theology, Mr. J. W. Morden has arrived at deeply interesting conclusions, which he sets forth with much clearness in Was Man Evolved? or, The Theory of the Evolution of Man and its Theological Bearings. (9d. net. Elliot Stock.) In a word, Mr. Morden finds that biological evolution is not sustainable, and therefore ought not to be allowed to affect theological thought.

"Art Thou He that should Come?" By Alfred Porcelli. (James Nisbet & Co. 1s.) Two essays in one booklet. The object of the first is to show that the theory of a "Secret Rapture" has no foundation in Scripture, while eighteen passages are quoted which speak of the Lord's coming as manifest to all. The second is entitled, "The Man of the Sin," and argues that "the Sin" is the great apostasy, and "the man" the Pope. The arguments are forcible.

A new story by the author of "Jonathan Merle" is something worth welcoming. In her latest book, A Bit o' Wool, and other stories, Miss Boyd Bayly has added another leaf to her literary laurels. The four tales are of humble God-fearing folk, and the rolling west country dialect is, of course, much in evidence. Miss Bayly has done for the West of England what Barrie and his successors have achieved for the far north, and even more, for her narratives are not only idyllic in their beauty, but more natural and life-like in their realism.

In The Farmer and the Birds, Miss Edith Carrington not merely pleads for our songsters and the feathered family in general, but shows that farmers do well to protect the birds, instead of slaughtering them. With marvellous diligence, she has collected information as to various birds, their food and habits; and it is abundantly shown that their destruction is not only morally cruel, but economically foolish. Canon Tristram writes a hearty introduction to this very useful little book, which is issued under the auspices of the Humanitarian League. (1s. nett. George Bell & Sons.)

At length Messrs. Cassell have published in volume form, Sacred Art, a work which we have several times mentioned during its serial course. Edited by A. G. Temple, F.S.A., Director of the Art Gallery of the Corporation of London, this handsome book claims to present the Bible story as pictured by eminent modern painters; and right well is the claim sustained by the result. There are nearly two hundred full-page illustrations, printed on plate paper, and accompanied by brief letterpress descriptions. The artists whose pictures have been reproduced, include the greatest painters of the British school, as well as those of eminence in Europe and America. The work includes pictures by Poynter, Leighton, Millais, Burne-Jones, Holman Hunt, Watts, Rivière, Goodall, Alma-Tadema, Calderon, Herbert, Dyce, Martin, Rossetti, Solomon, Hacker, Schmalz, Noel Paton, and Bouguereau. This work cannot but engage the interest of Christians having an artistic sense. Its comprehensiveness is much in its favour, and its varied features indicate it as an ideal presentation volume. (9s.)

The Protestant Almanac is a bold wall sheet published by G. Stoneman (1d.). The martyrdom of Derick Carver is the central engraving of the issue for next year.

Jehovah Jireh, by Rev. R. M. Thornton, D.D., is a harvest thanksgiving sermon preached in Camden-road Presbyterian Church, and published by request. (T. French Downie.)

Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh is publishing in monthly parts a book entitled The Christian's Armoury: Being Three Hundred Answers to Infidel Objections. (3d. each part—two issued. Snow & Co.)

Messrs. J. Dolling & Co., of 62, Carter-lane, Ludgate-hill, have issued some choice cards for Christmas and New Year greetings. The cards are cream-coloured or tinted, folded, and with a choice hymn on the fly-leaf.

Some years ago Pastor Archibald G. Brown wrote a strong paper on A Holy Ghost Church. This has now been issued in booklet form. (1d. each, 5s. 6d. per 100. Religious Tract Society, George-street, Edinburgh.)

The Scripture Question Calendar is a new Bible searching calendar, prepared on the method of asking questions. Prizes and certificates for correct replies, neatness of writing, &c., will be awarded. (1d. E. Kaufmann, 5 and 6, Paternoster-square.

Lord Lister and Experimentation: A Reply. [Mr. S. G. Trist shows himself an able advocate of anti-vivisection principles in antagonism to those who claim so much for what they express by the word "research." (6d. per dozen. London: Anti-Vivisection Society, 32, Sackville-street, Piccadilly, W.)

"A Bible Student" has compiled a useful booklet, entitled Facts about the Bible. Three in number, the essays deal with the book as the gem of literature, urge more systematic study of its pages, and outline the story commonly described in the words "between the Testaments." (George Stoneman.)

Messrs. R. Banks & Son have issued in booklet form half-a-dozen discourses by Pastor Archibald G. Brown. One of them, "Cast Behind the Back," was preached specially to young men. All are sound and vigorous, and will be welcome for distribution by district visitors. (1d. each, the six for 7d. post free.)

The Religious Tract Society has issued a series of almanacs for 1899. First comes The People's, which contains information specially useful in the homes of working people. Then The Illustrated Sheet Almanack, with fine engravings (1d. each). The Tract Society's Penny Almanac is a neat book. The Pocket-book Almanac, interleaved with ruled paper, costs 2d.

A recent publication, under the auspices of the Church Historical Society, is The Controversial Statistics of Romanism, by Rev. Arthur Brinckman. (2d. Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge.) Some of the boldest claims of Rome are examined with care, and the conviction is expressed that the attempt of the Romish Church to bring England back into submission to the Papal yoke is a complete failure.

The Christmas number of The Graphic, which will be published on November 21, is, as usual, printed in colours. There are stories by Grant Allen, W. W. Jacobs, "Q.," H. G. Wells, and Mrs. Steel, illustrated by W. Hatherell, R.I., Sydney P. Hall, Reginald Cleaver and others. The number is well worthy of its predecessors; and its two supplements, by the late Sir J. E. Millais and Lance Calkin, are beautiful examples of colour printing.

For many years we have been familiar with the "Friendly Letter" series of Mrs. V. M. Cattermole, formerly known as Miss Skinner. To all sorts and conditions of men and women kind words have been addressed in the course of this remarkable series. Now the turn of the Postmen has come, No. 33 in the series, and the Letter is as plain and sensible as are its many predecessors. It should be widely circulated in the postal service. (½d. each. Jarrold & Sons.)

Many useful tracts and other publications are issued by The Church of England Temperance Society, 4, Sanctuary, Westminster, S.W. Among the series of penny tracts may be mentioned Temperance Readings, several stories being already out. There are Juvenile Recites, several numbers, at a halfpenny each; also temperance stories and the "Service of Song" for 3d. and 4d. each. Easy Steps to Temperance Knowledge is a primary catechism for Church Bands of Hope. (1d.)

A PALESTINE TOUR

Without the Fatigue or Danger of Travel!

The Sacred, Historical, and Traditional Scenes, and the Characteristic Life of the Land are portrayed with the same vivid reality as one would see them if TRANSPORTED TO PALESTINE!

This is done by means of the PERFECSCOPE (the most practical of all Stereoscopes) and 72 Superb Original STEREOSCOPIC PHOTOGRAPHS of JUDEA, arranged and numbered in the natural order visited by tourists. The resultant illusion (based on scientific truth) is complete, and enables the spectator to see the scene reproduced as the camera saw it. Not only does every detail in the foreground stand out, but the backgrounds recede and occupy the real distances as in nature.

An interesting Book, "Journeys in the Holy Land," carefully explaining each scene, and connecting it with the succeeding one, accompanies the Perfecscope and series of original Stereographs, which are put up in a neat case and delivered carriage paid to any part of Great Britain upon receipt of £2 10s. Sold only by ourselves and our specially appointed agents.

THIS JUDEAN SERIES IS UNEQUALLED AS

An Appropriate Christmas Gift.

FOR CHRISTMAS DELIVERY ORDERS SHOULD BE SENT IN BEFORE DEC. 15th.

SCORES OF PROMINENT EDUCATORS have already given this "Stereoscopic Tour" their hearty endorsements copies of which, with further particulars, will be sent to all who write us.

And the Lord looked upon him and said, Go in this thy might. Judges vi. 14.

THE strength-giving power of a look from the eyes of Christ! Gideon was weak enough. He said, quite naturally, "My family is the poorest in Manasseh, and I am the least in my father's house" (ver. 15, R.V.). But from the moment of that look, accompanied by that summons, he arose in a strength that never afterwards faltered. How truly "God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty."

It was a look of expectation.—Gideon felt that the angel expected him to save Israel. It is a great matter to excite hope in a man. Tell him that you are anticipating some noble deed from him, and you may light a spark that will set his whole soul aglow. It is of immense importance to stir the timid and retiring with fresh conceptions of the possibilities of their lives

It was a look of encouragement.—Those gentle, loving eyes said, as though they spoke, "I will be with thee; do not hesitate to look for Me in every hour of need." Such looks Christ still gives us across the battlefields of life; and if our eyes are fixed upon Him, we shall surely hear Him saying to us, "My grace is sufficient for thee: go in this thy might!"

It was a look of strength-giving might.—It carried help with it. On its beam new spiritual force sped from the speaker to the listener; from captain to cadet. So from the excellent glory one look from Jesus will bring reinforcement. As He looks on us He imparts his strength to us, and says, Go in this thy might. "Be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might."

Church of England.

THE Archbishop of Canterbury is now in residence at his new house in the Close at Canterbury, which replaces Addington Manor.

Peterborough Cathedral has had £40,000 spent upon its restoration during the last fifteen years, and now £10,000 further is said to be required to absolutely complete the work.

Mr. F. C. Arkwright, of Willersley Castle, has presented to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners a vicarage-house, of the value of £3000, for the use of the incumbent of Cromford, Derbyshire.

Dr. Tristram, Chancellor of the diocese of Ripon, has ordered the removal from Christ Church, Leeds, of a number of pictures, stated by a body of petitioning parishioners to be of Romish character.

The appeal by the Archbishop of York for £10,000 towards a fund for church extension in the diocese has resulted in £5400 being subscribed. The contributions include £500 from the Archbishop himself.

The Bishop of Bloemfontein presides over the largest diocese in the world. It consists of the Orange Free State, and of Basuto Land, Griqualand, and Bechuanaland; it is nearly three times the size of England, and covers an area of 130,000 square miles.

Sir William Harcourt in another trenchant letter to The Times recites some glaring examples of illegal practices on the part of the Ritualists, and rather implies that the bishops are either helpless or insincere in their professed endeavours to stop such Romish performances.

At St. Clement's, Belfast, extraordinary scenes are occurring in connection with an anti-Ritualist movement. At the conclusion of a recent service, after loud cries of "Down with Popery," a scene of almost indescribable confusion occurred, and the police had to be summoned to clear the building.

The Bishop of Manchester has consecrated the new church of St. Margaret, Burnley. The building will cost about £6000, and is the second church recently built in accordance with the church extension scheme of the Rev. Canon Parker, rector of Burnley, who is providing an endowment of £150 per annum.

A new church at Sandford Hill, Longton, has been erected at a cost of £5000, and will form the church of a new ecclesiastical district to meet the growing requirements of the neighbourhood. Rev. T. L. Murray, curate-in-charge of the district for a number of years, is the vicar-designate of the new parish. The Duchess of Sutherland contributed upwards of £600 to the building fund.

At a meeting of the Church Extension Society at York the Archbishop of York said the agitation in the Church was subsiding, and that before many weeks it would have passed away by what he hoped would be a definite removal of the causes of the agitation. The bishops had felt to some extent compelled to impose upon themselves, but he hoped that whilst silent with regard to details, they had not been inactive.

Dean Farrar, in presiding, at Canterbury, over a public meeting at which Mrs. Bramwell Booth spoke on the work of the Salvation Army, said the Church of England was doing a great and noble work, but there was ample need and room for all other workers, and he should always hold out the right hand of fellowship to those who were sincerely taking part in that mighty work for God of improving the condition of things in the world.

The Archbishop of Canterbury has made a grant of £1500 from the Marriott Bequest to the Missions to Seamen, towards the endowment of its efforts within the diocese of Canterbury. The Society maintains a chaplain, etc., for the shipping and light vessels in the Downs; and three readers, etc., with two hon. chaplains for seafaring men at Deal, Dover, Margate, Whitstable, and Broadstairs, in the Archbishop's diocese, at a cost of about £765 per annum.

Congregational.

The Archbishop of Canterbury has contributed £5 towards the rebuilding of Whitfield's Tabernacle.

Rev. John Stevens, D.D., who has been resident in Ipswich since his return from China, has accepted the pastorate at Abingdon.

Rev. H. Arnold Thomas, chairman-elect of the Congregational Union, has commenced a brief college pastorate at Mansfield College, Oxford.

The Congregational churches of Newcastle-on-Tyne have unanimously resolved to invite the Congregational Union of England and Wales to hold its Autumnal Assembly in that city in October, 1900. Next year the Assembly will be held in Bristol.

A Forward Movement has been commenced in Prince's-street Church, Norwich. Dr. Barrett pointed out that the Congregationalists of the city ought to provide church accommodation for 3000 more than at present. A committee, consisting of the pastor and deacons of the city churches, was formed to deal at once in a practical manner with the question.

Baptist.

Rev. Dr. Harris Booth, who recently resigned the secretariat of the Union, is reported to be somewhat improved in health.

Kirkdale Tabernacle debt has been reduced from £2400 to £600 through the efforts of the Rev. E. A. Carter (founder of the pioneer mission) and the generosity of the mortgagees.

Rev. F. G. Smith has resigned the pastorate of the church at Crayford, having accepted a call to the Centenary Church, March, Cambs., where he will commence his ministry early in December.

Methodist.

The Methodist New Connexion has commenced a cause at Sowerby Bridge.

On a recent Sunday the Methodist pulpits of Minneapolis, Minn., were occupied by ladies of the Women's Home Missionary Society.

Of the sisters in Bowron House, which belongs to the United Methodists, twenty are this week conducting missions in various parts of the country.

In connection with the Wesleyan Convention at Manchester, it is estimated that the special session for young office-bearers was attended by over 8000 persons.

The President of the Primitive Methodist Conference, Rev. John Smith, conducted the reopening service of the Maidenhead Chapel, after being closed for renovation and decoration.

During a ten days' mission conducted by Mr. William Sampson in Shillington Wesleyan Church, Beds., the old custom of five o'clock in the morning prayer meetings was revived. The attendance was good.

The U.M.F.C. have initiated a forward movement in London. Five building schemes have been initiated at Streatham, East Ham, Willesden, Ilford, and Shernhall-street, to complete which at least £25,000 will be required.

The foundation-stones of the Men's Home, the Casual Ward, and the Labour Yard in connection with the Manchester Mission were laid on Nov. 16. The Lord Mayor of Manchester and a number of other distinguished men took part in the ceremony.

A united mission service has been held at the Vicarage, Stainton-by-Langworth, when addresses were given by Rev. W. H. Osborne, vicar of the parish, and Miss Fletcher, who has been conducting a mission at the Free Methodist Chapel at Langworth. The room was packed.

To assist the Primitive Methodist churches in South Wales, which have been affected by the late prolonged and disastrous miners' strike, Mr. W. P. Hartley, J.P., has promised £100, and the General Chapel Fund gives another £100, provided the Connexion will raise a further £400.

Park Crescent Chapel, Clapham Common, London, which has been closed for some time, was reopened on Sunday last by the London Eighth Circuit of the Methodist Free Churches. It has been purchased for £2000 from the Congregationalists, who are about to erect another church in a neighbouring district.

The United Methodist Connexional Committee, while approving of the general object of the Nonconformist Political Council, has decided that it is inexpedient to appoint representatives to attend its sittings. Several brethren think that the Free Church Councils already existing could take all needful action in relation to legislation affecting Nonconformists.

Presbyterian.

Dr. Pentecost pleads for help to establish a mission in the Philippines.

Trinity Presbyterian Church, Canonbury, is the oldest Scottish church in London, and during the present month will celebrate its 226th anniversary.

Kilmarnock and Ayr U.P. Presbytery has discussed the union question. Dr. Whitelaw moved the motion for approval, and it was carried unanimously.

The amount raised during the past five months for the Free Church of Scotland Sustentation Fund amounts to £58,238, against £55,701 during the same period last year.

Rev. Dr. Gloag, who has been again appointed by the senate of Aberdeen University to take the class of Biblical criticism, says that at the four universities in Scotland the number of divinity students is a decreasing quantity, and that it seems to him to be a matter for early inquiry on the part of the Established Church of Scotland.

Some very significant statistics, showing the progress of Welsh Calvinistic Methodism during the past half century, are contributed to a Welsh paper by Rev. D. Lloyd Jones, M.A., of Llandinen. The increase in population during that period has been 84 per cent., comparing 1841 with 1891. During the same period there has been in the number of Calvinistic Methodist chapels an increase of 127 per cent., preachers 200 per cent., deacons 221 per cent.

The quarterly Gaelic services, under the auspices of the London Gaelic Service Committee, will be conducted in the Scottish Church, Crown Court, Covent Garden, London, W.C., as follows: February 12, 1899, Rev. Angus Mackay, F.C., Westerdale, Caithness; May 14, Rev. William Cameron, E.C., Poolewe; July 9, Rev. Norman Macleod, F.C., Portree; November 12, Rev. John Dewar, E.C., Kilmartin, Lochgilphead. The services begin at 3.30 p.m. on each occasion.

Society of Friends.

At the representative meeting of the Society of Friends, held in London on Nov. 4, the following minute was recorded:—"In the present state of tension between the British people and their nearest neighbour, the great nation of France, we appeal to members of the Press, whose responsibilities are scarcely less than those of statesmen, that all their utterances should make for friendliness and brotherhood. We are confident that the mass of our people have nothing but goodwill towards France, and we trust that the cloud now threatening the two countries, so long linked in amity, will speedily pass away."

Salvation Army.

The amount raised for the Self-Denial Fund in Australasia this year reaches £25,500.

More people are to be found nightly in the Salvation Army Shelters in London than in all the metropolitan casual wards put together.

The General's visit to his native town of Nottingham was a marked success, 160 persons kneeling at the penitent form during the four meetings.

Three Colonial Governments are handing over the boys under their charge to the Army, in order that they may be trained to become useful members of the community.

Mr. Robert Archbold, the new mayor of Jarrow, is a prominent member of the Salvation Army and a temperance advocate. He is said to be the first "Salvationist" who has occupied the position of chief magistrate of any borough.

At the Buenos Ayres Shelter the officer in charge is a Swiss, speaking French and Spanish. His wife speaks English, French, German, and Spanish fluently. The shelter is subsidised by the British and American Benevolent Society, and the local consuls send their destitute charges to the Army to be looked after.

Fallen Asleep.

At Coates, Peterborough, after a long and painful illness, Mr. G. H. BLUNT, aged fifty-seven years, for forty years a local preacher.—Mrs. ELLEN BRETT, of Surrey Lodge, Walton-on-Thames, aged sixty-eight years.—Mr. CHARLES MAGGS, senior steward of the Wilts Mission, and for many years superintendent of the Sunday-schools at Melksham.—Mr. THOMAS P. GODRIDGE, of Wolverhampton, aged thirty-seven, a very ardent Band of Hope and Wesley Guild worker.—Mr. R. W. TEBB, well known for over twenty years as a Sunday-school worker and local preacher in Darlington.—THOMAS NETTLESHIP STALEY, D.D., formerly Bishop of Honolulu, and since 1872 rector of Oakley-with-Croxall, near Lichfield.—On November 9, at Sherborne, Dorset, Rev. B. BAMFORD.—Mr. W. R. PRINGLE, for many years actively associated with Congregational churches in South and North London.—At Bishop Monkton Vicarage, Ripon, Yorkshire, Rev. FREDERICK J. POOLE, aged sixty-eight.—Rev. H. H. WRIGHT, of St. Silas's Vicarage, Sheffield, whose body was found in a mutilated condition at the foot of the Castle Rock, Scarborough.—Rev. J. C. EVANS, of Ripley, from congestion of the lungs, after a short illness, aged twenty-eight. — Rev. C. J. ROBINSON, Principal of Queen's College, Harley-street.—At the age of seventy-six, Rev. JAMES DRUMMOND, for many years minister at Clackmannan. He was "father" of Stirling Presbytery, and was ordained in 1850.—Rev. W. M. MACKAY, senior minister of Young-street Church, Glasgow.—At Edinburgh, Mr. J. WILSON, a prominent merchant and a devoted Christian.—Canon EDEN, vicar of Wymondham, one of the oldest clergmen in the Church of England; he was born in 1803.

The "Missionary Penny" Sale of Work in aid of labourers in China and other lands, also on behalf of the poor, etc., will be held on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, Nov. 23, 24, and 25, from 11 a.m. to 10 p.m., at 30 Dorset-square, Regent's Park. Mrs. Denham Smith will be glad of the presence and help of friends.

Lambeth-walk Mission.—I shall be grateful if any friends can help me with some large sheet almanacs for 1899 to circulate amongst the various floors, rooms, etc., of the famous potteries of Messrs. Doulton and Co. and James Stiff and Sons. There are about 2500 hands employed and I am anxious of putting up these almanacs where they can be easily seen and read. I should also welcome any books bearing on Atheism, Christadelphism, gambling etc. I have easy access to all the men during working hours. GEO. GOODMAN.

The London School Board is addressing a communication to all the licensing magistrates within the district, expressing the Board's strong condemnation of the sale of drink to children of elementary school age.

Finsbury Park Working Lads' Institute —From the annual report of this useful institution it appears that much good work is being done, the workers and friends being much encouraged by the continued and progressive efficiency of the institute as a means of voluntarily bringing the poorest lads of the neighbourhood under elevating, moralising and religious influences, inculcating in them habits of self-restraint and discipline, side by side with recreation and instruction of a healthy and cheery character. Instruction is given in fretwork, drawing, painting, and carpentry; there is a library, an ambulance class, and a band of hope, while Bible classes, church parades at many of the local places of worship, and Sunday evening services tend to keep up a religious tone and supply a moral stimulus. A considerable sum still remains to be raised to clear the conditional promises towards the extinction of the building debt, but it is hoped that with the continued help of friends the workers will soon be relieved of that heavy burden. Communications may be addressed to Mr. Arthur Willis, Hon. Director and Secretary, 44 and 46, Poole's-park, Seven Sisters-road, London, N.

Rescued for Life:

NOTES OF A WAIF'S HISTORY.

By T. J. Barnardo.

My rescue records are still as crowded and varied as ever, although I can only occasionally show those who are interested in such work a case here and there as a sample of the larger family of Waifs who are always under my care, and no bald recital, such as my note-book supplies, can depict in sufficiently vivid colours the facts. Mercy Ratter, for example, looks decently clothed in the engraving. True, her habiliments are not grand, but they are clean and wholesome, and sufficient to keep her covered and warm. But had you seen the rags in which the child was dressed when she was brought by a Police-Court Missionary to one of our provincial Ever-Open Doors, you would have wondered, firstly, how a child could have got into such a confused mass of oddments, and then how, having done so, she could ever have got out of them except by the aid of the scissors! She was also phenomenally filthy. Her hair was matted, and her poor body was thin and emaciated. It needed no telling to discover that the child had been half, or more than half, starved. She needed skilful medical care at once in consequence of her bodily exhaustion. Even after weeks of tender care, her condition was nearly one of collapse.

But poor Mercy's story is, alas, not unusual; it is that of many who come to my door! She is an orphan, both parents being dead. After their death Mercy came under the care of a relative, a very dirty and wretched-looking old man. These two lived in a miserable hovel containing two rooms, which rooms were tenanted by nine people. A little before, her fifteen-year-old sister had died of low fever in the same den, semi-starvation having been one of the exciting causes.

On being admitted Mercy soon adapted herself to the life of the Village Home where she was placed. It was beautiful, remembering the condition of the child when first rescued, to notice how surely, although slowly, she blossomed out under the reviving influences of a tender home life, surrounded as she was with happy, innocent companions, and with sufficient to supply all her wants. Her new life-chapter shall be, by God's blessing, happier than the old one, and a brighter future shall await her!

How much brighter the immediate future is for my Waif rescues is not very easy to tell. As I walk round the Girls' Village Home at Ilford, I am often met by groups of little children, who look at me with glad and merry eyes, some of them bobbing their queer little curtseys, but looking as if they would very much prefer to come up and shake hands or even kiss me. And there are tears in my heart, if not in my eyes, as I watch them; for, accustomed as I am to the sight, my mind recalls again and again harrowing incidents connected with the previous lives of many of these little maids, so that I cannot but feel unutterable gratitude to God for having been permitted to open wide the door of safety for their rescue and upbringing in Christian ways.

A little while ago a visitor friend of mine walked with me round the Village, and as he beheld the groups of merry children, he said, "You must be a happy man." "And you," I said; "are you not?" "Oh, yes," he replied; "but I meant that you must be specially happy when you see the results of your good work." "Exactly!" I replied. "And that is just what I mean. Are you not happy, for you are a partner in it all?" And it was so, for my friend had given with a liberal hand again and again to God's service at our Village Home. To those readers of The Christian who have ever helped in such rescues from the very jaws of death as that of little Mercy, I would say, "Your hearts should glow with gladness and gratitude as you read these lines, for you, too, have been good and loyal partners in this work for Christ."

But I want all my partners to rally round me during the winter just opening, for indeed I sorely need their co-operation. "Have financial matters mended with you?" has been a question asked of me by many of late weeks. I regret to say I have had to reply in the negative! But for very large and unexpected help sent by a single donor who knew of my necessities, I should have been almost stopped in my work during the last two months. As is often the case, however, that splendid help came to tide me over a time of great perplexity, and to enable me to feed, without interruption or question, the children dependent upon me day by day.

I have established the most rigid economies. Indeed, some of my fellow-workers are beginning to look upon me as a skin-flint! I have had to cut down this, and to pare that, and to suppress the other. I have given up every branch of the work that could be given up which was not directly concerned with the welfare of homeless children, and I am quite grieved that I have had to dismiss some of my colleagues whom otherwise I would have been glad to retain. It was clearly, however, a duty, in view of diminished income, to abandon everything that was not actually necessary for the efficient rescue and training of homeless and outcast children. Thank God, that work has not been impaired! It has been carried on unceasingly, day and night, all over England, and I am in hopes that the great deficiency which has been created as between last year and the year before may be made up before this year closes.

CITY OFFICES OF "DR. BARNARDO'S HOMES."

Have you yet visited the City Branch of Dr. Barnardo's Homes, The Children's Bookroom, at 158, Aldersgate-street, E.C.? If not, do not miss the first opportunity that occurs. It is centrally situated, within two minutes' walk of the General Post Office, and quite near Aldersgate-street Station on the Underground Railway. Two of the Home industries (Brush-making and Tin-smithery) are being practised there daily by a number of Dr. Barnardo's boys, and a selection of manufactured articles is always on sale, as well as a full stock of various publications, including Night and Day, Young Helpers' League Magazine, and Bubbles. Subscriptions to the Homes are also received there, and full information about the whole work is supplied by the Manager.

Secretary—Rev. HERBERT MUIR, M.A.

Object—The Promotion of Parochial Missions throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

The Society urgently needs help, as it is without endowments and has to depend entirely on the offerings of those who value Evangelistic Work. It undertakes Missions in a large number of very poor Parishes. The Work being entirely of a spiritual character does not command so readily the support of many rich people, who give freely to charitable objects mainly designed to meet temporal necessities. The Rev. A. J. Harrison is now conducting evidential Missions in connection with the Society, and the Committee will be glad to receive applications for his services.

Naples Sailors' Rest.—Mr. Stephen Burrowes writes that at length the mission ship St. Paul is at work in and out of the ports of the Bay of Naples. The vessel is an English barque yacht of fifty tons register, and was bought for £200. There is a saloon for meetings, and a fore-cabin for use as a reading-room. Mr. Burrowes says: "The British seamen are delighted with the ship and its work. Seamen belonging to H.M.S. Cruiser have made a Bethel flag for the St. Paul. We now need awnings for the deck and a harmonium; and the bottom of the vessel must be coppered. Literature for the ship can be addressed to the care of Consulata Inglese, Castle-a-mare, Italy; other communications to me at 7, Vico 2° del Piliero, Naples."

"The Student Movement."—Since the Student Volunteer Missionary Union and the British College Christian Union have become organically connected, the committees of the two Unions have decided to unite in issuing a magazine which will take the place both of The Student Volunteer and of News from the Colleges. The new magazine will be entitled The Student Movement, and will be issued nine times during the college year, i.e., monthly from October to June inclusive. The purpose of the magazine is to keep students in touch with the college and volunteer movements in this country and throughout the world; also to promote a higher standard of Christian life and of organised Christian work in the colleges, to emphasise the claims of foreign missions, and to give hints and helps for the systematic study of Missions.—Office: 22, Warwick Lane, E.C.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THE new special offer made by our publishers of a 17s. parcel of books for children and young people, for 8s. 6d., is meeting with ch acceptance, and gratifying testimonies are ning to hand. From Penzance a correspon-t writes :—

am very much pleased with the parcel. They just the right sort of books, which ought to be widely circulated among the young all over the d.

imilar letters, too numerous to quote here, ify to a widespread appreciation of this rt.

t must be remembered that these special rs are made on the condition that the cimen copies of THE CHRISTIAN sent at the e time are well and carefully placed with nds at present not taking in the paper. hope for many new subscribers now and in New Year as a result of the personal ommendation of our present readers.

What soul-invigoration is to be found in the rds of the great Apostle, "Casting all your upon Him, for He careth for you"! Never this lower world more exercised by over-efulness than now. Very few persons seem know the absolute rest which comes from ually "casting" our care upon Him. It is so cult to leave our care with God. We so often e it to Him and forthwith bring it away in. God only can relieve the trustful heart ts care. "A truly conscientious person does and cannot cast off care by giving it into hand of an incompetent, heedless, unreli-e person. Herein God's offer to bear our l of anxiety is seen to be incomparable, who so able, so willing, so all-seeing to ceive the whole of the responsibility, even to the remotest relations and consequences, as God!" When the deep meaning and pathos of this wonderful fact, "He careth for you," is allowed to filter through into the troubled heart, will not its own most natural comment be: "Why not let God be my caretaker, my burden-bearer, my peacemaker, since He is fitted to bear both me and my care?" Why not? The answer can only be: There is no valid reason why God should not be my own "caretaker."

One topic recently under the consideration of the Christian Endeavour Society calls for more than a passing allusion. We mean that of "Christian recreation." To say that recreation is Christian only when it is re-creation does not speak the whole truth. Recreation needs to possess a distinctly Christian element if it is really to re-create the entire human system. Recreation that touches either the mental or physical nature, or both, to the exclusion of the spiritual, does not effect a complete re-creation. "Its only legitimate end is renewal of strength, new fitness for hearty and vigorous toil, new vigour of body, new elasticity of mind, new courage of heart, new strength of will. Any form of pleasure that does not give these is sin. Amusements are to be tested by this standard. Do they re-create physical energy, moral enthusiasm, holy desires, strength of will, ardour for high and holy living? Do they send one forth to common duties contented, joyful, strong, more capable of doing God's will in the humble or exalted duties of daily life?" It is in this wise way that The New York Observer expounds the subject. Surely recreation, as here laid down, will not fail of the Divine intention!

Men who have served some thirty or forty years in the ministry will testify that the conditions of their work are more difficult now than they ever were before. These conditions are not so much intellectual as moral and social; indeed, one of their regrets is the disappearance, to a large extent, of the thoughtful reading young man, who used to give them some of their best and most useful work to do in training and preparing him for his life's calling. What has caused the change? We think it comes mostly from the pressure of business, which makes men too weary to turn to stiff books at night, or to attend religious services; which robs them of the buoyancy and healthy enterprise that tempt a man into other pursuits. A few conquer, but the great bulk are exhausted. On Sunday the effect of the six days' toil can be seen in almost every church, in the attendance, and, in too many instances, in the kind of services held. Dr. Henson, chaplain to the Bishop of St. Albans, says :—

I am convinced that an unconscious effort to match the tastes of the giddy and emotional urban folk, far more than any real religious conviction or any innate bent towards anarchy, lies at the root of the ritual eccentricity which now distresses many sober-minded Churchmen and perplexes the Bishops.

The worship of mammon prevents the worship of God.

Dr. Butler, Master of Trinity College, Cambridge, admits that fewer of the ablest young men enter the ministry of the Church than used to be the case, and that "our young men attend College Chapel less than they used to do." He thinks that though they sit loose to the creed of the Church they are not far from the Kingdom of God. In his volume of sermons, preached in the College Chapel, he says that he cannot give these young men guidance; he can only offer them sympathy; and he longs for some fresh voice to be heard to which young men would give heed. Yet his own words have a ring of sincerity and a message of truth that ought to arrest attention, and lead to Christian living. He calls on young men to "put truth, reality, faith, conviction into every corner of their life." He warns them not to rest in half truths, and not to believe that either the voice of the Church or the voice of the people is the voice of God.

Young men, there is no such outward voice on earth, and there never will be. The only "Voice of God" that you will ever hear on this side of the grave is the voice of your conscience, speaking to you in your least selfish moments, and informed by the highest and least selfish teaching of your times, bidding you be pure and true, do justice and love mercy, and walk humbly with the God whom you serve.

Dr. Robertson Nicoll, at a meeting commemorating the 150th anniversary of the Carr's Lane Chapel in Birmingham, said that the first business of the preacher to-day was to aim at the conversion of souls, not to edify the saints. He rarely heard a Gospel sermon nowadays. Ministers seemed to take for granted that all in their congregations were converted. If they do, they make one of the most lamentable mistakes possible. It is imperative that those who present the ultimate spiritual alternative should realise and preach that no outward respectability, or morality, or blamelessness of life can take the place of the radical heart-change demanded as the essential condition of entrance into the kingdom. We sometimes forget that the announcement of this condition was made, in the first place, and with all impressiveness of manner, to one who was a leading religious rabbi. Preachers can do no better than repeat the same message in the same manner, and to the same people. It might be well, perhaps, to begin with themselves.

A representative of The Daily News has been to see "Our Barbarians at Play," i.e., the men who countenance glove-fights. It is a terrible revelation of the savage condition of a certain section of the people who live in streets so near to us, and who pass by the doors of our places of worship every day. The only comfort about the narrative is that it is written with an intense loathing of the whole exhibition, and that would not have been the case with a great many of our papers some years ago—we do not include The Daily News. So long as we have scenes like this allowed by the law constantly going on amongst us, so long can we do with the efforts of as many Christian workers as can find their way into the darkest places of our great cities.

It was not the mere blow or the collapse of the boxer that was the most unpleasant thing. It was the inhuman yell of delight that broke from every part of the hall, with a savage ferocity that was simply horrible. At any rate, it looked like the killing of a man, and they were simply frantic with delight.

Another example of human depravity is seen in the case of the man Tomlinson, on whom the terrible sentence of penal servitude for life has been passed for the attempted wreck of a Midland express. That such occurrences should be possible under the conditions of civilised life to-day is a testimony to some diabolical agency at work in human nature. Indeed, a belief in the existence of a personal devil, whose delight it is to use human instruments for these accomplishment of his evil designs, is borne in upon us in all these awful criminal tendencies. That creatures made in the image of God should be capable of such wickedness is incredible apart from such a theory. It explains facts that otherwise stand out as hopeless enigmas, and though it does not lessen the responsibility of those who voluntarily hand themselves over to his influence, it throws light on more than one aspect of sin in its origins.

It is curious, to say the least, that so many Christian people, with these facts staring them in the face, should so frequently speak with a cheap humour of the evidence and personality of the Evil One. To do this is to endanger the attitude of abhorrence with which evil itself should always be met, and to lose the edge of antagonism against his power and influence of the world. And it is inconsistent with the bearing of our Lord towards the question. He confessed that He had "come to destroy the works of the devil," and He ever spoke of the source and origin of evil as personal. Such passages as Matt. iv. 10, xiii. 28, xvi. 23; Mark iv. 15; Luke xxii. 31, etc., are not capable of being explained away. He who knew most about the spiritual life and its dark mysteries always spoke in this unmistakable way. And it is unquestionable that the leading thinkers of every school are slowly but surely returning to the earlier and more Scriptural view of the origin of evil. It flows not as a vague influence no one knows whence, but from a diabolical and hateful person, in bitter enmity against God and man.

In view of the recent agitation in Canada on the question of prohibition, it is interesting to find the testimony of Mr. Vice-Consul Kating in a report issued from the Foreign Office on the working of the Maine Liquor Law. While he allows the doubtful effect in large towns (where it is seldom loyally enforced), he is clear as to its excellent effect in the country districts, where, largely through its influence, the farmers and their labourers have become very prosperous as compared with their condition forty years ago. On the whole it resolves itself to this position — that where public opinion is overwhelmingly on its side, prohibition will work successfully; where there is a considerable minority against it the contrary is the case. It is clear that in this, as in other cases, those desirous of reform must educate the people to a belief in it, before legal enactments will suffice to enforce it.

Another injustice! The retail sellers of alcoholic liquors are not directly represented in the House of Commons! The brewers, of course, are powerfully represented. But this is not enough; the retailers mean to win one or more seats for themselves at the next election. Temperance men must keep an eye upon their proceedings.

Our neighbours across the Channel, with whom we have not been on the most friendly terms of late, are setting us an example that we may do worse than imitate in temperance reform. The latest development of the French Temperance Society against the use of spirituous liquors is the establishment of a cheap temperance restaurant.

Temperance in this case does not exclude the use of a limited quantity of wine and beer with the meals, but all spirits are prohibited. The Society has no fewer than 380 branches in France, and is obtaining support from many educational institutions.

It appears that General Gallieni, the Governor of Madagascar, who is an absolute teetotaler, is a member of the Society, and is doing his best to limit the use of alcohol in his colony. The Bishop of Nancy is another leading member, and the manager of the Paris and Mediterranean Railway is promoting the interests of the Society among railway employees. To all who believe in total abstention from alcohol in any form, this may seem only a half and imperfect measure. But is not one step in advance, if only a short one, better than no progress at all in the struggle with the evils of the great drink question? Is not this God's method, "little by little"?

Mr. Albert Spicer, M.P., read a few nights ago at Birmingham as important a letter from Dr. Dale as, perhaps, any that has been published in the Life of Dr. Dale just issued. He received it when he was returned to Parliament in 1892. It relates to that deterioration of character and life which too often is caused by success and a change to other scenes.

You will not think that it indicates any distrust of you if I say that you will not do amiss if you think over the men whose moral fibre deteriorated as the result of entering the House of Commons, if you ask how the deterioration came about. Your own habits of life are of a kind to leave those who love you no anxiety in this respect; and yet strong men have sometimes proved weak.

The new habits of life, the new and powerful influences of the society into which many members go for the first time, the new ways of looking at things which are presented to the neophyte, the sense of being bound to a party, the method of compromise by which so many questions are settled—all these are apt to lower the tone of the soul. A Christian may not refuse the call to enter Parliament, but he will do well to accept it with grave fears lest he should succumb to influences which have laid others low.

An examination of the coloured pictures issued with the forthcoming Christmas numbers of the weeklies and magazines raises some disquieting thoughts regarding the present sentiment on peace and war, and suggests that we are just now being well-nigh submerged under a wave of militarism, for the majority of the coloured plates which adorn the bookstalls and sell in large numbers deal with battle scenes on land and sea—many of a revolting order. John Ruskin somewhere says that we can best gather a true impression of a people's life from its art. If so, we are just now in a bad way on this question. It is shameful that the day on which the Prince of Peace was born should be associated with such bloodthirsty scenes. These pictures, unfortunately, are largely hung up in nurseries, where little children are deeply influenced by them during their tenderest years.

The exposure of the condition of continental armies, especially that of France, ought to have a very sobering effect upon those persons at home who clamour for every youth to be compelled to join the army for a short term of service, and then be liable to come up again when called to do so. One of our cheap, widely-read journals recently attempted to show that conscription would be a good thing for the working classes. But the evidence from many quarters in France is to the effect that the barrack has received the youth of the nation "sound and clean to return them polluted." And the result of it all is, according to one witness, "a people vitiated, stultified, and servile." In Russia also there is a deplorably backward state of affairs, largely owing to military burdens, and yet working men are told what a good thing conscription is! For every 7700 inhabitants of the Caucasus there is only one elementary school. In the Caucasus Russia spends £150,000, mostly on secondary and high schools, but on her army of over 200,000 men she expends £5,000,000. Would the English people like such a state of things? The Czar evidently does not.

According to the Boston Congregationalist the late Mr. Bayard, recently American Ambassador to this country, seldom wrote a letter without attaching to it a quotation of a distinctly spiritual character, or else enclosing a leaflet that would carry some consolation or inspiration to the person addressed. The same paper goes on to say:—

If we could gather up the total of these messages, they would constitute a series of services to the world not unworthy to rank with the dead statesman's best public achievements. How refreshing it is when a man, in the midst of many cares and obligations, does not neglect those quiet, unnoticed ways of sweetening life for others. Wordsworth was right when he called "the little unremembered acts of love" the "best part of a good man's life."

It is very needful, however, that the accomplished man who used to do this should be followed as much in the wisdom of his choice as in the act itself. Such a habit can only attain its end when it is done with a careful eye to suitability, and an entire absence of superior assumption.

A new definition of diplomacy, and a good one, was given by Sir Edward Grey in a recent speech, in the words:—

I look upon it as one of the first duties of diplomacy to speak the truth, and to make the truth agreeable.

It is to be feared that this has not been the case with diplomacy as a whole, which has been remarkable rather for studied ambiguity than for plain speaking, the ambiguity later on resulting in perilous misunderstandings and painful irritation between the parties.

A remarkable memorial is being distributed for information, signed by 336,250 women of the United Kingdom, drawing attention to the need of some official public control over the convents and nunneries in this country, in which the 20,000 nuns who have entered them are practically incarcerated. It points out that numbers of young girls of tender years are induced to enter these places in moments of enthusiasm, and to take upon themselves solemn and life-long vows whose significance they are not capable of understanding. They are then consigned to "hopeless imprisonment." Many of the convents are surrounded by high walls, and have underground cells; and it is said that there are in use "steel-spiked whips and other terrible instruments of torture." It is surely a reasonable demand that these institutions should be carefully supervised, and their methods of dealing with the souls under their care looked into by an impartial authority. If they were not religious and Catholic, the secrecy in which their condition is shrouded would not be endured for a single day.

The corrupt state of the religious world in Spain may be judged from a recent remarkable enactment of the Spanish Minister of Justice to the effect that all pensions granted to nuns in 1837 shall be henceforth null and void, except where the party interested can be proved to be alive. The reason of this is that in that year it was provided that every nun at that time living should have a pension for life, and that since then not a single death has been notified by the Roman Catholic authorities to Government! As the oldest nun in 1837 was seventy years of age, the Spanish Minister is growing sceptical about her existence.

One of our contemporaries is assured by a representative, who is familiar with the men of Fleet-street, that indifferentism and agnosticism are what pervade the daily paper offices, and not either Romanism or Anglicanism. This testimony has an appearance of finality about it, though one cannot help wondering at some things in these dailies, and at some things not in them, if there is no ecclesiastical bias behind the door. Even admitting that the pervading influence is indifferentism, this generally takes more kindly to Romanism in one form or another than to any form of the Evangelical faith. There is an affinity between them.

National Success and Christianity.

A RECENT interesting discussion in the pages of The Spectator, between Bishop-designate Welldon, Cardinal Vaughan, and others, upon the subject of the connection between the Christian religion and national prosperity, suggests the following reflections.

For while Dr. Welldon appeals to current political facts favouring the view which he propounds, the Cardinal points to Scripture with the opposite effect, and neither has shown how the discrepancy may be reconciled.

The Bishop says: "As the Christian nations of the world are evidently gaining in importance and influence upon the non-Christian, so are the non-Catholic nations upon the Roman Catholic." The Cardinal replies:—

If the theory is sound it must be applicable to all time...I find the balance of national prosperity sways and shifts in different and often opposite directions. At present it indeed points to Protestantism; a few hundred years ago, say in the time of Philip II. of Spain, it pointed to Catholicism. But, as a whole, its tendency is most certainly in favour of Paganism and rank infidelity.

He then with crushing effect proceeds to show that all the teaching of the New Testament favours the view that poverty, suffering, persecutions, and martyrdoms are the testimonials of truth, and the prospect held out to its witnesses in this world; and not prosperity or national success.

To many there will seem to be truth on both sides, but how to reconcile them the correspondence sheweth not; for when the Bishop seeks to escape from the Cardinal by referring the foretold adversity to another time and state of the world than ours, and attributes it to the paucity of the number of Christians then, surely he gives his whole case away. For that is to say that the strong and the many are favoured of God, while the few and the weak are unprotected. It implies, too, that the causes and principles that led to the crucifixion of Christ were temporary and transient—a theory which violates history, the teaching of the New Testament, and the visions of the future vouchsafed to its writers.

But in truth there is a simpler key to the rock. Christianity has more than one character. It is moral and it is personal. That is, it not only sets forth to the world the great ethical principles of action, which were taught before it was born, by the voice of conscience and the laws of Mount Sinai. But it sets them forth in association with the Person of Jesus the Nazarene, the gentle, the patient, the meek, who was crucified and slain.

When, therefore, we see prosperity attaching to certain nations that profess Christianity, that is the result of, not their faith and love to Christ, but of the moral strength within them, which frequently is found associated with the profession of his name. That is the solution of Cardinal Vaughan's riddle. Romanist and even Pagan nations have at times been ruled and administered on principles of justice and right. Some of the strongest nations have been called Christian, some have been heathen. Their strength has lain not in their creeds, but in the morality of their public law.

In so much then as Christian nations have surpassed non-Christian in these qualities, the Word of God has been the more strikingly vindicated which tells us that "righteousness exalteth a nation." And in so far as Protestant Christian nations have surpassed in righteousness Catholic Christian nations, in such measure has God increased their strength and influence in the world.

That is the reason of the truth of Dr. Welldon's quotation, that "The unique greatness of the British Empire dates from the Reformation;" and justifies his conclusion that "the Reformation, in spite of its many failings, was still the greatest step which has been taken since Christianity was born, in the intellectual and moral progress of mankind." The principle is stated in the simplest language in Rom. xiii., where, speaking of civil rule, at that time in Pagan hands, St. Paul says, "For rulers are not a terror to good works, but to the evil...Do that which is good, and thou shalt have praise of the same."

So long as they act on this great fundamental law, nations will prosper, be they heathen or Christian. If they reverse it, history proclaims their fall in no uncertain tones. So that the Bishop is right when he claims prosperity as the natural result of Christianity, and specially of Protestant Christianity, yet not because of any dogmatic truth that it holds, or of any dogmatic error that it protests against, but

BECAUSE OF ITS MORAL STRENGTH.

But turn the shield and look at its other face. Then we shall find that, in a certain degree, the Cardinal is also right. Christianity is, when rightly understood, not only a moral institution, but it is the Cause of a Person. It is Personal first and moral after. It is moral because it is Personal. "If ye love Me," said its Founder, "ye will keep My commandments." Now, the lovers of Christ are always a little flock. For it is a matter of Divine revelation to the soul that He should be known in this Personal sense. "No man knoweth the Son but the Father." "It pleased God to reveal his Son in me," said St. Paul. In this sense there are therefore no Christian nations on earth. And the people who, severing themselves from the principles and practices of national Christianity, attach themselves to the rejected Nazarene, and seek to be guided by his will alone, will ever be liable to the experiences of their Master, to the poverty and suffering which are so often set forth as the WAY-MARKS OF THE CHRISTIAN'S FAITH.

That Romanism as a national religion bears these marks of truth not even the Cardinal will claim. Nor can the Bishop claim them for Protestantism. The distinctive characteristics of vital Christianity—that is, of personal devotedness to the Lord Jesus Christ—are to be found only in the regenerate. And the most remarkable visible effects of regeneration are not external morality—that, indeed, is the common property of a very large part of every civilised community—but fidelity to revealed truth, the exaltation of Christ's name and cause and Gospel above all other aims in life, and a certain absence of worldly motive, be it fame, or pleasure, or wealth, in its subjects.

All these qualities tend to separate the servants of Christ from the world, to make them unpopular first, and in time of special crisis and excitement to bring them into tribulation.

And thus this anomaly may occur. The nation that is strong and prosperous by reason of its moral government, may become the oppressor and persecutor of the followers of the Crucified. But if so, it will totter to its fall. And as the Cardinal has quoted Spain for his theory, I point to that people, as they are now, in proof of what I say.

The Priesthood of Believers.

BY DR. BALGARNIE.

"He hath made us a kingdom and priests."—Rev. i. 6.

WHILST all true Protestants of the Church of Christ are justly indignant at the pretensions of official priestism and the abuses which proceed from it, we must take heed that the priesthood of believers is neither forgotten nor ignored. When Christ came and redeemed the world by the one great sacrifice of Himself, "once for all," He put an end to the Aaronic order of priests and Jewish ritual, and instituted a new and spiritual kingdom and priesthood, including all who love Him in sincerity and truth. Converted "Israel" was henceforth "a royal priesthood," and their work and privilege was not to consecrate altars, or burn incense, or offer gifts and sacrifices for the living or the dead, but to "show forth the praises of Him who had called them out of darkness into his marvellous light." All God's children are priests.

The immediate basis of every believer's right to this privilege of service and intercession is not, as many have agreed, the fact of their redemption, for Christ has "made propitiation, not for our (believer's) sins only, but also for the sins of the whole world," but the work of the Holy Spirit in their regeneration and conversion.

All men have been redeemed, but all have not been made "new creatures in Christ," and it is believers only who have entered the kingdom, and been "made kings and priests unto God." The distinction is important. The unconverted clergy of any church are not included in this priesthood at all. No human ordinance can confer on them the right and privilege. Until they have been "born anew" they cannot see the kingdom of God. Their assumption of the title and office is impotent and impious. They are blind leaders of the blind, and a common destiny awaits them and their victims.

But all converted men and women are priests and priestesses unto God. They stand with Christ between the living and the dead. They can pray, and ought to intercede, for those who do not or cannot pray for themselves. Parents for their children, masters for their servants, teachers for their classes, preachers for their hearers, the church for the heathen, the living for the spiritually dead, should pray, and pray ceaselessly, for their conversion and salvation.

But a believer in Christ does not cease to be a priest, in this New Testament sense, when he becomes a minister of the Church. He becomes then a leader, pattern, representative of the "priests unto God," belonging to his congregation. His work is to show other believers how they are to exercise their priesthood and kingship. He leads them in intercessory prayer, in public religious service, and, in so far as he has himself attained, in Christian character and conduct. "The Minister's function," writes Bishop Lightfoot, in "The Christian Ministry," is representative without being vicarial. He is a priest, as the mouthpiece, the delegate of a priestly race. An emergency may arise when...the layman will assume functions which are otherwise restricted to the ordained minister."

Christ Church, Westminster-road, S.E. —A prayer-meeting will be held in the Lower Exeter Hall, on Monday, Dec. 5, at 5 p.m., for the purpose of commending to God in prayer, Rev.. F. B. Meyer, starting for a two months' mission tour in India (Mrs. Meyer accompanying). All friends are invited to be present.

A Marvellous Experience.

COUNTESS SCHIMMELMANN SAVED FROM DROWNING.

The following graphic account of imminent peril of death by drowning, and of ultimate deliverance, was dictated by the Countess Schimmelmann, at Port Huron on November 3, and is sent to us for publication. The accident happened three or four days previously. We feel certain that the many friends of the Countess in this and other countries will unite in sincere thanksgiving for her restoration, as we trust, to a further period of service.

On October 30, at Detroit, coming from a meeting I held for the railway men, I had just time for a cup of tea, and then Miss Stewart came to fetch me for a great meeting in one of the large churches where I had been announced to speak that evening. Being a little late, I hurried to come on shore, and we did not notice that a steamer passed alongside the yacht. This made the Duen rock very much.

Paul had handed me up to the gangway, which was not more than a yard long. The captain held out his hand to receive me. At that moment the gangway, which was attached with ropes to the side of the yacht, but not to the quay, gave way exactly like a trap-door. I felt it, and quick as lightning put my hands out while I fell. I hoped that the captain would catch them. He caught my silk pocket-handkerchief which I held, but it slipped through my fingers. Down I went.

Maybe the plank struck me on the head, because my hairpins were broken and my hat torn off. I felt myself dropping into the water and sinking rapidly and deep. But it stood out clearly before my mind that I had to come up three times before I was drowned, and I said to myself, "You have to keep your presence of mind in the highest degree if there is to be any chance of being saved."

I was aware of two difficulties—my own weight, and the heaviness of my clothing, which partly was padded with cottonwool, and which I felt sucking the water in like a sponge. The second difficulty was the total darkness. I was not aware of the threefold danger of this place, which has made the people of Detroit give it the name of

These dangers are that the swinging ships crush everything between them and the timber quay, and that below the water there are broken beams of an old structure, half-broken timbers full of nails, and hooks, and points which generally keep down everything that happens to drop among them.

I sank and sank, ever hoping to touch the bottom so that I might get something against which my feet could give me a push upwards. As far as I know I did strike something hard, which gave me an impetus upwards. I then felt the great heaviness of my clothes, and began to undo my cape. Yet, while I managed to unfasten it except one safety pin holding the collar, the thought flashed on me that while I was having my turn upwards I could not know at what moment I might reach the surface, and it would be wisest to put my hands up as high as I could over my head, in case I might grasp anything or be grasped by somebody, which latter I fully expected. But I came up and came down again, and there was nothing to catch at.

Then I sank deep down for the second time, and I felt I was drowning. Yet not a throb of heart, nor an unquiet feeling, nor any sense of chill, fear, or horror was about it. I thought, "Those in the world up there will say I had a fearful death being drowned, while there is no death for me here below. I am just waiting for God's angels to come and carry me home to glory."

I REMEMBERED A DREAM

Paul had years ago, where he saw me dropping down, and, while I was dropping, angels came from heaven, lifted me into a beautiful chariot, and took me upwards.

This I expected, and meanwhile I turned up for the second time. This time my cape was over my head, and though I, up to that moment, had purposely kept my lips closed to keep as much as possible my breath within and the water out, I thought it right to try one call, as I expected they would not know in the darkness where to fish for me. Yet the attempt was not carried out, because, as soon as I opened my lips, the water gurgled into me and made me sink again.

This time it occurred to me: "No, you are not going to die. God does not change his plans. This call to America was a too positive thing, and for months I have felt myself to know that God, for some cause or other, will have me this winter at Chicago. There is work for me to do yet. The promises given me long since are not as yet fulfilled. Struggle on upwards; it is not God's will that you go home."

Generally, drowning people, when they turn up for the third time, do not come to the surface more than the top of their head. But somehow I had freed my arms from my cape, which was floating behind me, and used my arms in swimming movements. I struggled upwards, and saw the plank from which I had slipped hanging over my head. I grasped one corner, but it was wet and slippery, so that my fingers slipped off, and I was now finally sinking. But again, though I actually was drowning,

NOT A SINGLE FEELING OF FEAR.

I thought, triumphantly, "O death, where is thy sting; O grave, where is thy victory?"

Again, I thought: "I cannot understand this; my sons are not as yet ready to do the work of winning souls for the Lord without me, and I know that I am not meant to go before this takes place." Here for a few moments I lost my senses. Meanwhile the mate, who was the only one who could swim, had jumped overboard; but having a long coat buttoned down to the feet, he was unable to swim and was held by one hand by the sailors on the yacht, while his feet were on a fender hanging alongside under water. A few steps further Paul had been hanging down in the same way, but they groped in vain as they could not see anything.

The mate then believed he saw the water darker in a certain place. He dashed in up to his shoulders and got hold of something. It was the outer edge of my cape, which was by this time full length above my head. Reckoning the length of the mate's arm and that of the cape, my head must have been nearly two yards under water. The mate handed the edge of the cape to Paul, and got hold of another part of it. The sailors lending a hand, they managed to get my head just above water. All the while it was one single little safety-pin that held me.

Yet I was so heavy that these two men with only one arm free could not lift me up. I got my senses again in this situation, and saw at a glance how the whole thing was; half unconsciously I did the one right thing to do: put both my hands round the arm of the mate and clasped them tight together.

Though I did not feel discomforted, yet I felt dying, and said, "Jesus, Jesus." The mate said, very positively, "No, Countess, you are not going to Him just yet. I have got good hold of you now, and am not going to let you slip." I was, myself, astonished at the iron grasp of my hands.

The mate said he had felt this, and knew it to be what the sailors call which is said never to relax. So he thought that, living or dying, I would cling on. He was mistaken, for I felt my strength giving way; so I told Paul to get a better hold of me than by the cape, as the safety-pin could not hold much longer. Paul managed to get hold of one of my hands. The other hand at the mate's arm, clutched his sleeve. took care not to grasp his arm, lest I should take the strength out of it.

In this position, suspended by both my arms, up to my shoulders in water, I had been hanging for well nigh five minutes. At last a watchman came, and in a few moments he let a lifebuoy down. The rope was thin and the man small, and I was afraid of breaking the one or dragging the other into the water. I managed to get my feet in the lifebuoy up to my knees. Paul, in a tone of thunder, shouted, "Hoist!" so I felt myself lifted by willing hands; yet every second I thought my grasp would relax. A few more hoists and I was on the deck. The mate was so exhausted that he was still hanging outside, and had to be helped over the gunwale. Paul had scrambled up by himself.

I was able to go down to my cabin, and even proposed to change my dress and go to the meeting. At the moment I felt fully up to do it. I have been told by several doctors that it would have been certain death. Miss Stewart helped me to bed, with at least a dozen hot water bags and bottles. Only a few hours later did I feel my bruised body, water in my lungs, and feverish chills. I was very ill, indeed, that night, so Miss Stewart's father, who is a doctor, came. He told me he expected me to suffer for several weeks.

The Children's Cry.

Above the ceaseless roar and din,
Amid the tide of woe and sin,
I hear a sad and bitter wail
Arise from voices weak and frail.

It tells of wretchedness and want,
Of poverty so grim and gaunt,
And misery both deep and wide—
An ever-rolling, swelling tide.

In cellar dark, and attic small,
Where dancing sunbeams never fall,
But dirt and odours foul abound,
Poor children thin and pale are found.

Some have no mother's loving voice
To make their little hearts rejoice;
No father, kind, and wise, and good,
To earn for them their daily food.

O that our hearts were wide awake
These lambs to seek for Jesus' sake,
To use what powers within us lie
For precious souls that never die!

Shall we not try with heart and hand,
To cheer and help the noble band
Of those who work with strong desire
Children to save from sin's deep mire!

By voices, gifts, and earnest prayer,
Let us their Christ-like labours share.
The swift-winged hours and moments fly,
And still we hear the children's cry.

E. E. Epps,

A Bible Conference.—Arrangements are being made for holding a great Bible conference in Edinburgh from Dec. 6 to 9. Meetings will be held twice a day. The speakers expected are Revs. J. Whyte (Free St. George's), Dr. John Smith, G. Wilson, Sholto Douglas, and J. Colclough, Past. F. E. Marsh, and Mr. J. Colville, M.P. The subjects will be: "The Bible—its Inspiration and Authority; its Final Issues: Last Things."

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, November 27.

Genesis xxxv.

WHAT a power there is in a word! What memories it will bring to mind of a happier, holier past, of sainted faces and voices that will never come again in this world; of resolutions and vows that were once made, and never kept! This is what Bethel meant to Jacob. As soon as the place was mentioned where God appeared to him as he fled from Esau, he was convicted of the miserably low life that he was leading in Shechem. Whilst dwelling in the lowlands of worldly conformity we wink at the strange gods which our household cherishes; but when we catch a glimpse of the place from which we have fallen, and seek to regain it, we become aware of the incongruity between it and the worldly garments we wear, the vain idols we permit. Then Jacob said to his household, and to all that were with him, "Put away the strange gods that are among you, and purify yourselves, and change your garments, and let us arise, and go up to Bethel." "Remember, therefore, whence thou are fallen, and repent, and do the first works."

From Bethel to Bethlehem is not far. The one, the House of God; the other the House of Bread. And we need them both, if we are to sustain the repeated sorrows of life, such as the death of Rebekah, the death of Rachel, the sins of our children, the death of Isaac. Ah, soul, thou wilt be ill prepared for grief such as may befall thee any day, if thou hast not arisen to return and dwell on the uplands of fellowship with God.

All must sorrow. The beloved Rachel dies, and with her tears seems evermore to pervade the little town, "weeping for her children." This spot reminds us, indeed, that Jesus has brought some new sources of sorrow into the world. The blood of the babes of Bethlehem flowed for Him. But He has established sources of infinite comfort which avail for all generations.

Genesis xxxvi.

A chapter like this reminds us of the text at the opening of Scripture, "The earth was without form and void, and darkness was upon the face of the deep, and the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters." But amid the wild force of hurricane, tempest, and storm, the holy gentle Spirit brooded, preparing the world to be the home of man. And at last, on the perfected platform, he stood forth in the likeness of God as the King of the world.

So, through the long ages which preceded the Incarnation, there was storm and confusion, king against king, duke against duke, people against people, till from amid it all the Hebrew nation arose, as the platform on which the Lord Jesus, the second Adam, should be manifested.

And is it otherwise with thy heart and mine? Canst thou not remember long, barren chapters of thy life, when storm and tempest worked their wild fury, and all thine experience was enwrapt in darkness? But the Spirit of God was there. He had in his hand a scheme of order and beauty which he was accomplishing; and in the fulness of time it pleased God to reveal his Son, and Christ was formed in thee. It is not always possible to detect the moment of the introduction of the Christ germ. The stages of its development are perplexing. But the end is glorious.

TUESDAY, November 29.

We have here Jesus in his possession of the Father's love. "Israel loved Joseph more than all his brethren." "This is my beloved son, in whom I am well pleased." "The only begotten son, who is in the bosom of the Father." "Therefore doth my Father love me," said our Lord, conscious that the Father's love was focussed upon Him, with a strength and tenderness, in which deity and infinity were mingled.

Jesus in his consciousness of his divine origin and glorious destiny. "Joseph dreamed a dream, and he told it." So in spite of the hate of his brethren, He did not forbear to witness a good confession. He knew whence He came, and whither He went. He knew that He would ascend up where He was before. He knew that to Him every knee should bow, and every tongue confess.

Jesus in his Incarnation and rejection. "And Israel said unto Joseph, Come, and I will send thee to thy brethren." "But, last of all, He sent unto them his son, saying, They will reverence my son. But when the husbandmen saw the son, they said among themselves, This is the heir, come let us kill him, and let us seize on the inheritance." Ah, what a contrast between Jacob's estimate of Joseph and the brethren's; between God's regard of Jesus and man's! "He came unto his own, and his own received Him not." The archers sorely grieved Him and shot at Him.

Jesus in his death and resurrection. "They took him and cast him into the pit." "They drew and lifted Joseph out of the pit." So, when they had crucified our blessed Lord, they laid Him in the newly-hewn grave; but God raised Him up, having loosed the pangs of death.

Where are we? Is our place with the brethren at the pit's mouth, careless of their Brother's sufferings; or have we gone through the pit with Jesus, and emerged with Him to newness of life?

WEDNESDAY, November 30.

Genesis xxxviii.

Yes, Jesus Christ is in this chapter also, full as it is of the records of sensual indulgence and passion. Where sin abounded, grace did much more abound, reigning through righteousness unto eternal life. "It is evident," says the writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews, "that our Lord sprang out of Judah" (Heb. vii. 14). This stock which seemed so full of the wild sap of nature, yet received the Christ-graft, through the fruit of which all the world has been blessed. Look into the genealogy of Christ's human nature, as Matthew gives it, and you will find that this illicit union of Judah and Tamar is expressly mentioned as a link in the chain between Abraham and Christ.

May not something analogous to this be realised in your own life? You resemble that Judah stock, wild by nature, bringing forth very sour fruit, and fit only for burning; and yet, if you will yield yourself to the knife of God, He will make an incision in you, which will receive the Christ-nature, and He shall so become one with you, that all the energy of your nature shall pour itself forth through Him, and break into blessed and beautiful fruitage.

Only of one thing be very wary. There will be a constant tendency for the old nature to reassert itself. Just as a young forest tree will be always thrusting out shoots below the graft, which need the exercise of the pruning-knife, so there will be the incessant striving of the flesh to show its secret working; from which the pruning-knife of the cross, applied by the Holy Spirit, can alone deliver us.

All these chapters, which tell of the exaltation of Joseph to the place of supreme power, are of indispensable importance, because they show the processes through which the Divine purpose moves to its accomplishment. That Potiphar's wife hated him, and maligned his fair character, was of no avail as against the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God. Nay, she was, all unwittingly, made to contribute to his exaltation, for had she not brought about his casting into prison, he would never have been made "lord of Pharaoh's house, and ruler of all his substance."

So men maligned our Lord. They said that He was the friend of publicans and sinners, that He had a devil and was mad, that He was in league with Beelzebub himself. But none of these epithets injured Him, none smirched his holy character, none left Him really the worse. Indeed, each and all were links that led to his ultimate arraignment before the Sanhedrim and condemnation by Pilate. But through death He wrought out our redemption, and made us sharers in his own royal supremacy and glory.

In a sense also this may be true of us. The tongue of hate may wag against us, the finger of scorn be pointed, venomous and untrue epithets be flung. Our only aim must be to be absolutely pure and clean, as Joseph was, acting ever in the sight of God, and subordinating sense to spirit. Then God will make our case his own, and vindicate us before the world. Is He not doing this for many around us to-day?

FRIDAY, December 2.

We find Thee here, Lord Jesus, for Thou wast crucified between two malefactors, whereof one was remitted to paradise and eternal life, while the other went down to death. Thou hast often come to the imprisoned and spoken comforting words, which have opened their hearts to pour out further confidences. Thou hast interpreted our dreams. And hast Thou not, full often, asked that we should have Thee in remembrance and show Thee kindness? And have not we shamefully forgotten Thee, quick enough to avail ourselves of thy loving offices when our circumstances were adverse, but not careful to requite Thee with thought, and love, and gratitude when it was well with us?

What a vivid portrayal there is in this chapter of what the apostle means in describing the savour of life unto life, and of death unto death. Two men may touch Christ; they had been companions and associates, employed in the same business, engaged in similar pursuits. But to one He speaks of life, to the other of death; and from that moment one begins to pass upward and the other down, with ever-accelerating speed.

Here again were necessary links in God's Providence! Steps towards the exaltation of the man who had been rejected and despised, but whom God intended to exalt! Nothing happens by chance; all is under law. Not a sparrow falls to the ground without the Father. The chief butler's imprisonment leads to Joseph's emancipation. Trust God with the evolution of your life-plan.

This is the chapter of Ascension and Exaltation, and it affords an inimitable type of the glory into which our Saviour's humiliation and death were the introduction. Listen to the Divine commentary: "Him, being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, ye have taken and have crucified and slain, whom God raised up...Being therefore by the right hand of God exalted, He hath poured forth this...Let all the house of Israel therefore know assuredly that God hath made Him both Lord and Christ, this Jesus whom ye hath crucified" (Acts ii. 22-36).

Rejected by his brethren, refused by his own to whom he came, raised from the pit, falsely accused and judged by the Gentiles, Potiphar and his wife, classed with the wicked, but associated with one of them in the palace to which his prison conducted — each particular that we aver of Joseph is also true of Jesus. It would be almost possible to substitute the name of Jesus for Joseph in each particular.

This is also the marriage chapter. Joseph's Egyptian bride reminds us of Christ's union with the Gentiles, of which the doctrine of the Church is the New Testament expression. For in that Church, as the Apostle Paul so strenuously insisted, the Jew has no exclusive right. Gentiles are fellow-heirs, and fellow-members of the body, and fellow-partakers.

This is also the chapter of Bread-giving. Joseph gives food to all surrounding countries, who come to him to buy. But Jesus gives the true bread, of which if a man eat he shall not die—his flesh, which He gives for the life of the world.

FROM OTHER LANDS.

The Philippines.

By Mr. BUDGETT MEAKIN.

So little has been generally known about the native races of the Philippines that, until they were brought prominently forward by the recent war, few realised how great their darkness or how wide the field that lay there quite untouched.

The supremacy of Spain, which meant the supremacy of the Pope's religion, involved also the supremacy of superstition and vice. Now, in the fulness of time, the first of these thralls has been broken, but the second and third will remain if the soldiers of Christ do not enter the breach which the soldiers of America have made.

For the first time in its history the Philippine group of islands is open to the Gospel message. Bibles may now be imported and sold, while religious freedom is assured to its native millions. Till the power of the priestcraft is broken, and a wholesome leavening of Protestants pervades the nation, persecution must continue; but no longer the uncontrolled persecution which recalls the days of the Inquisition, an office which would have been at once revived had evangelical truth obtained a foothold.

Whatever the United States may decide to do about the Philippines, it is certain that their Government will never allow them to be closed again to the Gospel, and it is equally certain that the American Protestant Churches will not fail to take up work there as soon as they see their way. But it behoves us also to co-operate, both by effort and prayer.

Already the Madrid branch of the Bible Society is preparing a Tagali version of the Scriptures, for the use of some FOUR MILLIONS OF THE NATIVES.

The translation of St. Luke's Gospel has just been completed, and will soon go to press.

In Barcelona Mr. Pundsack, a business man, has taken special interest in these natives, and has laid himself out to get in touch with those who had found their way to that great port. By means of advertisements in the papers, offering them New Testaments in Spanish gratis at his private house, he has come in contact with many, and is laying foundations for work in the island. Several of those interested have undertaken the translation of Scripture portions for him, and also a specially written tract by his sister-in-law, Miss Lawrence, of Caldas de Montbuy, into Tagali, Visaya, and Pampango, the three most widely used Philippine tongues. Two of these "Filipinos," who had been expelled from Manila as Freemasons and Liberals, educated men, are now returning, delighted to take back with them a supply of these tracts for distribution. There can be no time like the present for commencing work in the Philippines, when the liberated natives will with eagerness learn all they can from the new-comers, and ascertain wherein American freedom differs from Spanish misrule. Anyone starting for Manila can obtain these tracts from Mr. Pundsack, Rosellon 93, Gracia, Barcelona.

Hitherto there has been no religious liberty in the Philippines, and even foreign Protestants were not allowed a chapel. If ever Rome had a free hand she had it there, and the result is as might be expected. The natives—sword-point Christians all of them—have long and bravely fought against the cruel system, and have always welcomed English and Americans, who do the chief trade. Once the English took Manila, early in the century, but on peace being resumed, gave it up. Now a different kind of conquest lies before them. The only Bibles known to have reached the islands have gone surreptitiously, as when years ago a young man engaged in a large business house there ran the risk of having a few packed here and there among the merchandise: that was Mr. J. Haffenden, now the Bible Society's agent at Singapore, who has always had Manila on his heart. Later, two Bible colporteurs made an attempt to work there, but one died, and the other was imprisoned and had to leave. Who will follow in their footsteps?

In Central Africa.

The latest report of the Livingstonia Mission (Free Church of Scotland) is a remarkable document. The opening page is striking, to say the least, for there Rev. Donald Fraser begins an appeal to the home Church for a hundred thousand new missionaries for Livingstonia. "At present," he says, "we are surrounded with great opportunities for extension. Doors are open on every side, at which we helplessly look, unable to enter. Where, from the arrival of the white man with God's message, there has ever been stolid indifference, or even fierce opposition, to-day there come deputations of old men and young, saying, 'We, too, would learn; send us teachers.' And we sit before them and say, 'Fathers, brothers, would that we were able! But you must wait—and God will send his messengers some day.' And they say, 'We have waited and waited. Why do you despise us?' And our heads are bowed when we reply, 'Brothers, some time you, too, will hear.' And day by day we cry, 'Lord of the harvest, Thou seest the field. Send, Lord, ere it be too late.'"

It is difficult in a few lines to give any idea of the interesting character of the report.

SPIRITUAL QUICKENING

seems to have been experienced throughout the mission; the year has been one of unparalleled ingathering. Twelve languages are employed in various parts of the immense field; in these, or most of them, God's Word has been circulated, and educational work, in various grades, has been pushed forward with encouraging results. Native preachers and teachers are doing their part in a way full of promise, and stations have been planted among new tribes in regions never yet reached by the Gospel. In some quarters the rising generation is showing and English books are read with much zest. The industrial department—printing, building, agricultural—secures many temporal comforts to the immense population, while the medical work is a blessing beyond description.

In the Bandawe district there is much movement. Two extracts shall make this clear:—

Chisangawi.—"This place bids fair to produce strong Christians. The Word has taken hold among the women. Some have been bullied and beaten by their husbands because of their 'new manners,' but they have stood firm. They say they have given up the old evil ways, not because of the teachers, whether black or white, but because God has said they must, and, since God has said it, they are going to obey his word and not man. There are many seeking after Jesus, and there are some who love Him."

Chintechi.—"A great movement towards Christianity began in the northern part of this district in March. Services held by the teachers on Sabbaths were attended by over 1500; morning and evening worship by over 1000. The attendances rushed up at once in all the schools, one having as many as 700 scholars. The people made bricks and brought in material for two substantial school-houses, which have just been built. Teachers residing at Chintechi conduct Sabbath services and daily worship."

A few lines more from this remarkable report:—"All the departments of our mission work have the one end and aim—the gathering of this people into

THE FOLD OF CHRIST.

Our classes for religious instruction have been more largely attended, and our number of adult baptisms greater than ever before. In all, 534 have been admitted into the catechumens' class this year. All these professed publicly their faith in Christ before they were accepted as candidates for baptism. All are, to the best of our knowledge, total abstainers. No one, so far as we know, is fettered by the bonds of polygamy. And, during the period of probation (a year or more) each life will be subject to the strictest scrutiny on the part of the elders, deacons, and other native Christians, who have ways and means, which lie beyond our reach, of finding out all about the village life of the candidates."

Lepers and their Children.

Some three years ago Mrs. Osborne (of the L.M.S.) made a most touching appeal to the Mission to Lepers on behalf of the many lepers and their untainted little ones in the native asylum at Trevandrum. Largely through the help of your readers we responded favourably, and two native Biblewomen were secured regularly to visit the leper asylum (described as a "living tomb"), and a small Home was opened for some of the children who were living with their diseased parents among surroundings of the utmost danger both physically and morally. Letters are to hand from Mrs. Osborne, telling of blessing on past efforts, but pleading most pathetically for further help, so that more of the children may be rescued, and still more may be done to bring the Gospel to the afflicted lepers.

The work among the lepers themselves has also grown and been much blessed, several having been baptized, although, until Mrs. Osborne began to visit it, the name of Jesus had probably never been heard within the walls of the large asylum. In addition to the two native Biblewomen, who only cost £6 per annum each and have done excellent service, an ordained native catechist has been appointed to work among the lepers. This was rendered necessary by the hostile attitude of the Roman Catholics, who have been opposing the work in every way in their power. This new worker, Pastor Joseph, is a Syrian minister of experience, and seems truly devoted to the service of the poor lepers, cheerfully taking the risk of contagion as well as the painful experiences to which he will be exposed, and all for the sum of £20 per annum. This is much less than he ought to be receiving; but he enters into the acute pecuniary needs, and accepts this very low stipend for the work's sake, and because of the dire needs of these dark souls, among whom it is difficult to find native workers, as they have such a horror of the disease, which, at Trevandrum, is specially malignant.

Surely, many readers will count it a privilege to help to rescue more of the little ones for whom Mrs. Osborne pleads so earnestly, and also to support the effort to bring the Word of Life to those who, in a special sense, are sitting in darkness and in the shadow of death.

A Plague-stricken City.

I WISH to say a little about our present trying situation. Bangalore is a death-stricken city; the waves of the plague are now nearing our Home. Ulsoor is such a clean place, we thought perhaps the plague would not come. People die simply of fear; it is very, very terrible.

The city of Bangalore, with its tens of thousands, is deserted. They say people have left their dead, and their cattle too, locked up in their houses and fled. The stench in the city is dreadful; who can number the dead? The grain shops in the city are closed, and there are only two or three open in the cantonment. Many families find it very difficult to obtain provisions, and you can imagine that I have some little thought as to how my large family of 110 children, besides helpers and workers, are to be provided with daily food if the few remaining grain shops close.

The Lord is our shield; the widows, the orphans, and the destitute ones are specially under his protection. We trust in Him, and He says that "they who abide under the shadow of the Almighty" are safe from the "pestilence that walketh in darkness." This pestilence is deadly both by night and by day. Man is utterly powerless. There is no medicine that can heal the plague-stricken; it is death, death, death on all sides.

I have done all I can to make arrangements for the provision of this large family in case of my sudden removal, but have not yet completed arrangements; things move so slowly in this country, and patience is severely taxed. Ask for much prayer for my large family, that this time of temporal calamity may be over-ruled by the Spirit for a mighty spiritual awakening.

Friends' Mission Work.

SIXTEEN adults have been allowed, writes Mrs. K. Taylor, from Seoni Malwa to Our Missions, to make their public confession in our meeting for worship. They have been attending meetings and receiving instruction for a year and a-half, and were looked upon by all as Christians; but we had not let them make their public confession of faith earlier because they were very ignorant, unable to read for themselves, and we wanted to be quite sure that they understood what being a Christian meant, and showed it by their changed lives. This they are now doing, and Hindus are saying: "Well, there is something if people like these can be so changed."

One's heart does go out in praise to God when we look back on the last eight years and a half. Then, as far as we know, there was not one in this town who called on the Lord Jesus Christ; now we meet together a company of about 360 or so (including the 280 orphan boys), besides the Christian communities in the different villages in the district.

A few days ago I was visiting at a Hindu house, and, as usual, a number of neighbours came in. After I had given them my message, one of the women said: "Yes, we are beginning to understand what Christianity is. At first we were afraid; but now we see that it means good conduct, clean lives, and it is not in you English people alone, but those of our countrymen and women who call themselves disciples of Jesus Christ."

AND LOVE TO ALL;

On Sunday week one of the Government native doctors made his public confession in meeting, and gave such a clear testimony. There were a number of outsiders in the meeting who listened very attentively. We have another interesting Brahman pundit, a middle-aged man, with a wife and grown-up son and daughter. He is now diligently studying the Christian religion, and says that he himself is convinced of its truth; but before coming out publicly he wants to teach his wife and children, that they may all come out together.

We missionaries have to MAKE A CHARACTER.

It was put to me, "You came here and we know nothing about you; we hear you preaching and think it all very good, but quite impossible for people to live pure lives. Of course, you say that this power is in Jesus Christ, and He gives it to you as you put your trust in Him; and so before we believe what you say, we watch you and Mr. Taylor. Now we know you are righteous, and carry out the two commandments, 'Love God with all thy heart, and thy neighbour as thyself.' We see the same in many of our countrymen, but we do not believe in their profession until we have watched them some time."

It is well for us to know how they do look at things. Our only fear now is that they think far too much about us and our righteousness; but with all the difficulties and drawbacks of our humanity the work of grace goes on.

A Belgian Monte Carlo.—The gambling rooms at Ostend have closed their doors, the contract having expired. The management has this season made a clear profit of over seven million francs. There is no doubt that the newly-issued lease will bring Ostend a much larger revenue. The old company, which is trying for it, has offered the Administration to build a fine theatre. Last season an Englishman lost at Ostend £28,000 and a Russian £36,000. Statistics show that on an average every man who has gambled there has lost about £80.

Baptist Missions in India are gradually learning the lesson of self-support and independence. In an address of the Bengali Native Christian Community, which met at Serampore, to the British churches, the following sentences occur:—"Our churches are becoming independent. Signs of more power are appearing among them. Through the efforts of the missionaries and evangelists, our Community is getting to understand the duty of caring for the salvation of the souls of their darkened neighbours. Your labour and prayers are yielding fruit. Filled with hope, joy and encouragement, we have to-day been singing the inaugural hymn of our new Indian Baptist Missionary Society, 'Jesus, India's only Saviour.'"

Russian Sectarians and Canada.

FROM time to time we have drawn attention to the sufferings of the Dukhobortsi, a Russian sect in some respects answering to the Quakers of England and America. The resemblance is complete in one particular, the Dukhobortsi hold peace to be a sacred thing. For refusing to serve in the Russian army they have been greatly persecuted.

It will be learned with interest that a large settlement of the Dukhobortsi is likely to be formed in Canada. Such of the people as have not succumbed to the long pressure put upon them are leaving Russia in the hope of finding more congenial surroundings elsewhere. Some are already in Cyprus, but the climate there does not suit them. Mr. Aylmer Maude, an Englishman, who has been closely identified with Tolstoy, is now in Canada, endeavouring to make arrangements for their settlement there.

The Mennonites, another Russian religious sect, went to Canada twenty years ago, and are to-day a prosperous and worthy community. It is understood that the Dukhobortsi will be given an adequate land settlement in the great unoccupied territories of the West. Batches of them are already making slow marches towards the port of Batoum, where they will embark for the new promised land. Roughly, the sum of £50,000 may be needed to carry out this migration. Tolstoy is entering heroically into the scheme, and the proceeds of a novel which he has nearly finished will be devoted to it.

Oxford Letter.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

MR. JEPHSON, from Bristol, and Mr. Halbrook, from Nottingham, were the speakers on Monday at the annual C.P.A. meeting. Vivid pictures were drawn of the triumphs and the difficulties of Gospel work in those centres.

The Missionary Union meetings maintain their interest. Over a hundred were present on Tuesday evening to hear Mr. T. E. Alvarez, of the C.M.S. In a word of personal testimony he said that it was through the O.M.U. that he had been led to offer himself to missionary work.

As the outcome of a meeting held on Friday in support of the work in New Westminster, British Columbia, an association has been formed to interest Oxford men in this growing work. A special feature is the evangelising of the large numbers of Chinese employed in the salmon factories.

A very helpful sermon was preached at Mansfield on Sunday week by Rev. Arnold Thomas, President of the Congregational Union. His subject was "Forgiveness," and those who heard the preacher's appeal will not soon forget it.

Our Irish Letter.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE committee of the Sunday-school Society for Ireland is taking a new departure which should prove most useful. It has in preparation a scheme for the examination of Sunday-school teachers, in which there will be preliminary, intermediate, and advanced sections. Prizes ranging from £5 to 7s. 6d. will also be awarded in connection with it. The scheme should have the effect of raising the character and quality of the teaching given in the Sunday schools of the country.

The Methodist Sunday-school Committee for Ireland are considering the proposal of setting apart a minister as a special evangelist to Sunday schools, with the view of holding teachers' conferences, impressing upon teachers a higher and more correct notion of their important work, and conducting children's Gospel missions.

Open-air work continues to prosper and progress in this country, in spite of opposition in a few places, like Queenstown. In Kildare the missioners receive a most respectful hearing from scores of attentive listeners, and in Athlone, Portarlington, and various other centres the same is the case. New preaching places are being quietly added to the ever-lengthening list, and fresh cause for gratitude is suggested almost daily by incidents of the work, known only to those engaged in it.

Evangelistic services are now in progress in various parts of the country, and, on the whole, with encouraging success. In Cork, Donegal, Monaghan, Tyrone, Armagh, and different other places, God has been working with his servants, and many are being blessed.

INTERNATIONAL S.S. LESSONS.

"THE BOOK OF THE LAW FOUND."—2 Kings xxii. 8-20.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Blessed are they that keep his testimonies, and that seek Him with the whole heart.—Psalm cxix 2.

THE BOY KING.

JOSIAH was the grandson of Manasseh. The name of his mother shows that she was under religious influence, and it is very likely that Josiah was trained in the same atmosphere, although his father was an idolater. Josiah was elected to be king when only eight years old, and he reigned for thirty-one years, a beneficent reign, and across it, as well as across the character of Josiah, is the legend inscribed, "Kept by the power of God."

THE CHILD CHRISTIAN.

Josiah was sixteen years old when he "began to seek after the God of his fathers."

"Conversion" means turning round, and this word has a very clear meaning in the case of grown-ups who have been leading bad lives. And even with Josiah, as with most children, it was a matter of facing the two divergent paths before him, and choosing the right one. Emphasize:—

(1) That every child may be, and ought to be, a follower of Jesus.

(2) That Josiah chose to follow God, although he was surrounded by many who would discourage him. Every Christian child has adverse circumstances to battle with.

REFORMATION UNDER JOSIAH.

The reformation commenced when Josiah was twenty years old. It consisted in the destruction of idols and the repairing of the Temple. He was assisted

(1) By Jeremiah, the prophet, who spoke and wrote to warn the people of their sins.

(2) By the fact that the Medes and Persians were conquering the Assyrians, and while it kept the Assyrians busy, so that they could not attack Judah, yet it also acted as a warning to the people.

Lesson.—In reforming our character we have to do as Josiah did: (1) Drive out and destroy the idols of sin and self. (2) Build up a character of Christlike purity and strength.

(3) We can do both only in the power of God.

THE LOST BIBLE (8, 9).

The "Book of Moses," which formed the Bible to the Jews at this time, was "the law which had been placed in the Ark of the Covenant" (Deut. xxxi. 26). Probably during the period of idolatrous reigns it had been placed in a secret room. In the same place had been put some of the silver of the Temple, and in searching for these the high priest discovered the book or roll (9).

The Bible may become a lost book to us. It is to many at this time.

(1) By neglecting it for other literature.

(2) By disregarding its moral and spiritual precepts in our lives.

(3) By worshipping it as an idol but never using it as our spiritual bread.

FINDING THE BOOK OF THE LAW (10-20).

The people rejoiced greatly over this discovery, because it was a link with their glorious national past. If our Bible has been lost, how may we find it? (1) By regular reading. (2) By receiving all the light we can bring to bear upon its truths, so that we may the better understand them. (3) By obedience—He that doeth the will shall know of the doctrine.

THE EFFECT OF BIBLE READING (11-13).

The effect on the king was to awaken his conscience into new life, and he desired to know more about it, and sent for the prophetess who could throw some fresh light.

This is still one of the effects of Bible reading. Teacher might point out others. (1) Teaches us the right way. (2) Gives us inspiration to walk in that way. (3) It is the sword of the Spirit, with which we must fight our battles if we would win. (4) It finds us.

CURSE AND BLESSING (17-20).

The curse which Huldah pronounced on the people for their sins, and the blessing which she uttered upon the King, were the natural and inevitable result of the conduct of the two parties.

Home Missions.

Aggressive Work in Wales.

THE Welsh Presbyterian, or Calvinistic Methodist, Church took a wise step when it decided upon a "forward movement," whose object should be the gathering in of the masses of people in towns and villages, to whom the inside of a place of worship was terra incognita, and for whom, indeed, there was not adequate accommodation were they disposed to explore it.

The history of the movement from its inception reads more like romance than reality, in the remarkable cases of conversion it has recorded, and the general success that has attended its way. Men and women, ignorant and degraded some of them (to a degree almost incomprehensible in such days as these, with education and social reform so highly developed), have been more than reformed—transformed—through the power of the Holy Spirit working through his servants, some of whose experiences can only be described as apostolic.

As to methods, whether in town or hamlet, they are usually threefold — open-air, tent, and hall. Most of the stations of the movement have passed the two first steps before becoming the scene of a permanent structure; and to the rough-and-ready experiences of the earlier efforts may be attributed much of the stability and strength, tact and wisdom, by which the later developments are characterised. It requires no small nerve to attack a remote stronghold of heavy drinkers and heavier fighters, who are largely a law unto themselves. Yet the power of the Gospel, preached and lived, by men of like passions with themselves (but for the grace of God), has won victories innumerable, and is now testified to by the consistent and earnest lives of many who aforetime were "blasphemers, persecutors, and injurious," but who have "obtained mercy."

But these outlying stations are not the largest (though perhaps equally interesting) points of aggression. Towns like Cardiff and Newport of course figure more conspicuously in the excellent work being done. At the former resides Rev. John Pugh, who is the chief apostle of the movement. Upon him, under the Presbytery, devolves the parental responsibility, and a particularly able leader he is. But, in addition to his personal service, he possesses the valuable faculty of and setting them to do it. Thus his usefulness is multiplied a hundredfold, and, with Cardiff as the base of operations, he distributes his helpers over the entire field, yet keeps his eye upon them all. His chief ally at Newport is Mr. Seth Joshua, who has an efficient comrade in Mr. E. Perry.

We recently had an opportunity of seeing something of the work being done in these two centres, and very telling it appears to be. The question naturally arose as to how far it affects the existing places of worship. The only possible answer is that these when full could only accommodate a small part of the population, and that since the commencement of this work they have been as well filled as they were before.

At Newport the principal meetings are held in the Temperance Hall; the forenoon and afternoon gatherings being small in comparison to the vast throng that overflows the building at night. A second large hall has been requisitioned as an adjunct. And yet, when these are filled, the streets seem as crowded as ever, proving that there is which such a movement may not endeavour to reach. Week evening meetings on a smaller scale are held in various localities.

At Cardiff there are six magnificent halls in different districts, each seating from 800 to 1200 persons, and very well filled they are. "But the audience does not present a poor or ragged appearance." No, but many of its members have known not only poverty but degradation, until the Gospel of Christ uplifted them and resulted in their social as well as spiritual well-being. Attached to each of these halls is a smaller one devoted to labour among the children, and here the rougher element is in evidence—real raw material, from which, however, many gems have been gathered.

One of the toughest corners of the work is a district infested with bad characters of various kinds, all more or less respectably housed (to outward appearance, at any rate), which only makes them the harder to reach. But Mr. Pugh has been fortunate in his selection of a leader for this choice spot—a warrior as bold in the Lord's warfare as he was formerly in that of the Queen. A man of fine physique, unbounded pluck, indomitable energy, and, withal, exceptionally tender-hearted, tactful, and wise, he is just the man for the post, and is being greatly blessed in his service.

There are others at different stations of whom almost as much might be said, and we were only sorry we had not time to make their acquaintance as well as his. One of the urgent needs of the movement is a permanent hall for this locality. Another is a similar structure for the children's work connected with the Grangetown Hall; and by the time these needs are met no doubt others equally pressing will have arisen. It is a good work, carried on by good men, and deserves more than local support and practical sympathy.

Ragged Schools at Haggerston.

IN 1849 the Dove Row Ragged Schools were founded by Mr. G. Kelsey as an aggressive religious agency. Soon afterwards a free day school for the poorest children was started, and maintained until the National Education Act came into force. This school anticipated the free Board Schools by more than thirty years. Mr. Kelsey's Gospel booklets have reached a circulation of millions, being owned and blessed of God in the saving of many souls among English-speaking people all over the world. He was prominently associated with the starting of the City Young Men's Christian Association noon-day prayer meeting. Over the Saturday meeting he still presides. Another agency, in the origin and inception of which he had a considerable share, was the preaching of the Gospel in theatres on Sunday evenings.

This work at Dove Row was continued by Mr. W. G. Cotsford (Associate of the Ragged School Union) and Mr. G. H. Simmons, who, with a staff of honorary teachers, representing the missionary activity of the Cambridge Heath Congregational Church, took over the cause in 1869. Through a half-century's unbroken span, the story of Dove Row is associated with the social awakening of London, that began in the forties.

Since 1892 it has been the channel through which treats for poor children, secured by the Press, have been administered in Haggerston and Hackney. The juveniles of hundreds of poor families—reached by the outings to Epping Forest for more than twenty thousand children, carried out by the Dove Row Drift Children's Mission—link happy associations and grateful memory with the old school's name. Nearly four hundred cripples, scattered about in thirty-seven parishes, bless the White Dove Guild that started in Dove Row.

The workers look out upon a whitening harvest, but the old barn for garnering the Lord's grain can neither be patched, nor re-thatched, nor propped up, but must be rebuilt. This, in round figures, will cost, with furnishing, £2500, towards which some £900 in donations and promises have been secured. The site is freehold, and the property in trust. The Lord's stewards are appealed to, not to allow their Master's sheaves to mildew for want of a home for their ingathering. Communications to be addressed to Mr. W. T. Cotsford, 218, Richmond-road, Hackney, N.E.

Children's Aid Society. — Altogether 1,627 cases came to the society for investigation during the past year—rather more than an average of five every day. Nearly twenty-five per cent. of these were placed in homes, and one per cent. were emigrated, and one and a half per cent. were sent to sea or provided with situations. In putting into operation the laws for the training and education of the most neglected and helpless of the children, the Children's Aid Society does good work. There are, outside this class, large numbers of children destitute and on the verge of crime; and others simply fatherless and motherless and friendless, for whom the law makes no provision except the workhouse, from which it is most desirable to preserve them. Mr. Arthur J. S. Maddison, 32, Charing Cross, S.W., expresses regret at a lamentable decrease in the amount of subscriptions, owing no doubt to the special support that has been extended to the various jubilee funds, and hopes that further and much needed support will quickly be forthcoming.

Among London Poor.

ONCE again it is our privilege to plead for brothers and sisters in need; for it will be seen from the following sketches—supplied, as before, by Mildmay Deaconesses, who, in regular house-to-house visitation, become intimately acquainted with the habits and needs of the people—that much sorrow is hidden away in the heart of our great city.

"You don't look well to-night, Mr. C—," I said, as I bade him good night at the close of the weekly Bible-class. "And I don't feel it," he replied, as he passed his hand wearily over a noble looking brow. "We don't get half enough to eat, the wife and I, and that's about the truth." I knew it was only too true, for his bony form and sunken eyes confirmed what he said. Once in a good position, his age and feeble health render work impossible any longer.

She had a pretty little house of her own in the country, and lived a happy life with her husband and five children. One day they brought him, who had been the support of them all, home from his work, and the next morning he was dead. The poor mother has a bad internal complaint, yet you would never hear a murmur, but in a tone of confidence she says, "God, the Father of the fatherless, will help us."

Two old bodies living together, one manages to get a little work, and she cares for her friend, who is a cripple and a constant invalid. A little dark room is their home. The elder told me of the joy it was to her to creep down one day to the staircase window, and see the sunshine. But she had to be carried back by a kind neighbour. She needs extra nourishment.

In a back street in the North of London live, or rather exist, an aged Christian couple. Their only allowance being 4s. a week, which they receive from the parish, is barely enough to keep body and soul together. The husband is old, deaf, and tottering, and the wife has been bed-ridden for over a year. The only ray of brightness which breaks the dull monotony of their lives is when a visitor comes to read and sing to them.

Who will help to cheer such with succour, for Christ's sake, in the waiting time?

(Mrs.) E. Codner.

Carrubbers Close Mission.

THE past year's work of this Mission in a needy district of Edinburgh has proved a channel of blessing to many. There are some 600 voluntary helpers, and the Mission has proved a real training school for workers at home and abroad. The large hall, accommodating 1200, is crowded every Saturday and Sabbath evening, while Gospel meetings are held every night in the week. Open-air work is regularly carried on, thus reaching a class not influenced in any other way.

Many other branches of work are carried on in various parts of the city and country. The cycle corps and other workers visit a very large number of country places to preach the Gospel. Gospel temperance work, mothers' meetings, Sunday schools, children's services, foreign missions, bands, etc., are in full operation.

The annual meeting was held on Nov. 18, when there was a large gathering of workers. Dr. John Smith presided, and an address to the workers was given by Rev. Mr. Forbes.

"Golden Grain" Almanacs.— These long-standing favourites are again issued by the compiler Mr. J. E. Hawkins, 15, Paternoster-row. The pocket-book and diary is specially suitable for use by Christian workers, and the other editions are as helpful as ever. Mr. Hawkins has also written a penny booklet on "God's Promises for his Own," and the six booklets of choice poetry, "Gems of Gold" (6d. per packet), may be commended for enclosure in letters.

Church Card Calendars. — A very useful card calendar, adaptable for use in connection with any church and intended to be hung up in the home, is designed and published by Messrs. Woodford, Fawcett, & Co., 112, Fleet-street, E.C. In addition to the weekly engagement of the Church there are daily texts for the year. The card is finely coloured, and there are spaces for pastor's portrait, church building, etc. Prices for a quantity can be had from the publishers.

AGED PILGRIMS' FRIEND SOCIETY

FOR GIVING

Life Pensions of Five, Seven, and Ten Guineas

PER ANNUM TO

THE AGED CHRISTIAN POOR

Of both Sexes, and of every Protestant Denomination.

INSTITUTED 1807.

Treasurers: F. A. BEVAN, ESQ., AND W. J. PARKS, ESQ.

"As we have therefore opportunity, let us do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of Faith."—GAL. vi. 10.

"This Institution, apart from the benefit and relief it gives, is a great moral Institution, and is set to create in men's hearts and minds a feeling of reverence which is necessary in things moral, political, and religious. Old people are apt to be regarded as a burden, whereas it should be a joy and a privilege to minister to them. For this reason I specially commend the Charity to young people."—From the Speech of the late Right Hon. the EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.G., when presiding at the Annual Meeting of 1883.

"It is one of the most admirable Societies that I know of."—The late Rev. C. H. SPURGEON.

"I have carefully read the Report and Balance Sheet, and from a business standpoint can recommend the Society as one in which good value is given for the money entrusted to it, as there appears to be the maximum of good at the minimum of cost."—The late Sir HENRY W. PEEK, Bart.

FOUNDATION.

WITH faithful expectancy in prayer, the fathers and founders of the Aged Pilgrims' Friend Society first met together ninety-one years ago, recognising the urgent need for such an Institution, and trusting in the "exceeding great and precious promises" of Israel's supplying God.

It cannot be otherwise than instructive and encouraging to point out the progress made by this Institution since Her Majesty ascended the throne. There were then but 249 pensioners, receiving £1,100 per annum, and the operations of the Society were practically confined to the Metropolis; the details of the work to-day show a wonderful enlargement in every direction, and testify to the fact that God will bless that which is established on His Word, and has for its object His glory and the welfare of others, therefore the scope of the Aged Pilgrims' Friend Society is, as far as possible, co-extensive with the needs of poor and aged believers of both sexes, and in association with various branches of the Christian Church.

What sight can quicken sympathy more than that which many a pensioner of this Society presents. The house of the earthly tabernacle, once strong and stable, is now fissured and rent with the chinks of age; the timbers are creaking; the windows are blurred and dimmed with cobwebs; the bucket is standing empty by the fountain, for "the wheel is broken at the cistern." Once when a trivial indisposition came, daily duty could be carried on; now every ailment is important; the organs are all impaired; it is often an effort to talk, and deafness shuts out from that calm effortless participation in passing converse which was the privilege of happier days. Such an one is often discovered, dwelling in solitude; poverty has overwhelmed the home; bit by bit the comforts have gone; one by one the treasured little possessions have been parted with, and the want grows sorer, and then God sends His help by the hand of the Society, and the trembling lips sing, "My heart and my flesh faileth; but God is the strength of my heart and my portion for ever."

METHODS.

To provide Life Pensions of Five, Seven, and Ten Guineas per annum for the aged Protestant Christian poor in all parts of the United Kingdom is the primary object of the Society; the other branch of the work is the maintenance of four Homes, in which a portion of the recipients dwell; no additional Homes are at present required, all the efforts of the friends of the Institution being now needed to consolidate and extend the pensions. Frequent periodical Meetings of the Committee are held, the Members of the Board all having a knowledge of the details of the Society's work, and of its general bearing.

Personal visitation is a leading feature in the Institution; the pensions in London and Brighton are paid monthly, in the homes of the recipients, by the Committee and Lady Visitors, and throughout the country the services of Christian friends are enlisted, wherever possible, to distribute the pensions in the same way. A living sympathy is thus the tie that binds the Society and its pensioners together, and formality is excluded. The constraining love of Christ is the motive power, and the sad words of many a weary spirit, "No one ever calls," but seldom fall from the lips of the recipients. It is well for all young friends to look to this, and take their gladness and fresh life and helpful strength to the "old disciple," from whom they will learn many valuable lessons.

The nomination of candidates is by qualified subscribers, and careful inquiry is made by the Committee into the suitability of those so recommended; kindly discrimination is used in selecting those only whose need and age and discipleship entitle them to the help of the Society, the undenominational character of which is a distinguishing mark of its work. Pensioners are advanced to the higher lists in rotation.

By the pensions many a humble little home is maintained; many a sad heart is cheered, and from many a family is lifted a load of anxiety as to the future welfare of an aged parent. A recipient in Essex writes: "I cannot be thankful enough to the Lord for making me a pensioner, and for providing for me now I cannot work; I have been enabled to keep on a cottage-home 25 years, and must have given it up long ago but for your benevolent Institution."

Since its foundation in 1807, upwards of 6,600 of the aged Christian poor have been provided for, and more than £275,000 expended amongst them, at a cost which enabled a chairman of a recent public meeting to say that "the Society is one of the most economically managed institutions in the Metropolis."

PENSIONS.

1,500 Pensioners are now upon the books, and are receiving upwards of £10,500 per annum.

Of this number 190 are on the Ten Guinea List 857 on the Seven Guinea, and 453 on the Five Guinea.

197 of the recipients are men, being 13 per cent of the entire number. 718 live in the Metropolis, and 782 in other parts of the United Kingdom. 1,07 are over 70 years of age, and of this number 32 are above 80, and 19 more than 90. The oldest pensioner entered upon her hundredth year in January, and, except that she suffers from deafness she is in the full possession of her faculties, and was able to enjoy a short walk on the afternoon of her birthday.

The average duration of a pension is nine years and the total sum given to each recipient abou

AGED PILGRIMS' ASYLUM, HORNSEY RISE, N

AGED PILGRIMS' HOME: BRIGHTON

£58. There are, however, many exceptions t this, for the three pensioners who have been longes on the books have, during the last 28, 27, and 2 years respectively received £225, £206, and £20

PENSIONERS.

The life-stories of these aged ones reveal muc of the stress and pressure of the struggle for dail bread, and the heart-ache caused by the remova through death of friends and helpers, and at th same time they manifest much of the grace an faithfulness of our Covenant-keeping God, who hat said, "Even to your old age I am He; and even t hoar hairs will I carry you; I have made, and will bear; even I will carry, and will deliver you.

It is difficult to make a selection from recent nominations, but the following particulars will give some idea of the distress alleviated and the rough paths that have been smoothed. Sickness may be cured, but age increases and becomes more helpless as time goes on, and without proper provision is one of the saddest conditions possible, and cannot be met by indiscriminate charity, the tendency of which is harmful.

(a) C. W., a widow, aged 74, in Cambridgeshire. Has expended all her property in bringing up three grandchildren, and is now incapacitated by infirmity and the partial loss of one eye.

(b) J. F., aged 70, in Wiltshire. An industrious Christian man. His little business has decayed, and he has a blind wife and imbecile son dependent upon him.

(c) M. S. H., aged 66, in East London. Quite blind and dependent on his wife's precarious earnings by her needle.

(d) A. M., aged 66, single, in Devonshire. Has long struggled as a Teacher of Music, but her pupils have steadily decreased through competition, with which she cannot cope.

Some of the pensioners have long been bed-ridden, others are sadly crippled, and all, but for the regular and permanent help given, would be sorely tried as to ways and means. Among the occupations that have had to be relinquished have been colportage and other modes of Christian service; various trades, and mangling, needlework, and letting lodgings. One pensioner was for thirty years an efficient Bible-woman in Bethnal Green; several have, through the grace of God, been more than fifty years in the Christian pathway; one aged couple have been married sixty years; another recipient has lived for fifty-six years in a tiny Kentish village, whilst one in Sussex has, on Sundays, for fifty years walked, out and in, nine miles to his chapel.

The Oldest Pensioner.

Extracts from Letters reveal some interesting facts:—

(a) "J. W. was 72 years of age last October. Her youngest grandson still lives with her, and gets a little work in the brickyards in the summer months. I think the certainty of the pension has comforted her mind and gone far to conserve the little strength she has left. She is endeavouring this winter to keep up the Cottage Prayer-meetings commenced by her son, who died last winter."

(b) E. S., aged 69, says:—"I could never express my feelings upon receiving the pension from you this morning; I do feel more than thankful for such a provision in my great need. I have now only five little pupils, and am very low in my health from poor living; I indeed rejoice in having been accepted as a pensioner of such a Charity."

(c) E. E. S., aged 86, writes:—"Just a line to thank you for all the kindness I have received during the past year; but for that I should have wanted bread, as my sewing days have passed away. Weak as I am in body, and growing weaker continually, I can still trust in a Covenant-keeping God, and here I raise another Ebenezer and inscribe upon it—Hitherto hath the Lord helped me."

These pictures could easily be multiplied, but they suffice to show how real are the needs that are met, and how refreshing are visitation and help to such tried ones. There is much in the grasp of a hand, in the sound of a voice, in the sight of a friendly countenance, in a word or two of prayer, or even in silent waiting, while pain racks the body or sorrow melts the soul. As sailors on a voyage will speak of "Friends Astern" till they are halfway over, and then of "Friends Ahead," so these aged pilgrims are looking forward to the shore they hope to land on, and concerning many a dear one they can say with Cowper, in his poem on the receipt of his mother's picture:—

> "So thou, with sail how swift! hast reach'd the shore
> Where tempests never beat, nor billows roar."

THE HOMES.

The four Homes of the Society are situated respectively at Camberwell, Hornsey Rise, Stamford Hill, and Brighton, and afford "quiet resting places" for 180 pensioners who have borne "the burden and heat of the day." At a moderate expenditure these dwellings are maintained, each inmate having one room, rent free, a sufficient supply of coals, medical attendance, and other comforts, one of the principal being the kind ministrations of the Lady Visitors.

The lowest rent outside at which a fairly comfortable room can be obtained is 3s. weekly, that is £7 16s. per annum. The average cost of the four Homes, including repairs, is at the rate of £7 12s. per annum for each inmate, showing a clear saving of 4s. per head, in addition to the higher degree of comfort obtained and the other advantages.

The Committee and Lady Visitors endeavour in every way to make these buildings true homes. The inmates board and wait upon themselves, and their rooms are brightened with pictures and mementos of the past. Visitors are heartily welcomed, and a lady who has recently had some pleasing interviews with our aged friends writes—"I am sure, if subscribers could see the use made of their money they would rejoice, and if non-subscribers could see they would think it a privilege to add their contributions. The building is not ancient and ivy-grown like some we have seen, but it is a haunt of present happiness and peace."

On Lord's-day afternoons and twice during the week services, conducted by Ministers and other friends, are held in the chapels of the Homes. Many, who through age and infirmity cannot frequently attend their own places of worship, especially value the opportunities thus given.

HELP NEEDED.

A daily income of £36, equal to £13,000 per annum, is now needed adequately to maintain the work of the Institution in all its branches; and whilst the Committee are thankful to record an augmentation of receipts, they regret that they fall far short of the sum required. They earnestly appeal for help to every reader of this statement.

The Annual Subscriptions constitute a mainstay of the Society; new contributions of 7s., 10s., and 14s., per annum are especially satisfactory, as they do much to build up free income—that is, the portion not charged with nominees —and are a valuable means of interesting young people in the work, a most necessary thing when so much is said of the waning reverence for age.

A heavily afflicted pensioner in Kent writes:—"If those who have the heart and means to subscribe to your Society could fully realise how much their generosity is appreciated by the recipients, and how it helps to ease their troubled minds respecting temporal matters, they would be amply repaid for all they do."

The Committee would thus summarise the reasons why all believers should support the Aged Pilgrims' Friend Society: Because it was founded on a clear and definite Scriptural basis, on which it has ever since been maintained; because it is an old and yet a growing Society; because it is prompt and regular in the help it gives; because the aid is rendered through personal and loving visitation; and because, finally, it is a work in which all who love "our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity" can joyfully unite, for it must indeed be near to the heart of Him who said, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these My brethren, ye have done it unto Me."

Contributions in aid of the Institution will be thankfully received at the Society's Office, where any further information will be supplied.

ROBERT BANKS AND SON, PRINTERS, LONDON, E.C.

Life of Dr. Dale.

A CAREER of great influence has been nobly outlined in THE LIFE OF R. W. DALE OF BIRMINGHAM. By his son, A. W. W. Dale. (14s. Hodder & Stoughton.) The preparation of such a biography was a serious undertaking; but there can be no doubt that the work was rightly placed in the hands of Dr. Dale's accomplished son. The mental endowments, moral qualities, and spiritual attainments of the celebrated preacher stand out as they should; and perusal of the handsome volume leaves an impression that the man who was for many years a notable personality in the world of religious, educational, and political thought, was in every sense as mighty as those who were far from his immediate circle had reckoned him to be.

It was into a humble home that Robert William Dale was born in 1829. His parents were godly people, members of the Tabernacle Church, Moorfields, founded by George Whitefield, and then under the pastoral care of Dr. John Campbell. Like many another, his mother had a special desire for her boy; she hoped that "Bobby" would grow up to be a minister of the Gospel. She lived long enough to see the well on the way—to hear her son preach, and to learn of his welfare while a student at Spring Hill College, Birmingham. But there was much uphill work ere this.

Young Dale was converted while still a lad, but not without agonising of soul did he realise peace with God. All came clear, he says, when he ceased thinking of himself and his faith, and thought only of Christ. Others have come by the same way. While in his fifteenth year he was received into the Congregational church in East-street, Andover, in which town he was engaged as assistant schoolmaster. In a short time he was preaching, and persons of judgment declared that he was "made for the pulpit." For a time, however, he had to "stick to his last" as schoolmaster, and while thus engaged, in the town of Leamington, the way opened for him to enter college. He was then under eighteen years of age. His studies had already gone beyond the ordinary range of subjects for a comparatively young man; they included metaphysics, in which he ever showed a keen interest. He had also proved his true vocation as a preacher by touching the hearts and consciences of his hearers; and had published a book entitled "The Talents," dealing with man's responsibility to God for the development and use of the powers entrusted to him.

In college, Dale came under the influence of Henry Rogers and other good tutors and professors; thus he came to know and love John Angell James, who was not behind in speedily predicting that was within his grasp. For six years he studied hard, and had the record borne concerning him that he "never snubbed the slowest, nor the fastest, but had a kind tongue"; and "not a single fellow-student bore him malice, or had any grudge against him."

Fifty years ago was a time of great movements; there was Chartism and Tractarianism, and Papal Aggression was showing itself. Events were, as ever, fruitful in lessons, and many of these were learned by Dale, who, while yet a student, received several invitations to accept pastorates. He said "No" to all temptations, in order that he might be to the beloved Angell James "the evening star of his life." First assistant, then co-pastor, and at length successor, Dale's connection with the historic church in Carr's Lane, Birmingham, dated from 1852 to the time of his death in 1895. His independence of thought and boldness of utterance occasionally gave rise to misunderstanding, and suggested sympathy with various heresies which he utterly repudiated; but, taken as a whole, his pastorate of forty-three years was fruitful in a high degree, and greatly blessed in Birmingham and beyond.

The joys and sorrows of his life are admirably narrated in the work before us; there is light on his method, and information regarding the way his powers developed and his influence expanded. He had conferred upon him honours which he did not seek; he wrote many books which remain as witnesses of his learning and depth and breadth of thought. In the spring of 1864, when thirty-four years of age, he preached the annual sermon at Surrey Chapel before the directors of the L.M.S. To have been selected for such a function, while yet so young, was a signal honour.

The sermon—"The Living God the Saviour of all Men"—was described by Dean Alford in the Contemporary Review (July, 1866) as "one of the noblest that we have ever read." And though thought has moved and taste has changed since then, the discourse still remains impressive in its loftiness and power. It is far too long—the audience found it so at the time. The preacher followed a perilous precedent. John Angell James, on a similar occasion, broke off at the end of an hour through sheer exhaustion, and rested for a few minutes while the congregation sang a hymn; oranges were thrown into the pulpit to refresh him, and he then started again, and "thundered on for another hour." The gravity of some present, one would think, even in a simpler age than ours, must have been sorely tried. On the present occasion no such relief was needed or given. For two hours the preacher swept along with unflagging energy; and when at last the discourse drew to its end, he had still vigour enough in reserve to rise from the high level on which he had been moving to an impassioned close.

About this time his complexion had become darker than in youth, and his eyes were so lustrous that he was often to England. A story bearing on his appearance was told of him in these words:—

An old lady, who for many years had refused to subscribe to foreign missions, heard Dale preach at Surrey Chapel, and at once became a regular contributor. When asked why, she said that she had never thought much of missions before; but when she saw what the grace of God had done for that poor Hindoo, she could refuse to subscribe no longer!

Dale's views of the pastorate were as broad (and scriptural) as those of Mr. Spurgeon; and he rejoiced in the success of a mission church which was under the oversight of an architect as honorary pastor. He abandoned the white tie and the conventional black coat, and discarded the title of "reverend," which he regarded as setting up and maintaining a distinction essentially artificial between ministers of one type and those of another. Every Christian he held to be in the truest sense a priest; all were on the same footing before God, whatever their calling, and subject to the same law of perfection.

Consistent with this position was his interest in the work of Messrs. Moody and Sankey during their visit to Birmingham in 1874. We read:

The impression that the movement left on Dale's mind was both deep and lasting. All that he saw of the evangelists, and of their work in Birmingham and in London, convinced him that they were the agents of an invisible power, mightier than themselves—a power to which they surrendered themselves with loyal and trustful hearts, but which they could not control. The effects of their activity far transcended the human cause, and could be attributed only to the direct action of the Spirit of God. He saw what from the earliest days of his ministry he had longed to see—men and women pressing into the Divine Kingdom, not as solitary souls, but by scores and by hundreds. One hundred and twenty of the converts were admitted to membership at Carr's-lane, and this was but one of the churches into which they were received.

It is refreshing to read the utterances and writings of this great man as he

from criticism and scorn. He contended that such movements are in perfect harmony with the recognised and general laws of the Divine kingdom. This biography is a great contribution to the study of Free Church principles, theoretical and applied. The political views and educational polity for which Dr. Dale stood are dealt with at length, and many humorous and useful letters are given. His illness and death form the subject of a pathetic chapter. When the end came, a sheet of an unfinished sermon lay on his desk. "It states," his son observes, "the law by which his life had been ruled; it suggests in its incompleteness the mystery of the great hope into which he had entered."

"Unworldliness" does not consist in the most rigid and conscientious observance of any external rules of conduct, but in the spirit and temper, and in the habit of living, created by the vision of God, by constant fellowship with Him, by a personal and vivid experience of the greatness of the Christian redemption, by the settled purpose to do the will of God always, in all things, at all costs, and by the power of the great hope—the full assurance—that, after our mortal years are spent, there is a larger, fuller, richer life in——

These were fitting words to close such a life. The references made all over the country by men of all churches "to the loss that had befallen Christian faith and Christian thought" were his tribute. Dr. Fairbairn writes a chapter on Dale's position as a theologian, and Dr. Guinness Rogers gives deeply interesting reminiscences.

Dr. Horton's New Book.

AS following his "Teaching of Jesus," Dr. R. F. Horton has written a very readable book entitled THE COMMANDMENTS OF JESUS (6s. Isbister & Co.). There is nothing striking about matter or manner; but there is much that is ever timely, and cannot be too strenuously urged upon the attention of Christian people. Seeing that our doing the commandments of Christ is a Divinely pronounced criterion of our devotion and love, it is of the utmost importance that we should understand the commandments, and be conscious of the duties imposed upon us by our Lord's will.

Dr. Horton tells us that for three years he has been "constantly revolving the precepts of the Lord which refer to and direct our conduct on earth, and serve as the guide to a life hereafter." Clearly he has been reading much on the subject; the pages of his substantial volume afford evidence of this, even if he had not explicitly told us so in the preface. Yet, as he wishes us to know, his book is not derived from the works of such writers, "but simply from the inexhaustible richness of the Lord's precepts themselves." Regarding these precepts he fitly remarks:—

It seems to me that, as they can never grow old, so they can never be fully explored. Coleridge once said that to restore a fading counsel of morality to its pristine lustre, it is necessary only to put it into practice. And every attempt to regulate one's life by these principles of Jesus, which have been the familiar mottoes on the walls of life since life began, hung about the cradle, in the nursery and the schoolroom, in the Church and in the State, furbishes their golden letters and makes them gleam with a new beauty.

After a preliminary chapter on the commandments of Jesus as the rule of life, Dr. Horton deals with the first commandment "Repent," and the second, "Follow Me." Then others are expounded and applied, not in every case according to our mind, but for the most part in a manner that cannot but prove helpful to earnest Christian people. As will be expected, the last commandment is "Make disciples of all nations," and on this our author speaks with much enthusiasm. The other precepts refer to personal life; this to evangelisation.

It would seem that this last commandment of Jesus, after a century of modern missionary enterprise, is just entering on a new career of authority and power. As all his commandments are receiving a new attention, and are being applied with a new zeal to the conduct of life, so this, which sums them all up, is captivating the imagination of the Church. The new century will see a movement more wonderful than any since the time of the Apostles; all the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of God.

*A Book About Christ.

THERE have been many versions of the Perfect Life and endless volumes published essaying to expound the works and teachings of our Lord. In the book before us Dr. Walker does not attempt either rôle, but takes the subsidiary course of picturing the Saviour from the standpoint of his relations with persons and things round about Him. Thus, we have chapters on his view of the seen and the unseen worlds, on his estimate of other peoples than that to which He belonged according to the flesh, on his treatment of poor and rich, on his ways with children or with inquirers, and on his attitude towards sin, sorrow, and death. Dr. Walker does not speculate, or seek to discover hidden and occult interpretations; he very clearly and simply takes from the Gospel narratives general and well-supported impressions. The cumulative effect of these deeply interesting and freshly-written studies is powerful and weighty, and the book has a distinct evidential value, leading the reader to adopt the words of the children's hymn writer:—

That simple, lovely, wondrous Life
Betrayed itself from heaven.

Perhaps one of the most interesting, because one of the most personal, chapters is that on Christ's "Kinsfolk and Friends." An acceptance of its standpoint would cut at the root of the Mariolatry and sacerdotalism of our day. We may make a brief extract which we commend to those who lay stress on the figment of apostolic succession:—

From what we know, we may safely affirm that the disciples of Christ had, to begin with, no social standing. A large proportion of them seem to have been fishermen, and the remainder were probably no higher in rank. Besides, they were no doubt justly designated as "ignorant and unlearned men." Not one of them (unless it was

* JESUS CHRIST AND HIS SURROUNDINGS, by Dr. Norman L. Walker. (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.)

Judas) possessed the scholarship of a Scribe; and not one could claim to have had the position of a Ruler, or even the religious reputation of a Pharisee. But we are by no means to conclude from this that in choosing his immediate followers from among the humble and unlettered classes Christ acted on the constraint of necessity. He made his selection freely and deliberately as the one best fitted to serve his ends. He confounded the wisdom of the wise and vindicated his own authority by using agencies which were obviously incompetent in themselves. Perhaps He acted as He did because He knew that in the unsophisticated men whom He called to his help He would find instruments better fitted to do his work than if He had laid his hands on the most accomplished members of the Sanhedrim.

*The Spirit of Antichrist.

A BOOK in many respects remarkable, on Christianity and Anti-Christianity, has come from the pen of Samuel J. Andrews, author of "The Life of our Lord upon the Earth," and other well-known studies on high themes. To many the title will suggest speculation and little more; but such an inference will be altogether wide of the mark, for the book is devoted rather to present-day tendencies than to theorising upon prophetic anticipations.

Philosophers and theologians agree that we are passing through an age of chaos or reconstruction; and prophetic students are by no means alone in discerning "the signs of the times." The New Testament speaks of Antichrist. To ascertain the mind of the great enemy of Christ, our author conducts an inquiry regarding the place of Christ in the Divine purpose, and as to his person and prerogatives.

We must be clear about Christ before we can have any correct ideas regarding Antichrist. Proceeding, Mr. Andrews traces the falling away of the Church, as seen in her relation to (1) the Head, (2) the Holy Ghost, and (3) to the world. And he finds the root of the apostasy in the loss of first love, and not in doctrinal error.

Then began that spiritual separation from the Head, which cannot cease till the first love has been regained. The Church has not, indeed, ceased to be his body; the Holy Ghost has not ceased to dwell in it, and to act through its various ministries, and has continued to make the preaching of the Gospel effectual to individual salvation, and to fill sacraments and ordinances with supernatural power, and to embody divine truth in creeds and professions of faith; but it early ceased to be so responsive to the will of the Head that his full headship could be put forth. Its members did not attain unto "the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God." It has been like a human body partially paralysed.

To the loss of the first love Mr. Andrews attributes sad consequences under the head of Unity, Obedience, the Truth, and the Desire for the Return of the Lord. Ceasing to be one with their Head in the union of love, the members of the body soon ceased to be one among themselves in the same unity. With the loss of love came disobedience, and

THE MYSTERY OF LAWLESSNESS.

The Church failed to attain to the full truth, and to the unity of the faith, and lost more and more the desire for the Lord's Return.

The third part of the book is devoted to an inquiry into the spirit of Antichrist, and an examination of the tendencies preparing the way for the Antichrist of New Testament prophecy. These are found in (1) modern pantheistic philosophy; (2) modern philosophy and the new Christianity; (3) the deification of humanity; (4) and tendencies of Biblical criticism, science, literature, and socialism. In the fourth part, on the reign of the Antichrist, it is clearly shown that in the name of religion and civilisation all the prerogatives of Christ have been explicitly or implicitly denied; on the one hand He has been openly disowned and repudiated, on the other He has been bowed out of being and memory in terms of the extremest courtesy. Spencer and Harrison are quoted as prophets of the Church of the Future—to be based upon natural religion, as a Church of Humanity, a pure Theism (not Christian), and controlled by the State on anti-Christian principles. Well does Mr. Andrews write:—

Through the silence of the Church as to her Living Head and his prerogatives, He passes gradually from the thoughts of men. As to all present offices of teaching and rule, He becomes practically non-existent. He is far off, and is silent because He cannot speak by the Holy Ghost. We must go back, it is said, to his work in the past. We have his earthly teachings in a book; let them be our guide. But there is no agreement as to their meaning. Shall we take the interpretation of the early disciples? But why? Age gives wisdom, and the nineteenth century is better able to interpret them than the first. We are not to be bound by the letter. In spirit Christianity is a world-religion; let us make it so by striking out all that is particular and exclusive. To this end let us study all religions and widen our Christianity; let us enlarge the Church to take in, not only the baptized, but all seekers after truth of every creed; so shall we attain a universal religion and a universal Church.

This sentiment, so dishonourable to the Person of Christ, is righteously denounced. Needless to say, the author finds in this spirit a tendency distinctly anti-Christian. He looks for the consummation of evil in the appearance of one who shall be filled with Satanic energy. In view of the tendencies indicated and exposed, he holds that the doctrine of the Incarnation is the truth which stands in most urgent need of proclamation.

The duty of the Church to the world is plain. She must affirm with far greater distinctness and vigour than she has done since Apostolic days the prerogatives of her Head; and warn the world that He lives, to whom the Father has given all authority and dominion in heaven and earth; and that He will not always suffer his authority to be derided, and his Father's name to be blasphemed.

Two Missionaries.

CHRISTIAN work in Africa is in many respects different from such endeavour in China, but if it is undertaken in the fear of God it calls for men who shall resemble one another in important points of character as well as in spiritual equipment. So we find a like devotion and courage in David Hill, the missionary to the Flowery Land, whose loss the Methodist Church still mourns, and George Lawrence Pilkington, whose energetic service in East Equatorial Africa will not be omitted from the honours roll of the Church Missionary Society.

David Hill of China.

The life of David Hill* is from the pen of his friend, Mr. Barber, who has succeeded Dr. Moulton in the head-mastership of the Leys School, Cambridge. With perfect truth is the subject described as "missionary and saint"; he held on his life of noble service in spite of the many discouragements which seem peculiar to labour in the Chinese field, and by singleness of purpose and simplicity of life he showed himself as unworldly as he was truly devoted to his Lord.

A native of York, and coming of a godly stock, Hill was born in 1840, and early converted to God. The gifts and graces which he displayed in opening youth naturally arrested attention, and he was placed on the roll of local preachers in the Methodist Church. At length, with a view to fuller service, he entered Richmond Theological College, and went through the prescribed course of study and training. Not yet had he become a missionary, but he had given every evidence of being one of God's saints.

Though Hill's own inclination pointed in another direction, he listened to the sad needs of China, and in 1864 joined the newly-planted Central China Mission of the Wesleyan Missionary Society. First at Hankow, and afterwards at Wuchang and Kwangchi, amidst dense populations, he laboured with unwearying industry, being on the most cordial terms with other workers, including Griffith John and Thomas Bryson, of the L.M.S. At the outset he had a spell of illness which caused serious anxiety, but after a trip to Japan he recovered, and subsequently enjoyed immunity from the malaria which attends on the Chinese climate.

Wedded to his work, Hill remained single all his life. He was "Chinese to the Chinese," in order that by every means he might save them, and passed his time in conditions of almost ascetic simplicity. He served Christ in all lowliness and meekness. While the people called him "foreign devil," he prayed for them, and sought their good. He was greatly beloved by his fellow labourers, Messrs. Scarborough, Napier, and others; but, seeing that during his long years of service, floods, famines, panics, and rebellions alternated, as they seem ever to have done, he had neither opportunity nor temptation to retire from the midst of men. There were trials and disappointments—who has them not?—but Hill never despaired. His philanthropy developed as the years sped by, but not to the injury of ministry of a definitely Christian character.

Mr. Hill's first furlough was after an absence of seventeen years, and his energetic advocacy of the cause of China left him little time for holiday rest while at home. Returning to his labour, he organised a large number of institutions, evangelistic, medical, educational, and social. For many years he was financially independent of the Missionary Society. His sense of the stewardship of money is shown in the following letter written to a friend:—

In meeting with the leaders and stewards of our Hankow church, I have recently been dwelling on the necessity, for the sake of their own spiritual life, of giving one-tenth of their income to the Lord's work. I certainly do not think that too much for the majority of them, and I do think it too little for many of us—of course for myself, but then I stand on exceptional ground. My plan is to live economically, spending comparatively little on myself, and giving all the rest of my income away; should God's work increase, and demands of incumbent work and duty increase, then cut into capital if need be...I don't think you would be wrong in parting with one-tenth if you live with fair economy, and study a wise disposal of that tenth, and, above all, give it direct to Him—

Too much to Thee I cannot give,
Too much I cannot do for Thee;
Let all thy love and all thy grief
Graven in my heart for ever be.

The man who could write this letter may well be described as a "missionary and saint." It was love for souls that enabled him on another occasion to write:—

Poverty presents greater attractions to me as I go on in life, and look round on the world and on the New Testament records of the teachings of our Lord.

As Mr. Barber tells us, after inheriting a considerable capital, Hill seriously pondered the advice of a good missionary friend to follow literally the Lord's word to the rich young ruler, "Sell all that thou hast, and give to the poor." The book must tell the story of Mr. Hill's second furlough, and of his death while at his post in China. Needless to say he sorrowed over the opium curse. He was a lovable man, and Mr. Barber has written of him with a true and warm sympathy. The letters are full of human interest, and the meditations very welcome.

Pilkington of Uganda.

IN goodness and grace, Mr. Pilkington was of a piece with the missionary whose career has just been outlined; in temperament and talents he was somewhat dissimilar. Scholarly and resourceful, he was a man sure to succeed in anything to which he gave his heart and mind. Placing himself at the disposal of his Lord and Master, he left on one side all personal aims and ambitions, and set upon his life-work in a right loyal and dutiful spirit. Dr. Harford-Battersby, Principal of Livingstone College, has told the story* with a friendly pen. Where possible, he has allowed Pilkington to speak for himself, by reproducing letters sent from time to time to friends. In these the missionary unfolds the thoughts of his heart, and describes the work in which he was engaged.

The son of a distinguished member of the Irish Bar, Pilkington was born at Dublin in 1865, and passed his childhood in rural scenes in county Westmeath. He early showed signs of the activity and power of application which characterised him in maturer years. At Uppingham School he came under good influences, and ever afterwards spoke of Edward Thring in terms of admiration. The love of books did not exclude attention to the inevitable sports and games. It was the same at Cambridge, where Pilkington entered Pembroke College in 1884, simultaneously with several men who proved remarkable for their evangelistic spirit.

The time was favourable for action on the part of earnest men, as two years previously Messrs. Moody and Sankey had visited Cambridge, and some notable conversions had followed their preaching. And just then the well-known "Cambridge Seven" were saying farewell, before sailing Eastward to work in connection with the China Inland Mission. Another movement to which Dr. Harford-Battersby refers was the Children's Special Service Mission, in connection with which Mr. Edwin Arrowsmith was organising efforts to reach the children of the "poor rich." Though he had been outwardly religious, Pilkington had not known peace with God; but now came the time of crisis. For a while he laboured under conviction of sin; and at length, through studying the Scriptures and striving with God in prayer, he attained rest of soul. His friend, Rev. Murray Webb-Peploe, writes:—

> I know of no human instrument in the matter. I believe he withdrew himself into the desert of loneliness, as it were, alone with God—and prayed until the light came direct from God in his written Word. I cannot help thinking that this was what made Pilkington such a champion afterwards for the Truth of God in the Bible. His change of heart, his conversion, was not of man, nor by man, but entirely the work of God the Holy Ghost, to whom be all the glory. This one thing he used to tell me, however, that he thanked God for his faithful friends at Cambridge, who, in his own words, "would not let him alone" until they saw the grace of God working in his heart.

Though for a while Pilkington realised Christian privileges and responsibilities in small measure only, he lost little time, after conversion, in testifying for Christ. Growth in grace followed, and those who knew him well remarked upon the facility with which he was able to say "a word in season." Having taken his degree, and passed a short time in reading theology, he left Cambridge in 1887; but he still continued to be known as "Pilks" by those who had made his acquaintance at School and College.

It looked as if he was cut out for a schoolmaster, and doubtless he was fully equipped for that honourable profession. But the need of the heathen world had been seriously urged upon his attention, though, in deference to his father's wish, he had put off decision for two years. Meantime, he worked in connection with the Children's Special Service Mission, in company with other University men, visiting grammar schools and holding special meetings for young people. He also took temporary duty as a master at Harrow, and acted as assistant master in Bedford Grammar School. But the cry of the heathen world still sounded in his ears, and when, in 1889, Mr. Douglas Hooper appealed for labourers for East Africa, in connection with the great enterprise of the Church Missionary Society, Pilkington again opened his heart to his parents. Permission was now given in a noble spirit, the father saying to the mother, "God has asked for him, and we must give him."

The book tells in interesting detail the story of what followed—the departure, the landing, and the first taste of fever; the journey inland, with its dangers and delays, the time being "improved" by the study of the language, and this with such success that before Mengo was reached in December, 1890, Kiganda was being freely used by the ardent young missionary! The book also outlines the circumstances under which the Uganda Mission was first undertaken, after Mr. Stanley's memorable challenge in 1875, also its trials and troubles up to date, as they cluster round the names of Hannington, Mackay, and others. From "roughing it" on the march, the mission party settled down at length to hard work at the various stations, and great responsibilities, in the way of teaching and translating, fell upon the shoulders of Mr. Pilkington. Civil war was not allowed to stop the work; and books were sent through the land, native helpers being raised up to circulate the printed message.

In the translation of the Scriptures and other books Pilkington did a great and abiding work. It may be well to give his own judgment as to the utility of his early studies as fitting him for active service:—

> Let those who are sometimes inclined to feel that the years spent on Greek and Latin were partially wasted come out here, and in one short year I venture to say they will have "redeemed the time" so spent. Do any such think they are too good for Africa? If so, may God forgive them a thought so presumptuous and silly! They will get no higher returns on any abilities—spiritual, intellectual, physical—which God has given them for investment, than they will get in Africa, and, perhaps, especially here. Every qualified worker ought to be the means, in God's hands, of sending out in a few years' time, say twenty, well-taught, spiritual, zealous Baganda, as missionaries to the surrounding nations—each one of them in many ways far superior to an English missionary.

The sowing of years has since been followed by reaping on a large scale, and by the aid of letters from other missionaries Dr. Harford-Battersby is able to give a good account of the revival in Uganda, in which missionaries and people alike were greatly blessed. In 1895, Pilkington came home on furlough; it was "just like him" that he should make the return journey inland on his bicycle! It is still within recollection that in the mutiny, last year, the man who had done good and not ill for the country, was shot during conflict with the rebels. The book before us rehearses the sad story, and from first to last is a worthy memorial of an eminently fruitful life.

Poems.

ALL who have read Mr. Mackenzie Bell's delightful book of verse, "Spring's Immortality," will give a ready welcome to his latest venture into the fields of poesy, PICTURES OF TRAVEL AND OTHER POEMS. (3s. 6d. Hurst & Blackett.) Here we find the same lofty reverence of conception—far removed from all that is base—the same clearness of vision and musical simplicity of phrase. Mr. Bell is eminently a poet for the people. The short poems of travel contain many gems of descriptive beauty; and the most ambitious effort in the book, "The Battle's Pause," is at once novel in plan and fine in execution. As a sample of the author's practical method, we give the following cheering lines from the poem entitled "To a Worker Among the Poor":—

> That bravery is not yours which men acclaim;
> That bravery is not yours which gives man fame;
> Yours is the courage which but few suspect;
> Yours is the courage which can bear neglect;
> Yours is the courage which can suffer long,
> The courage of the man whose soul is strong,
> Who labours on, still doing silent good,
> Nor stays his hand for man's ingratitude.

THE LATE MR. G. L. PILKINGTON.
(From Photograph by Messrs. Elliott and Fry, 55, Baker-street, W.)

Dr. J. R. Macduff was a sweet singer of the modern Israel, and had many admirers while he lived. Messrs. Cassell & Co. have issued two pretty volumes of selections, chiefly sacred, from his earlier and later poems, under the title of MATIN AND VESPER BELLS. (2 vols., 7s. 6d. the set.) The themes are very varied, but all the poems are marked by deep spiritual feeling and chasteness of workmanship. Here are a couple of stanzas taken from a long series of verse suggested by memorable sayings of Christ; the saying in this case is Matt. vi. 33:—

> Crowns and coronets are fading;
> Icarus with golden wing
> Falls beneath the burning sun-heat,
> All things here are perishing.
> Seek no portion in the finite;
> Blooms the flower and then it dies.
> Virtue is alone immortal,
> Singing down the centuries.

The following verse is from an exquisite little sermon-poem on the prodigal and the Father:—

> Return, return, why any longer linger,
> There are sandals for your feet, and a ring to deck your finger;
> Your Father reconciled,
> With pity will behold you,
> In his arms He will enfold you,
> Come back, come back, my child.

SACRED POEMS OF THE CENTURY, edited by Kate A. Wright (2s. 6d. nett. Simpkin, Marshall), does not pretend to be at all an exhaustive or even comprehensive collection. It rather gives samples of less known efforts in sacred verse. Those with the poetic temperament and an eye for the spiritually beautiful will appreciate this choice compilation. We hope it will meet with wide acceptance.

The Christian Ministry.

"SO many men, so many minds" may fairly be regarded as expressing the variety of thought prevalent regarding the Christian ministry. What with priests and presbyters, preachers and pastors, it should be easy to make a list of terms employed more or less generally, and often without intended distinction, to designate men who serve Christian churches and carry forward Gospel work.

A thoughtful work, on lines which would by most be described as evangelical, has been published by Rev. J. Foster Lepine, of Maidstone, entitled THE MINISTERS OF JESUS CHRIST: A Biblical Study. (5s. Longmans, Green, & Co.) Proceeding on a method largely inductive, the author shows good judgment as well as care in treating his important theme; and with reason he adds a chapter on the Lord's Supper. His "points of review" speak for themselves:—

> In the history of man's drawing near to God we see the rise of what is afterwards known as priestly privilege.
> In the history of God's covenants with man we see the investment of a chosen nation with priestly privilege.
> In the history of God's drawing near to man we see the establishment of the office of the priesthood.
> In the history of God becoming man we see the High Priesthood of our Saviour.
> In the history of man becoming a partaker of the Divine Nature we see the bestowment of priestly privilege on the whole Christian people.
> In the history of Christ's sending forth his apostles we see the delegation of the office of the Christian priesthood for the establishment and organisation of the Church of Christ.
> In the history of Apostolic ordination, and of subsequent ordination by those to whom authority to ordain was committed by the Apostles, we see the perpetuation of the office of the Christian priesthood as a means for the continuous bestowment of Christian priesthood on all who believe in Christ through their word.
> In all we see the direct action of the Holy Ghost, through, but not dominated by, human instrumentality; and that all gifts, whether for office or for unofficial exercise, and all appointment to office, came not from below but from above.

Some of these points are but weakly sustained in the book; others are proved "up to the hilt." They fairly indicate Mr. Lepine's position; and whatever may be said of particular conclusions, we have followed with great interest his definitions, analyses, and inferences, set forth in no controversial spirit, but based on Scripture story, and explained in the light of the teaching of men representing many sections of the Church of Christ.

*Dr. Parker on Dissent.

EVERYTHING that Dr. Parker writes is bound to compel attention, but we must confess we like him better as a Bible expositor than as a story teller. In this lively sketch of life among the Dissenters he finds full scope for his great powers of sarcasm, and he is impartially severe on the foibles alike of Churchman and Nonconformist. He is especially rough in his treatment of stingy "deekings" who starve devoted pastors; but the picture drawn is surely one-sided. All deacons may not be generous and considerate, but all ministers are not models of Christian courtesy and Christ-like humility. We do not think that either the pulpit or the pew can afford to throw stones at each other. The lisping, drawling Church curate is held up to ridicule, as also is the easy-going cleric who is greatly alarmed when his daughter shows symptoms of spiritual anxiety, and a yearning after reality in the religious life.

On the whole, while admitting that we have been vastly entertained by the cleverness of the book, we cordially agree with one of the characters, into whose mouth the worthy Doctor puts the sentiment that sectarian differences will never be satisfactorily solved by wordy wrangles and contentions, but by mutual forbearance and all possible co-operation.

Agatha's Unknown Way (1s. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier) is a missionary story by Pansy (Mrs. Alden). It shows how a strange mistake was overruled for good.

Underground Jerusalem.

THE extent and thoroughness of recent explorations in and around the Holy City are shown by the story told in EXCAVATIONS AT JERUSALEM, 1894-97, by Frederick Jones Bliss, Ph.D., with plans and illustrations by Archibald Campbell Dickie, A.R.I.B.A. (12s. Palestine Exploration Fund, 38, Conduit-street, W.) Rarely does one examine a book bearing so many evidences of scrupulous care and attention to minutest details.

Those who have followed the progress of research, as described from time to time in the Quarterly Statement of the P.E.F., will be acquainted with the general situation. Here the facts — archæological, topographical, and historical—are summarised in a comprehensive manner; and in the course of ten chapters, some rather technical, we read of the discovery of walls and chambers hitherto unknown, of churches and towers long lost to knowledge, of baths, pools, and tombs, as well as inscriptions, mosaics, and other works of art.

A specially interesting chapter is devoted to a historical sketch of the walls of Jerusalem, extending over a period of thirty-five centuries. If those walls could speak, what would they not be able to tell us of political ups and downs, of human sin and sorrow? Twenty times have they been besieged, twice razed to the ground. They have had different builders, who have built on very different lines. Jews, Romans, Oriental Christians, Crusaders, Arabs, have all left their traces. When the explorers began their work, these structures were almost entirely beneath the soil. So far as they have been unearthed, the story is told in these pages, with a wealth of chronological and other data. There are, moreover, just upon thirty plates, not to reckon plans and many illustrations; and the architect's notes explain these and much besides,

The Church of England.

AT length Messrs. Cassell have completed the issue, both in serial and volume form, of Dean Spence's work, THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND: A HISTORY FOR THE PEOPLE (Four vols., 6s. each). As we have from time to time pointed out, this history is the realisation of a plan so comprehensive, and characterized by sympathies so broad, that it may fairly be regarded as a sketch of the rise and progress of Christianity in our island. Assuredly this is true of the first volume, which dealt with the British and Anglo-Saxon church, and told in graphic style the ever-interesting story of the introduction of Christianity into Britain. The second volume was devoted to an account of the Mediæval Church; the third sketched the Reformation; and the concluding volume, now before us, describes, as the title page shows, the Anglican Church—bringing the history down from the reign of James I to the present time

Beautifully printed and lavishly illustrated, this work will go where more partisan or controversial histories would find no entry. It is picturesque and popular, and the result of wide reading, and a patient digesting of facts. Of course, Dr. Spence deals with many matters on which schools and parties hold varying and opposing views; but as a rule he is content to state positions with fairness, and to indicate his own preference in a gracious manner. The concluding volume contains a well-written chapter on "Wesley, Whitefield, and the Methodists," and notices of the labours of Charles Simeon and the good Lord Shaftesbury. It is hoped that this work, being read in the homes of the people, will do something to promote charity in regard to secondary questions and a true sense of the errors and dangers of Romanism.

THE title given by Mr. H. M. Stanley to the latest born of our known continents is fast becoming a misnomer. The records of exploitation or exploration, and of all that nowadays follows in their train, have thrown such light on these long-hidden regions that we seem to know much more about Africa than about lands where Christian civilisation has been at work for generations. This handbook, by a practised compiler, furnishes a convenient and excellent summary of the African history of the present century, and is of special interest at the present crisis in the Nile Valley.

The work is written in the true historic spirit of narrating facts, without political or national bias, and it may be commended to the student of the world's progress and of Divine providence.

* AFRICA IN THE NINETEENTH CENTURY. By Edgar Sanderson. (5s. Seeley & Co.)

An Art Bible.

RECENT years have witnessed much in the line of Scripture illustration by art, and to reproduce the works of great masters in this line is the aim of THE BAGSTER ART BIBLE: containing the Old and New Testaments according to the Authorized Version, together with a New Concordance, profusely embellished with full-page Illustrations. (17s. 6d. S. Bagster & Sons.) The text is printed in large clear type (long primer), with marginal references, and all proper names are so accented and marked as to facilitate ready and correct pronunciation. Hence this issue is styled "self-pronouncing." The concordance at the end is followed by an excellent set of maps.

The distinguishing feature of the book is its illustrations, which are about 130 in number, and after Hoet, Picart, Grosse, Hofmann, Schopin, Raphael, Plockhorst, Munkacsy, Doré, Correggio, and others. The selection includes many famous paintings, of which some Bible students will be glad to possess reproductions alongside the sacred text. The names which we have given are a sufficient indication of the great variety of art represented; but even where taste and principle would suggest criticism, these copies, for the most part well printed, of justly celebrated paintings, cannot but stimulate thought and excite interest. This Bible will meet the views of many as eminently suitable for presentation purposes.

No man is better fitted by sympathy and lengthened experience to tell the story of lifeboat rescue work in the English Channel than the worthy chaplain of the Missions to Seamen at Deal. In this book there are many thrilling tales told of peril on the angry waters, of wreck on the treacherous Goodwin Sands, and of brave deliverances effected by the heroic fellows who man the lifeboats on our stormy shores. There are also capital sketches of visits paid to the Goodwins, and the men in charge of lightships in calmer seas, and of work done for seamen in other places. Altogether, it is a record that ought to increase our admiration of the services rendered by our lifeboats, and to awaken practical sympathy with the great national institution that carries on this saving work.

Dean Farrar on Reading.*

THE papers on good reading and on the masterpieces of such great writers as Shakespeare, Dante, Milton, and Bunyan, which have appeared in The Sunday Magazine for the current year, are now reissued in book form. They are an extremely able and welcome contribution to those forces that make for righteousness in the struggle constantly waged between elevating and corrupting literature. In the introductory chapters the eloquent Dean commands the assent of all true and noble minds by his appraisement of good books and his condemnation of those that degrade and debase. The expositions of our great English dramatist's plays, of the immortal poems of the Florentine monk, and of the more popular "Pilgrim's Progress" and "Paradise Lost," are at once discriminating and illuminating. We specially welcome the Dean's tribute to the value of Bunyan's writings, and hope that the book will find its way into the hands of many thoughtful, serious-minded young people of both sexes.

* THE CRY FROM THE SEA, AND THE ANSWER FROM THE SHORE. By Rev. Thomas Stanley Treanor. (3s. 6d. Religious Tract Society).

* GREAT BOOKS. By F. W. Farrar, D.D., Dean of Canterbury. (5s. Isbister & Co.)

Brief Notices.

AN Album for Crests, Monograms, and Coats or Arms is an attractive publication by E. Nister (1s. upwards, according to binding). From the same house come illuminated motto cards, in various sizes, with floral and other emblems and texts of Scripture.

We have noticed several small publications on prophetic subjects by Mr. W. W. Fereday. His latest book is, The Lord will Reign: Being Six Papers on Prophecy. (1s. Alfred Holness) The pages are thoughtful, and embody views that are very generally entertained by those who are awaiting the Lord's return.

The series of "Sunday Books" (8d. each) issued by George Newnes, Ltd., include three volumes of allegories – The Shadow of the Cross and the Old Man's Home, by Rev. William Adams, M.A.; The King's Messengers and the Distant Hills, by the same author; and The Combatants, by the late Rev. Edward Monro, M.A. At a glance it is evident that there is good reading in these tasteful little books.

Rev. Charles Jerdan, M.A., LL.B., whose "Messages to the Children" met with such high appreciation, now gives us For the Lord's Table: A Book of Communion Addresses. (5s. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier.) Fifty in number, these addresses are on topics fitly chosen, and will be valued as a help in private devotions, as well as prove useful to pastors requiring suggestion for communion addresses.

Consequent upon an earnest conversation with a gentleman who found difficulty in accepting some articles of the Christian faith, Rev. W. H. Langhorne, M.A., rector of Worton, Oxon, set himself the task of stating once again, for the benefit of such as are in mental distress or doubt, the grounds on which true religion rests. Hence a little volume, Aids to Belief: Being Studies on the Divine Origin of Christianity. (5s. Elliot Stock.) The author has not aimed at thoroughness, but at utility; and as a simple statement of outstanding facts and arguments his book will doubtless do good service.

Calendars and "Keswick Cards" for 1899. (Walter G. Wheeler, 17, Paternoster-row.) The latest issues from this well-known house comprise a splendid assortment of designs, with admirably chosen wording. The leaflet series (6d.) have poems by Frances Ridley Havergal and others. The booklets (1d. to 6d.) are very choice, while the cards supply a wealth of artistic designs, with texts and seasonable wishes. The mottoes (1d. and 2d.), supplied with silk cord for hanging, are admirable; and, indeed, the entire issue is so good as to command immediate popularity.

There seems to be a peculiar fascination for modern readers in information as to prominent personalities. Doubtless it is this element in public taste which has induced Mr. T. H. S. Escott, the well-known essayist, to write a book on Personal Forces of the Period. (6s. Hurst & Blackett.) The sketches are eminently readable and informing, and enable the reader to form clearer conceptions of the course of current social and political movements. It is a somewhat risky thing to comment with such freedom as the author does on living persons, but all is done in a kindly charitable spirit, and Mr. Escott says he has taken pains to verify what seemed doubtful information.

Some who are looking out for books suited for Christmas and New Year gifts, will be glad to learn that S. W. Partridge & Co. have issued Frank H. White's Christ in the Tabernacle, handsomely bound in leather and specially suited for presentation purposes (5s). Pastor White's book, which includes remarks on the offerings, is a spiritual feast. Its teaching power is greatly assisted by twelve chromolithographs. As men desire to know more of Christ, they will have a deepened interest in the types which are so rich in meaning. The latest issue of Mr. White's book bears on the title page the words "Fourteenth Thousand." What a blessed and influential ministry this means! We trust the book will be still more largely circulated in its various forms.

The Holy Scriptures are variously viewed, and dealt with in many ways. The Bible as Literature, by twenty-one different writers, is confessedly a one-sided treatment. With the exception of Dr. A. B. Bruce, of Glasgow, all the contributors are Americans, and they include: Professors Richard G. Moulton, Willis J. Beecher, Samuel Ives Curtiss, and George B. Stevens. The chapters deal in summary style with books of the Bible or groups of books, and are unequal in quality as well as in length. The papers relating to the New Testament are the most useful, the writers including Professor Marvin R. Vincent, on the Parables; Professor G. Frederick Wright, on Luke as an Historian; and Professor Rush Rhees, on the Fourth Gospel. (6s. Service & Paton.)

Mr. Elliot Stock has issued a cheap edition of Dr. G. S. Barrett's work, The Intermediate State and the Last Things; also of Our Christian Year: Lessons for elder scholars in Church Sunday-schools and Bible-classes, by A Teacher.

The latest issue in the cheap edition of "The Keswick Library" is The Life of Fellowship, by Rev. E. W. Moore, M.A. The chapters, five in number, deal with a great subject in the aspects of its nature, conditions, and fellowship. (8d. net. Marshall Bros.)

A useful little work by Mrs. G. E. Morton is Short Chapters on Genesis. (London: Partridge & Co.; Bristol: Mack & Co.) The story of the earth's childhood, and of the events belonging to Israel's beginnings, is simply told, and the result is over a hundred brief readings, devotional in tone, and well suited for use at family prayer.

In a thoughtful little book, The Imperial Heritage, Ernest Edwin Williams gives a birdseye view of the British colonies. The glimpse of empire thus gained should stimulate a sense of responsibility on the part of all British citizens. Heraldic and other illustrations are thrown in. (2s. 6d. Ward, Lock & Co.)

One of the most industrious Christian authors in America is Rev. J. R. Miller, of Philadelphia, but everything that comes from his pungent and practical pen is welcome. The S.S. Union have published a new sixpenny booklet by Dr. Miller entitled, Why Should we Worry? Nothing better could be put into the hands of anxious-minded Christians and all on whom the inevitable burdens of life press heavily.

A suggestive volume has been issued by the Sunday School Union, with the title Stories of Bible Nations; early days on the Nile, the Tigris, and the Euphrates. (2s.) The author is Miss Edith Ralph, whose earlier writings in a like line of study met with high appreciation. Old and young alike will be the wiser for these studies of Egypt, Chaldea, and Assyria. There are helpful illustrations, some of them reproductions from the monuments.

The relation of Christian personality to wealth and social redemption is the big subject of a handy treatise entitled Selfhood and Service, by David Beaton, of Chicago (3s. 6d. Oliphant, Anderson and Ferrier.) In the language of sobriety and earnestness the author maintains, in eighteen thoughtful chapters, that wealth is a trust, the wise and Christian administration of which demands the exercise of the noblest religious character and the rarest civic spirit. It is hoped that many who enjoy the stewardship of wealth will read these pages, and that others also will realise by Mr. Beaton's aid that Christian selfhood which is set forth as the "richest form of personality."

In The Soul: Here and Hereafter, by R. E. Hutton, chaplain of St. Margaret's, East Grinstead (6s. Longmans, Green & Co.), there is thought, but not specially strong or deep. The author has read widely, and quotes standard works; but his sympathies lean towards mediæval opinion. We observe on some points pronouncements distinctly opposed to what usually passes for Protestant teaching; as, for instance, when the sacraments are declared to be "definitely ordained points of contact between God and man," and described as seven in number. This, of course, is, to all intents and purposes, the teaching of Rome.

As a text is to a sermon, so has been St. Paul's shortest letter to Rev. Archibald Kelly McMurchy, who has published a series of expositions on The Epistle of Paul to Philemon. (3s. 6d. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier.) Twenty-four discourses and an appendix are seen to correspond in a way with the twenty-five verses into which the gracious letter has been divided up. The treatment is by no means mechanical in form; on the contrary, the book is so easy and flowing as to be every one's reading. And assuredly the Epistle deserves the most thoughtful and sympathetic opening up, with its great and varied lessons bearing on life and godliness. As the sermons comprise "The Scone Free Church Pulpit," a frontispiece gives a picture of the church.

The late Dr. James H. Brookes, of St. Louis, was a powerful writer on Holy Scripture and its authority; and many will be glad to possess a volume of addresses which he delivered towards the close of his useful life—God Spake all these Words: A Statement and Defence of the Supernatural Origin and Inerrant Inspiration of God's Holy Word. (2s. 6d. Pickering & Inglis, Glasgow; Bagster, London.) Opening with a chapter on human testimony regarding the Bible, the book proceeds to unfold Scripture teaching as to God and man, and to speak of its component parts and marvellous qualities, concluding with addresses on the regenerating message of the Book and the testimony of councils and confessions regarding it. The pages are full of facts and arguments of great value to those who would do their part in the defence of the faith.

is the Best Penny Illustrated Religious Magazine in the World.

Why The Home Magazine is the very Paper which ought to be found in every home:—

Because it is imbued with the cleanly, healthy spirit we are accustomed to associate with the tranquil and pure atmosphere which, whatever cynics may say to the contrary, enshrouds the typical Christian home.

Because it gives hints and information intended to be of assistance in the work of a home.

Because it is packed full of articles and stories, contributed by the most talented writers, and illustrated by the best artists. These will entertain and instruct every member of a family—the head of the house after his day's toil, his wife in her brief leisure moments, and the children when lessons are over.

HOME MISSIONS CONVENTION.

THREE DAYS AT EXETER HALL.

THIS conference was an excellent idea; and the Y.M.C.A., as a neutral and interdenominational body, was a most appropriate agency through which to carry it out. The programme, as our readers will have noted, was a comprehensive one. It embraced the leading religious societies in London, and some not confined to London, devoted to the work of home missions. Thus the conference was a fitting successor to that on foreign missions held in the same place a year ago.

The ground covered was so wide that our report must necessarily be only a brief summary of the statements made and views expressed. For the readers of THE CHRISTIAN, at any rate, no detailed account is needful, as its columns are continually occupied with accounts of some or other of the departments of Christian service represented.

WEDNESDAY, NOV. 16.

"TO THE JEW FIRST"

was the principle on which the framers of the programme acted. The opening meeting on the forenoon of the opening day was allotted to the different societies at work among the sons of Israel. The attendance was not large—an index, perhaps, as Mr. J. E. MATHIESON, the chairman, remarked, of the prevailing apathy in our churches as to the position and future of the Jews. In his few but appropriate opening words, Mr. Mathieson alluded to the remarkable spectacle we have recently seen of a great European figure flaunting in the face of Europe as an ally of the unspeakable Turk. It was not a very edifying spectacle. Nevertheless, God's plan and purpose concerning the Land and the People will be fulfilled, whoever the human agent or agents may be.

As representing the London Jews Society, Rev. J. M. EPPSTEIN gave some cogent reasons in favour of missions to the Jews—reasons pretty familiar to us all. We are all greatly indebted to them for what they have done in the past; they are to be the great apostolic missionaries of a future age; they are dangerous as enemies, but if their friendship is cultivated, what a help to the world they may be! Think of how one Jew, Dreyfus, has upset France. The speaker was strong in his protest against the hyper-criticism—we presume he meant the higher criticism—in its attitude towards the Scriptures. The Jew believes, he said, that nearly the whole of the Bible is verbally inspired.

Rev. M. NACHIM, an agent of the British Jews Society, said it had a glorious record of fifty-six years. It carries on work in such large centres as Manchester, Liverpool, Birmingham, and Leeds, and also in Germany, Austria, Russia, and Turkey. Some well known names were mentioned as among the fruits of the Society's work, and as many details as the brief time permitted of its endeavours faithfully carried on in Roumania, London, and elsewhere. Though they did not attempt to number converts, the reality of the work cannot be questioned. Mr. Nachim deplored the lack of prayer in our Christian churches generally on behalf of the Jews. Let Gentiles show greater gratitude to the Jewish people and do more for their evangelisation, and God would bless them for it.

As an interlude between the setting forth of work for the Jew, there came at this stage a short address from Dr. HENRY SOLTAU as to the operations of

THE LONDON MEDICAL MISSION.

In introducing him, the chairman said he could never understand how so many Christian ministers were so anxious to be in the line of a so-called "Apostolical succession," when they might satisfy a much nobler ambition in imitating Jesus Christ, who not only redeemed the souls but healed the bodies of sinful men. The modern medical missionary is the closest imitator of our Lord.

Dr. SOLTAU said he spoke on behalf, not merely of the St. Giles work, but of all medical mission efforts in London, the chief of which he recited. He described the routine work at such a mission. They never need to go and search for people to work among—there are open doors everywhere, among Jews and Gentiles alike. The sick children are tended and cheered. The ailing working men and women are reached as no other agency can reach them. Roman Catholics also come within the scope of the mission in their own homes, and real blessing results. The medical missions, moreover, are a capital training ground for many Christian young women when they are preparing for their future work at home and abroad. The last hope of a city like London is the medical mission, which gets at people when all other means are hopeless.

The "Invalid Kitchen" is a very helpful auxiliary to the spiritual part of the work. So are the convalescent home at Folkestone, which has proved a priceless boon to those recovering from illness, and the holiday house for the children. A hospital for measles and whooping cough is greatly needed. Dr. Soltau's hurried but comprehensive sketch was intensely interesting.

JEWISH CONVERTS.

Recurring to the Jew, Rev. H. OLIVER ALLBROOK, of the Operative Jewish Converts' Home, carried on in connection with the London Jews Society, took the platform. "It is not surprising," he said, "that among Jews the conversions to the Christian belief are few and reluctant." Romanism and its concomitant ritualism, the higher criticism, Russian persecution, British Alien Immigration Bills, and other signs of a degraded and decadent Christianity were cited as obstacles in the way of the Jew changing his faith. A conscientious Jew will be a conscientious Christian. The genuine Jewish convert is extremely unwilling to take a dole from others; hence the value of the Operative Home, where converts are received and trained for three years, without regard to sectarian antecedents. Several points touching on the sensitiveness of the Jewish convert in matters of relationship, of patriotism, of friendship, etc., were expounded and illustrated by reference to the example of the Apostle Paul. One of the converts now in the Home is familiar with a dozen different tongues. Such men can carry the message of the Gospel wherever they go.

The closing speaker of the forenoon was Rev. S. H. WILKINSON, of

THE MILDMAY MISSION TO THE JEWS.

He gave a rapid outline sketch of the origin, progress, and success of the mission, founded by his father, and with which he had been personally associated for the last sixteen years. The sewing classes for women, begun early in the history of the mission, continue still and are a great channel of blessing. The night school for children is another most interesting part of the work, and one the blessed outcome of which it is not easy to conjecture. A Medical Mission carried on reached 4500 separate individuals in the course of a year. Work is provided for young Jews in various branches of industry, and the effort amongst the deserving poor is very extensive. The work of the Mildmay Missions has extended to the provinces. Much has been done in the way of distributing the New Testament, and it has been manifestly blessed of God. Nearly a million copies in Hebrew have been scattered in different parts of the world among Jews, either through the agents of the Mission or those of other societies. The believing Jews in some parts prefer to remain in their own communion rather than be publicly baptized as Christians, and it is not for us to condemn these in all cases.

To illustrate this Mr. Wilkinson told of a visit to Warsaw a year ago, when, at a little Jewish meeting, he saw a very beautiful young Jewess, the daughter of an old orthodox rabbi. He learned from her own lips that she was a believer in Christ. "I not only believe in Him, but I love Him." This young woman, though still in the Jewish communion, supports her household by boot-cleaning, and spends about half her time in visiting the sick. Apart altogether from any roll of baptism, as the fruit of past efforts much has been done and is being done to permeate the Jewish people with the knowledge of Jesus Christ and his salvation. It is in contemplation, said the speaker in closing, to purchase and distribute an additional half million New Testaments, printed in the jargon language of the lowest form, so as to ensure its being understood by the lowest classes of Jews in Russia.

The hour from one to two was given up to the usual

with Mr. HENRY CONDER as president. The petitions presented combined prayer for young men in connection with the special week of prayer for them, and for the work of home missions as represented at the convention.

The special home mission reported on during this hour was the Field Lane Refuges. Mr. PLATT, the secretary, told of early difficulty in connection with the work, and how one evening in those days four of the workers, after a time of great trial, held a prayer meeting under a lamp-post in the Gray's Inn-road, desiring guidance as to whether they should continue. At that little meeting in the open street they received such cheer and inspiration that the Mission had a great and growing impetus. The work of the refuges is a double one—that of relieving the necessities of the very poor and needy and of spiritual effort for the salvation of men.

The operations of the Mission are manifold Attached to the refuges for men and women is a crèche, and in these three some seventy or eighty cases are dealt with daily. Each case is treated on its merits, with no hard and fast rules as to the time of stay, so that the best may be done for all One striking example given was that of a human wreck, the son of a bank manager, who remained in the refuge long enough to have his heart changed and his father's heart rejoiced at the great revolution in his life. The industrial branch of the work in training lads for honest employment, and the interesting work of the crèche were commented on. The purely mission work is extensive—thirty-two meetings a week of different sorts. A Sunday morning service for tramps, after a simple breakfast, is an encouraging effort. These vagrants sit and listen with attention to the Gospel message, so that holy memories are awakened and hearts are changed. Last Sunday there were 699 present at this ragged church. Some 450 women attend the mothers' meeting service on Monday afternoons; it is a distinctly missionary work. A Bible woman visits the poor, and there are many provident agencies at work.

The results cannot be tabulated, but they have been such as to give encouragement to the workers to go on. One case mentioned was specially appropriate for recital at the Y.M.C.A. A young gentleman, who had fallen very low, tramped up from the country and went into the Y.M.C.A. prayer-meeting. At the close he was spoken to by one who advised him to go to Field Lane, "for," he added, "they took me in, and I was restored to respectability and usefulness by the grace of God." The broken-down man took his advice, was received, and is doing well.

After the dinner interval the conference reassembled again in small numbers, though the six organisations reported on represented a very wide and varied sphere of Christian service. The chairman, Mr. EDWARD RAWLINGS, said that in order to the success of any good work there must be abounding enthusiasm.

THE RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY

had the place of honour in the business of the afternoon, and its capable advocate was Rev. RICHARD LOVETT, one of the editorial secretaries. The work of the Society, he said, is world-wide; it is preaching the Gospel in nearly 230 languages. It is also a great evangelical agency; and this remark evoked a hearty cheer in view of the present anti-evangelical movement. Referring especially to the home part of the work, Mr. Lovett briefly alluded to the encouragement of local libraries by the dissemination of good books, the scattering of thirty-five millions of tracts annually, the granting of good literature to those workers who have the means of usefully distributing it among the careless, and the helping on of Scriptural study in Board Schools. The work done by the R.T.S. is brought into sharp relief when contrasted with the bad and doubtful literature which it seeks to depose and counteract. As to the scope of the Society's operations Mr. Lovett quoted a year's statistics of certain portions of its work. For instance, in one year 157 libraries had been established, representing two piles of books as high as the Nelson column in Trafalgar-square. As to the usefulness of that little messenger, the tract, testimonies are constantly coming to the Society's headquarters. One or two examples of the way in which the work acts concluded the address. One wrote that a story-book published by the Society was the means of the conversion of the writer, who had dedicated life and gift to the writing] of good stories that had proved a blessing to others. The little book, "Probable Sons," published not long ago, has been a channel of much good to many indifferent and sinful ones. One City missionary has distributed as many as sixty copies. Another book that has been as a good seed in fruitful soil has been "Christie's Old Organ," of which two million copies have been issued.

The next to claim the attention of the meeting was a smaller, but still great, organisation in its results-- a part of the larger Children's Special Service Mission. Mr. T. B. Bishop, who has been the moving force of the Mission since its inception, was the speaker. The Union, he said, began with 7000 members, but was 35,000 strong at the close of the first year. Now there are 600,000 members throughout the world, with its Scripture daily portions in thirty different languages. It has branches in 2300 towns and villages throughout the country. The branches embrace all kinds of children, socially considered. The seaside services (which were maintained at seventy places this last summer) are the means of originating many unions, and so are the services held in the villages by the travelling caravans. There are branches in the leading public schools, and latterly girls' schools have been brought within the scope of the Society. The plan of daily study followed by the Union is adopted and used by the Railway Mission, the junior branches of the Y.W.C.A., Boys' Brigade, Postal and Telegraph Association, and other bodies of workers. Many happy results of the work of the Union were referred to by Mr. Bishop in the definite conversion of the members.

The Union is fully supported and carried on by the small contributions of the members. As to the extensive literature issued, the profit on the English publications about pays for all that is given away at home, and also those distributed in the form of pictorial leaflets in about fifty foreign languages. The members are interested in many forms of good work, and contribute to them. It is an interesting fact that 250 university men have taken a part in writing Scripture notes for the little magazine which goes into our public schools. The course of study embracing the reading and study of the whole Bible extends over five years. The foreign work is very extensive, and embraces several centres in Palestine. The children at Nazareth sent a contribution to the work this year. Mr. Herklots has had a most wonderful season of work throughout India, and there is a branch in Japan with some 12,000 members, including many children of a larger growth. The story which Mr. Bishop had to sketch in outline was really a most romantic one, and shows what marvellous fruit may spring from a tiny seed sown in faith.

Dr. Gritton, who was the spokesman for that ancient body of workers, so well and honourably known in the East End, said it was founded by the French weavers in Spitalfields, and its field has been the poorest, most despised, and helpless of the community. Some 450 voluntary helpers obey the call of the committee, and find a large sphere of effort in twenty-three great city workhouses and union infirmaries and in East End lodging-houses. The workers are from time to time cheered, not only by cases of special rescue and reform, but in the general improvement of the social conditions in these lodging-houses, that are the resort of the lowest of the low. Seven mission halls in different parts of the East End are worked by the helpers of the Mission, and the Gospel is preached in the open air at different points, in somes cases all the year round. Relief work accompanies the spiritual operations; more than 22,000 meals were given last year, as well as bread and soup tickets distributed. The hungry children are also fed, to the tune of 25,000 meals a year. Surely they are not to starve because the parents are spending the money in the drink shops. A yearly outing at Epping to inmates of the poor-houses is a very interesting, if pathetic, event. Other agencies are at work, all among the lowest stratum of society, and there are ample evidences of God's blessing on the faithful efforts put forth. More helpers are needed.

"THE CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY,"

After the "refreshment" of a hymn, and the collection, the claims of were set forth by Col. Douglas Jones. The printing press has been, he said, a great boon, but not an unmixed one. This Society seeks to circulate books and magazines of a pure and high moral tone. It was founded more than forty years ago, chiefly to combat the sensational penny pamphlets scattered about in great numbers, descriptive of murders and public executions. The Society does not itself publish books, but seeks in a systematic way to distribute the good and popular issues of the best publishing firms. Magazine associations are established in different parts of the country. A catalogue of some 5000 good and choice books has been compiled, and all the works are carefully selected. Libraries are supplied at half price, so far as the funds of the Society allow; and these are now to be found in different lands, providing good reading to those who would otherwise be without it. Many ships, on proceeding to sea, are furnished with parcels of books for the seamen. Another effort is the visitation of book shops, so as to induce the vendors to keep good books on sale to the exclusion of the penny dreadfuls, etc.

THE YOUNG ABSTAINERS' UNION

was represented by Mr. Budgett Meakin, who said its object is to do among the wealthier and more educated classes of society what the Band of Hope has done among the general body of young people in the spread of temperance teaching. It has, therefore, a very definite field, and it is also a recruiting ground for workers in the Band of Hope. Drawing-room meetings are a principal agency for extending the work of the Union. It is a plank of its platform that any pledged abstainers among its members can withdraw from it on giving notice. On this basis many parents who are not themselves abstainers allow their children to attend the meetings, and this has even been done by parents interested in the liquor traffic.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION

was the important institution that had the last innings of the afternoon. A paper on the work of the Union, prepared by Mr. F. F. Belsey (who was unable to be present), was read by one of the Council, Mr. C. Webster. The Union comprises some 90,000 teachers and some two million scholars. The operations of the society are so well known that it is scarcely needful to particularise. They embrace lesson courses and helps, conferences on Sunday-school work, examination schemes for teachers, local libraries, and the provision of many other helps in making Scriptural knowledge available to the great mass of children in Sunday-schools. The Gospel services for Sunday-school children by Mr. Newton Jones, the missioner of the Union, are most helpful in garnering the spiritual fruits of the work of weekly teaching. The International Bible Reading Association, promoted by the Union, has some 700,000 members united in the regular reading of the Word of God. Sunday-school work in India and Ceylon receives special attention, and the cost of the effort is defrayed by the members of the I.B.R.A. Holiday homes at the seaside, and a convalescent home, with a home of rest for lady teachers, are among the many practical Christian endeavours that go along with the distinctive work of teaching in the Sunday-school. Mr. Webster added to Mr. Belsey's paper the interesting fact that Sunday-schools were introduced into some of our London workhouses seven years ago, and the results have been singularly cheering. He appealed to any friends who have influence throughout the country to extend the work of introducing Sunday-schools into the thousands of workhouses in our land.

TEMPERANCE SOCIETIES.

These much-needed agencies for the purification of our social life had the evening meeting to themselves, with Mr. George Spicer as chairman, and still an indifferent attendance. The chairman said that of late years the churches, which had too long stood aloof, had of necessity been compelled to take a warm and earnest part in the work of the temperance reform. The drink traffic is a great hindrance to all kinds of Christian work, and it must be fought.

The first speaker was Mr. John E. Ellis, M.P., who represented the work of that old-established and useful body,

THE NATIONAL TEMPERANCE LEAGUE.

Though not an official of the League, he said he was in hearty sympathy with its aims; he spoke of himself as a lifelong total abstainer. It is non-sectarian and non-political. By lectures, meetings, and literature it seeks to promote the spread of total abstinence for the individual. Special efforts are made to reach teachers, so that they may instil into the minds of the young the practice of abstinence. Conferences are held with a view to enlist the co-operation in this great cause of such classes of the community as railway managers, journalists, and the medical profession. In the last-mentioned profession a great advance was made by the establishment of the Temperance Hospital. The work of the churches has been very earnestly supplemented and strengthened by the operations of the League. There has been during this generation a great advance in the growth of temperance sentiment, but much yet remains to be done in fighting the foe of strong drink. Legislation may do much if it is backed by a strong public opinion, but after all the example of personal abstinence is one that will ever be powerful and effective.

THE BAND OF HOPE UNION, said Hon. Conrad Dillon, may really be traced back so far as the stand taken by Daniel and his Hebrew companions in exile in Babylon, though it is actually a modern product. The Union is doing a splendid work, often in a quiet way and in remote districts, in permeating the rising generation with temperance ideas. It has very emphatically helped on that excellent movement for preventing the sending of young children to public-houses to fetch strong drink. To the late Mr. Shirley belongs the credit of initiating the association of workers among the young which is now known as the United Kingdom Band of Hope Union. Methods of work in the Union have been much improved through the zealous efforts of Mr. Frederic Smith. Good temperance literature suited for the young is a leading feature of the work of the Union, and musical displays on a large scale have been a means of strengthening the work. Ten years ago a forward movement was inaugurated to go into the day-schools and impress the scholars with the facts bearing on the question. Some twenty lecturers have been at work in the schools, and that most successfully. Two sums of £10,000 were successfully raised to cover the efforts of two periods of five years, and now a third period of five years is being entered on. Mr. Dillon noted one very gratifying sign of the success of past effort in the large proportion of abstainers to be found among Army recruits and our military forces generally.

THE C.E. TEMPERANCE SOCIETY

had a sympathetic exponent in Mr. C. E. Tritton, M.P. He said he joined the total abstinence section of that Society twenty-one years ago. He hoped these conference meetings would not accentuate their differences of method, but rather be the means of uniting them together in mutual sympathy and respect. The Society seeks the promotion of the principles of temperance, the redemption of those who have become victims of the drink, and the removal of the causes that lead to the evils of the drink. The C.E.T.S. is not exclusively a total abstaining body; it unites the ardent souls who do not touch the drink with those earnest people who, though not out-and-out abstainers, are greatly exercised by the social ravages of the drink. As to what the Society has accomplished, there have been 4000 parochial branches founded. Owing largely to its dual basis, the cause of temperance has been introduced into many of the Church pulpits throughout the land, so that those have been reached who would otherwise have been outside the influence of the movement. Another great achievement of the Society is the Police-court Mission, which has nearly 100 missionaries labouring in the police-courts of London and other large cities. Labour-yards, shelters, boys' homes, and permanent homes for inebriate women are other agencies of this institution which have all helped on the one cause. The U.K. Railway Temperance Union is another outcome; the race-course and van missions are also doing good and genuine work. Some 3,000,000 publications are yearly published by the Society, and other things have been well done, including the introduction of several temperance Bills into Parliament.

THE SUNDAY CLOSING ASSOCIATION

was spoken to by Rev. Tolefree Parr (in the absence of Mr. A. F. Hills, to whom Mr. Parr paid a cordial tribute), who said that on the question of Sunday closing all the Christian Churches are absolutely one. Sunday closing has been tested in Canada, Australia, Scotland, Ireland, and Wales, and has been a great blessing to these countries. Why should England not share in the benefits of such a quiet and pure Sunday? The Sunday closing movements have done good preparatory work in visitation and agitation. The working men, who are said to be in danger of being robbed of their Sunday beer, whenever their opinion has been properly obtained have shown an immensely preponderating wish in favour of Sunday closing, and the Labour representatives in the House of Commons are enthusiastically on its side. We only ask for an extension of the principles already at work in the partial Sunday closing that we have. Any fear of revolution or reaction has been dispelled by the experience of Scotland, Ireland, and Wales. The five exempted cities of Ireland are now asking that they too may have the benefits of closed drink shops on the Sabbath. It is said that private clubs would increase and flourish if the public-houses were closed. One thing at a time; close the drink-shops, and the clubs will be dealt with.

Open public-houses on Sunday and Monday mean an annual loss of £20,000,000 to the workers of this country. Above all, this is a religious question, as the Sunday is now not merely a day of lost opportunities in reaching the masses, but of positive degradation. We shall never have solved the problem of evangelising the masses of the people, till we have closed all the public-houses on the Lord's Day. Let us be so united and vehement in our demand that the great boon we ask and work for cannot be long denied by any Parliament. An aroused national conscience for a sober Sunday will prove too strong for any vested interests that may be arrayed against us.

Pending the arrival of Canon Wilberforce, the last speaker, some added words in connection with the benefits of Sunday closing were given by Mr. John Hilton, the veteran Parliamentary agent of the U.K. Alliance. He recalled an experience on Mile End Waste, many years ago, when a large concourse of working men voted en masse in favour of shutting-up the drink shops on the Sunday, and thus lessening the temptation around them. There are many other infallible proofs in different parts of the country that the bulk of the people are fully prepared for this measure. A great effort should be made to induce the Government to give special facilities for the discussion of a measure which ought to pass into law, and would work untold good.

Canon Wilberforce, having arrived, proceeded to speak in his customary fervid and eloquent way on behalf of

THE UNITED KINGDOM ALLIANCE.

It believes, he said, that national toothache can be better cured by extraction than by "stopping." After a rapid and graphic sketch of the origin of the prohibition movement in America and its spread to this country, the Canon said the difference between the Alliance and other societies was the difference between a well a hundred feet deep and one only twenty feet deep. The aim of the Alliance is deeper perhaps than some other reforming agencies, but it does not waste its time in throwing stones at individual brewers and publicans. It tries to induce the individual citizen and the individual Christian to realise their share of responsibility for the condition of things brought about by the drink. We cannot lay all the blame on the saloon keeper; each of us who possesses a vote is responsible for what is permitted to be done. The Alliance is not a merely political and party organisation, as some say. It is prepared to support any politician, of whatever party, who is prepared to help on the temperance reformation. Some have broken their old party ties in order to be true to their deepest convictions on this question. What has the Alliance done? If the audience would stay till two o'clock in the morning one could say something of what it has done. The achievements of such men as Mr. Raper, Dr. Lees, Sir Wilfrid Lawson, and other Alliance workers, were noted and extolled. It has been persistent and courageous in the face of untold opposition and disappointment. It has helped largely to influence and mould public opinion by its literature.

Is there any need for the continuance of its beneficent efforts? The Canon, by quoting statistics, showed that there is, and he commended in this connection the careful study of a book recently published, Mr. Wallace's "Our Wonderful Century." The first half of the book will make the reader proud that he is an Englishman, and the second half will make him wish he were born at Fashoda. The writer describes the great increase in deaths from intemperance—in the case of women 100 per cent. What a terrible fact! The Alliance calls for, and deserves, more sympathy and prayer. It wants volunteer workers, and also more money to keep its sinews of war strong and healthy. It represents a cause that can never be beaten. The cause of truth is in it; let us not be backward in doing our little part in bringing about the desired consummation.

THURSDAY, NOV. 17.

The morning's session opened under inauspicious circumstances, for London was wrapped in a dense fog. In the absence of Sir Douglas Fox, Mr. J. H. Putterill presided.

Dr. F. Peake spoke on behalf of the Lord's Day Observance Society, remarking that the organisation's objects had now been before the public for sixty-seven years. The old Chaldeans called the Sabbath "the day of rest for the heart"; it should indeed be so, but Sunday traffic obviously needed to be reformed before the day could be anything but a national discredit. The Society was labouring with persistent industry.

The Women's Total Abstinence Union was represented by Mrs. Brooks, who spoke earnestly in favour of the abolition of grocers' licences, contending that drink-selling tea-shops afforded an outwardly respectable, seductively easy method by which women might obtain drink. She advocated Sunday-closing and the prohibition of drink-selling to children. The lips of every woman, at any rate, should be closed against that which has gained for England the unenviable name of and every mother should see to it that her children learn early the duties and privileges of total abstinence. An especially noble effort is made amongst the unhappy women who, through drunkenness, are found in police-cells. Kindly women visit them, meet them on release, and help them into happier paths of godliness. The Women's Inebriate Home has proved a great blessing, and many are the letters of thankfulness received from women who have been permanently reclaimed.

Rev. Sydenham L. Dixon spoke vigorously for the Anti-Sunday Travelling Union. The Society has 23,000 members; but what is that, urged the speaker, amongst the Christians of the land? Distributors are stationed at crowded railway and tram centres to circulate literature, and in this way, and by means of the interesting magazine, Our Heritage, the Sunday travelling public are reached.

PRESIDENT McKINLEY'S ACTION

in declining a picnic involving Sunday travelling has had a magnificent influence. All honour to the President for standing true to a noble principle. The amusement craze is responsible for much. Great numbers of theatrical trains are run. Yet, in spite of all this, many Christians treat Sunday travelling with laxity of thought. As the grand old Bishop of Liverpool says, "Hold fast to your Sundays." Our Society aims at a truly bright and truly thoughtful observance of the Sabbath-day.

Miss C. Gurney, of the International Police Association, spoke cheeringly of the Gospel work amongst the police and their wives. Many converted policemen are now in request as preachers and speakers at temperance meetings. On and Off Duty, the Society's magazine, has a circulation of 20,000, almost entirely among the police. Especial attention is given to work at Christmas, when the constables' labour is increasingly arduous, at a time when most people are holiday-making and rejoicing. This year a Christmas card is to be sent, if funds allow, to each member of the force. Valuable work is done by influencing Christian young men coming from the provinces to join the force, and the institute in Adam-street, Strand, is a at which all policemen are made heartily at home. Christians should visit the Home in order to form a proper conception of the extent and thoroughness of the work. A seaside convalescent home at Brighton has also proved a wonderful place of God's blessing; another is to be opened at Harrogate when the needed £4500 is received. Two orphanages are full; and in this connection it should be remembered that the police, in fulfilling their duty, are often subjected to terrible injury from lawbreakers.

The prayer and praise meeting, which followed, was conducted by Mr. M. H. Hodder; and Rev. J. A. Betts spoke of the Christian Evidence Society, which, seeking to promote a knowledge of the reasons for believing Christianity to be true, organises courses of lectures, disseminates useful literature, and conducts examinations, for success in which prizes and certificates are awarded.

At the afternoon gathering the addresses specially concerned those who "go down to the sea in ships," an excellent chairman being found in Admiral Sir Leopold McClintock, who, after a few kindly words of allusion to the many good works in progress, introduced Rev. G. F. Wilson, who spoke on the Missions to Seamen.

Our workers, said Mr. Wilson, make a special point of being first on board on the arrival of a vessel, and keep a watchful eye on the welfare of the men. This paves the way for an introduction to the sailors' rest and mission church in the port. I feel that those who go to sailors in the name of God should be able to invite them to a BRIGHT, WELL-EQUIPPED HOME.

I know of captains who like to come and pick their entire crew from our homes, since they find the surroundings elevate the sailors and make them more sober, earnest, and reliable. The Society's agents board ships before the crimps, and are able, through the Board of Trade, to send home the seamen's money before the crimps, who lie in wait for Jack ashore, can get hold of it. On one occasion lately, where a crew took £710 in wages, Mr. Wilson was able to send home £690 of it, while on another occasion, after an agent of the Society had boarded a ship, no fewer than fifty-seven crimps and others followed, intent on the cash of poor Jack.

Colonel G. Phillips, for the Army Scripture Readers, emphasised the necessity of taking the Gospel to soldiers. Recruits who join about the age of eighteen are plastic of character, and upon what is then done for them, largely depends the influence they will wield at the expiration of their short service term. "We want each of the counties to sustain a Reader for its own battalion. Such an investment would be a magnificent one, while the cost would be infinitesimal." Many a dying man's pillow has been smoothed by the Reader, many a soul brought into light. The speaker saw a letter the other day, mentioning that a young soldier was learning a native dialect in order to preach the Gospel to the Hindoos. Soldiers could be made into splendid missionaries, but workers and money must be forthcoming.

Mr. Frank Wilson, for the Mission to Deep-Sea Fishermen, in the course of a vivid address, said: "The great proportion of fish supplied to England is caught far from shore, away on the North Sea. A fisherman is away as a rule for eight weeks, as against only eight days at home. The Society is in a healthy state, and growing rapidly. A good work is going on in Dutch ports, the plan being to open a coffee bar with mission hall, a vigorous Gospel work being carried on. Money is required to defray the erection of an institute at Crookhaven, an Irish port where a large number of French vessels, with many from and from the Isle of Man, resort for mackerel. This is a medical mission. The workers go with healing in one hand and the Word of Life in the other. Real conversion is aimed at, in spite of increasing difficulties owing to the gradual wiping out of the old smack fishing by the steam trawlers, which practically know no Sunday, and on which men must work day and night in order to swell the dividend. 'It's no use, sir, we haven't time to think about our souls,' a man said only recently; and in order to keep level with the need the Mission must have steam mission vessels.

and be able to go on board and dine with the men, in order to influence them for good.

Capt. Lowrie, R.N., speaking on the Royal Naval Scripture Readers, reminded his hearers of the many good works established in almost every land by Christian seamen. In Singapore, Smyrna, and other places, sailors do good Gospel work. Under the trees of Crete, a number of sailors got together for singing and prayer, and a Turkish officer remarked, concerning them, "If all Christians were like those, there would be very few Mohammedans in the world." Away in the South Sea Islands, a visit of one of Her Majesty's ships was hailed with pleasure on account of the Christian sailors on board. In Australia, Nova Scotia, and indeed in all lands where our ships call, parties of seamen bear glad witness to salvation, and hold temperance and Gospel meetings. In one town the only available building was a court-house, and each speaker held forth from the dock, and amongst grog-shops and rowdyism souls were touched, and afterwards led into communion with Christ. There is but

ONE READER TO SIX THOUSAND SAILORS, and many more are needed.

The Strangers' Rest in Ratcliff Highway was described by Mr. J. T. Isaac, who, after giving statistics showing the enormous power for good or evil of the mercantile marine, pictured the homeliness and aggressive character of the work, in shielding the men from the rampant evils of life, and turning them into real missionaries.

Sir Geo. Williams, in proposing a vote of thanks to the chairman and speakers, referred to the cheering character of the accounts of work as stimulating to all, and the vote was carried with enthusiasm.

THE EVENING SESSION

was devoted to the consideration of the important question of the rescue of destitute children, a number of the most experienced workers in this mournful branch of work giving accounts of their manifold toils on behalf of those who are least able to help themselves.

Mr. Howard Williams, who presided, claimed the great works represented as the outcome of Christianity. Although it was the fashion in some quarters to deride religious fervour, especially as associated with Exeter Hall, it was that fervour which had championed the cause of the nation's neglected little ones.

Rev. A. E. Gregory, representing Dr. Stephenson's Homes, regretted the absence of his chief, who had been so blessed of God. The Home was an intensely religious work; they had no desire to apologise for Christianity, for it was the most interesting thing in the world, and they had proved it amongst the children. One of the Local Government inspectors said to him (Mr. Gregory) the other day, that this work was nowhere done so well as where it was inspired by Christian desire. "The children are picked up from anywhere. We found the other day a little one three years of age

SITTING ON A DOORSTEP.

Nobody knew who she was, or whence she came, nor could her friends be traced. Love is the law of the Homes. We have no goody-goodiness, but everything is delightfully unconventional. The principle of Christian family life—for we associate the little ones in families—is very successful. Our latest scheme is to take over from the workhouses the children of all Nonconformists. An important minister from abroad called upon us the other day. He was an 'old boy.' Yonder he is the Rev. So-and-So. With us he is still 'Teddy'; and it was delightful to see how glad he was to get home. You see how precious a thing it is for our grown-up boys and girls to be able to look back and feel there is nothing of which to be ashamed. During the past year five old boys have become ministers of religion, and many are devoted Christian workers, in good positions in society. Our success is due, by God's blessing, to the spirit of true religion permeating the organisation."

Rev. E. de M. Rudolf, of the Church of England Waifs and Strays Society, claimed that the Church, with its vast resources, should rightly sustain a prominent position in the

GREAT WORK OF CHILD RESCUE,

The Society started, under the patronage of Archbishop Tait, with six children in a small cottage, whilst to-day 2660 were under its guardian care. But what was that figure in face of the fact that Britain has 30,000 tramp children? On solemn and sacred grounds, Church or Nonconformist, any man who carried Christ in his heart must sympathise with this effort to save these tiny mortals, body and soul. The foster parents, they found, had pleaded with tears in their eyes to be allowed to keep the little ones of the gutter as their very own. The greatest love had been shown by the workers in nursing back to life many of the feeble ones. The boarding-out system had proved an emphatic success, seven or eight hundred being so placed under the care of travelling inspectors and doctors.

Dr. Barnardo said: A little while ago, having had the facts and figures burnt into my very soul, a number of us decided to divide London into districts, and spend the night searching the places where the HOMELESS LITTLE ONES CONGREGATE.

We gathered in one night alone seventy-six children. One was Chinese, three German, five Irish, three Scotch, a few Italian and American, thirty-three from the provinces, while twenty-six were London born; eight were hopeless cripples. One little girl had a back shaped like the letter S. There she lay, a beggar's child, exploited for gain. In spite of all we are trying to do, there was this little army of unhappy children.

There are festering spots, too, in Newcastle and Liverpool, and other cities, as bad as any in London, but this feeling fills one with hope. I trust we are all filled with a noble discontent and intention to do more. Our society has admitted close on five thousand during the last two years, brought them to a fresh environment, and placed before them a hope of a glorious future. Childhood is slowly, but surely, coming into its rights; not only do the experts think so, but public opinion is declaring it. What are the rights of childhood? Innocence, decency, education, kindly care, and, the Christian declares, a right to Christ. Thirty years ago children had practically no rights. A drunken virago was charged then with assaulting her child, and cried with astonishment, "She's mine; can't I bash her when I like?" The doctrine of parental rights has been changed.

THE CHILD WAS A CHATTEL.

What odium came upon my devoted head when I ventured to declare that childhood must be protected! I am here to-night to say I shall never do again what I have done before in that direction, because—it is not necessary. At the same time, we need to remember that the rural people pressing into the towns, the cities' attractive character to the country population, constitute a huge field for work. We must not be behindhand. If we do not quickly advance we shall find—as Kitchener did at Khartoum—that another power has been before us. Do not be satisfied with anything short of the conversion to God of the children of the slums. I press that most earnestly. Our attention has been called in the Press to the decay of personal religion. I trace that partially to mere materialistic observance and sacerdotalism. Let us see to it that "Suffer little children to come unto Me" is not translated to mean suffer them to come to our particular priestism with auricular confession, bowing to saints and the like. We aim in to tell simply of Jesus Christ as a personal Redeemer and Helper. With a rapid sketch of the many branches of work, among cripples, with the youthful emigrants, and the boarding-out cases, the speaker concluded, amid prolonged applause, by announcing, "In these two-and-thirty years we have never refused or kept waiting a single destitute child, and we have done all the work, humbly and sincerely, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ."

Mr. Henry Copeland, of the National Refuges for Destitute Children, comprising eight homes on shore and the training ships Chichester and Arethusa, remarked on the distinctive features of the Society in thoroughly training the younger people in suitable trades, so as to enable them to obtain a good start in life either in England or Canada. Definite religious teaching, of the same old sound character as that which Lord Shaftesbury used to ring out, is one of the leading features as ever; and as to results, the many letters received from the old boys and girls now satisfactorily settled in life, was very encouraging. Six thousand of the lads had become sailors, and the vast majority could show excellent characters to-day.

Mr. J. W. C. Fegan said his experience covered twenty-eight years, and he was called into the work by being a ragged school teacher. Reviewing the various institutions in this country and over-sea, he was able to REPORT GOOD PROGRESS.

To-day there were many cheering signs. The sufferings of children had been greatly lessened by the work of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. He believed nothing short of bringing children to Christ should satisfy, and spoke in generous terms of the work of the other societies.

Mr. John Kirk, of the Ragged School Union, said that amongst the discoveries of the century must be reckoned that of the slum child. Ragged schools, affectionately described as academies for the education of young gentlemen of limited income, were still greatly needed, as the adduced statistics showed. The distribution of Christmas hampers amongst cripples gave a great impetus to the work, and many had been sent to the seaside, with the result that at the Southend Convalescent Home quite a collection of consequent on strength coming into weak little limbs, had accumulated. By means of Kindergarten teaching, by the loan of scrap-books, the gifts of toys, nourishing food, and little delicacies, the lot of many a neglected child had been improved. "Parlours" had been formed in various centres where those children who were able to hobble or to be wheeled or carried were gathered for happy meetings. Nearly 4000 members of the "Crutch and Kindness" League undertook to write once a month to a sick child and care for it generally. The speaker graphically portrayed the work of rescue from the time of receiving a sickly mite from a slum home to the time of going forth to the battle strong in body, soul, and mind. In conclusion, he gave all honour to the great body of zealous voluntary workers, embracing many former scholars, who were doing so much in the ragged schools and missions in combating vice and misery.

The Potter.

(Genesis ii. 7.)

To F. B. M.

The potter stands beside his shaping-wheel,
Red earth in hand.
Within his thought there lies the finished scheme
Of that he would produce—a wondrous theme,
For strength and beauty planned.
To bear at last the impress of his seal.

The patient smile of hope upon his face,
Absorbed he stands.
The wheel revolves, he moulds with perfect skill.
With deftest touch and firm, the clay so still
And soft below his hands.
Oh, marvel! from poor earth so fair a grace!

My God, the Potter Thou, and I the clay!
Work Thou thy will.
Beneath thy hand I would submissive lie;
As turns the wheel of life shape me thereby—
Thy fair design fulfil.
Master adorable, have Thou thy way!

Sons and Orphans of Missionaries, Blackheath.—Nearly one hundred sons of missionaries are now benefited by the home and school at Blackheath, and yet only twenty-three London, and twenty-nine country, churches contribute any sum, as churches, towards its maintenance. The desire of the committee is a widening of interest and influence. The finances of the home and school are quite distinct from those of any missionary society. Its income is derived from voluntary subscribers, among whom are the London, the Baptist, and the Presbyterian Missionary Societies.

Silver Star Society.—This mission and society, which has branches in many parts of London and the provinces, is always ready to assist all Christian agencies. "The voluntary workers," writes the Marquis of Northampton, "labour with words and songs in the streets, and conduct Gospel and temperance lantern services. They distribute wholesome literature, give clothes to the needy, feed the hungry, and visit the sick and dying. The latest development is an auxiliary, called the Lighthouse League, for caring for the spiritual needs of lighthouse and lightship keepers. Much more can be done if the necessary help is given." Child-Life in Heathen Lands.

No. IX.

THAT which I wish to speak of to my young friends to-day is so inhuman a custom that it makes English parents shudder at it. I wonder whether you can anticipate my subject? I fear you cannot. It seems quite unnatural that mothers should deliberately destroy their baby-girls. This practice prevails in India, and is called infanticide, or child-murder.

In England, when a new brother or sister is announced, everybody who hears of the event offers warm congratulations. Baby-girls as well as baby-boys, in our own beloved fatherland, are caressed and loved with a wealth of affection that defies all speech. Every care is taken of them. The purest human love surrounds the little people and does its best for them all. They are protected from every puff of wind which is likely to be harmful. Every want is anticipated and provided for out of paternal affection.

But in India girl-babies are never wanted. After birth, at some favourable opportunity, the innocent offenders, simply because they are not boys, are cast into the sacred stream, especially at Allahabad, where the Jumna and Ganges meet, and at Gunga Sangor, where the great river enters the sea.

Think of such a custom prevalent for generations, over States and districts large and populous as Portugal, Ireland, and Switzerland; and what an amount of crime, shame, and suffering it suggests!

But the method of getting rid of their girl-children by drowning is not the only one that parents adopt. In different districts other means of infanticide are resorted to. In some they kill their infant daughters or allow them to die by denying them all food from their birth. In others the infant is strangled. They are also poisoned by the juice of the madder plant, or of the tobacco plant, or the juice of the poppy, often placed on the mother's breast.

Some, too, are drowned in pans of milk; suspended in baskets on trees; buried alive in shallow graves; left out at night to be devoured by jackals, or, when near the Ganges thrown in, with an invocation to the goddess to be pleased to accept the gift.

The reasons for such usage are many. Human life is not valued and held sacred by the Hindus as with ourselves. Man is not regarded as superior to all other living creatures because possessed of a soul. In the eyes of Hinduism life is not reverenced as it is with us, unless its distinct use is apparent. There is such a use supposed to belong to male, but not to female life. A son is essential to a family; a daughter is not, but is rather regarded as a failure, an encumbrance, and a dishonour. "A mother of sons" is the highest compliment that can be paid to a wife; "a mother of daughters" is one of the most contemptuous and scornful of all terms of reproach. "It is only a girl" is the frequent harsh expression when a girl-baby is born.

I am sure you begin to see what a cruel, wicked, barbarous system Hinduism must be. And already you have thought, "I am so thankful I was not born in India."

Another explanation of infanticide is the difficulty of finding suitable husbands for daughters. No families in the world, not even those of the reigning houses of Europe, are more particular about lineage than many Hindus. The Rajput would rather kill his child, or even himself, than consent to what he would consider an unsuitable alliance for his daughter.

Marriage expenses, also, have been a fruitful source of child murder; profuse festivities, sometimes extending over days and even weeks, increase the expenditure of what should be a simple ceremony. Many instances are on record of from 2000 to 5000 guests being entertained on such occasions, many of them expecting and receiving gifts. Families have been reduced from opulence to poverty by this exacting custom.

Acts of Parliament have been passed for the suppression of this cruel custom, and although they may have modified the practice, infanticide still exists. But through the persistent action of the Government the crime is abating.

I think I know, however, what you would consider a remedy for all this evil—a true knowledge of God, and a devout love to Jesus Christ. Yes! It is that alone. The Gospel must be taken to these people. Missionaries must be sent in much larger numbers. More prayer must distinguish the Church of Christ, and more liberality, before heathen people can come to know Him whom to know is life eternal.

What the Ant Teaches.

I WANT to try and teach you some lessons from the ants. They are very busy creatures, but I think you will agree with me that they are very interesting. They are only spoken of in one book in the Bible—in Prov. vi. and xxx.

In chap. xxx. 25 we are told "the ants are a people not strong," and verse 24 tells us that they are "exceeding wise." This is what God tells us about them, and He gave them all their wisdom.

In chap. vi. 6 God tells us to "consider her ways and be wise." Now most of you do not like considering very much, you think it more fit for old people than children. But go now and find an ant's nest in your garden; watch the little creatures and you will see how busy they are. Each one seems to have some little task before him; sometimes you will see one trying to carry something almost as big as himself, he tumbles down with it but is soon up again, trying again and again, until his task is done.

Sometimes their nest gets partly destroyed, and then they all set to work busily to put it right again. Here, then, is the first lesson the ant teaches us—diligence.

It teaches you all to be diligent in everything—in your duties at home, in your lessons, and above all, and first of all, to be diligent in seeking the Lord.

In chap. viii. 17 we read, "Those that seek Me early shall find Me." While you are young is the time to seek the Lord Jesus. As you grow older your hearts will get filled with other things. "Now is the accepted time, now is the day of salvation" (2 Cor. vi. 2).

In chap. vi. 8 we learn something more about ants, which teaches us another lesson, "They provide their meat in summer." They know the long winter is coming, with the frost and snow, so they are wise and gather up a good store while they can. Now think for a moment what this teaches you. You all know that the sweet story of God's love and the invitation to come to Jesus will not always sound in your ears. The day will come when, instead of the summer-time of the Gospel story, there will be the winter of God's judgment. Prov. i. 28 tells us that "Then shall they call upon Me, but I will not answer, they shall seek Me early, but they shall not find Me."

How important, then, to learn these two lessons from the ants—to be diligent, and to be diligent at the right time. There is a verse which puts the two together for us—"Seek ye the Lord, while He may be found" (Is. lv. 6).

THE EVANGELISTIC FIELD.

Mr. W. R. Lane in Colchester.

YOUR readers will rejoice to know that a great religious awakening has come to Colchester, as the result of a united mission conducted by Mr. W. R. Lane, under the auspices of the Free Church Council. The missioner received a public welcome on Saturday evening, Nov. 12, from a large and representative gathering. Preparation for the mission had been going on for some time by meetings for conference and prayer, arranged by the churches individually, followed by united gatherings at the various churches in turn.

The Drill Hall, the neutral building invariably used for united religious gatherings, soon proved quite inadequate to accommodate the crowds that assembled; though 1300 could be seated, many had to be turned away. In the middle of the mission the meetings were transferred to the Corn Exchange, the largest place of assembly in the town, and even this building, though it holds about 2000, proved too small.

The "Bunyan and Pilgrim's Progress" limelight lecture on the Friday had its full audience some time before the hour of commencing. On the second Sunday night the churches held shortened services, in order to join the audience already assembled in the Corn Exchange. The vast audience and the power manifest in the meeting proved that each night was rooting the truth deeper and deeper. Scores stood up and confessed Christ for the first time.

On the same Sunday afternoon the sight that presented itself as Mr. Lane rose to address the 2000 men assembled was such as has not been known in the burgh within the lifetime of the oldest inhabitant. There were men there who for years had never darkened a church door, and they heard words and were confronted with truths which must haunt them to their dying day. The addresses given by Mr. Lane on three week-day afternoons were listened to by large audiences, and were greatly appreciated for their lucidity and helpfulness.

On Monday last, the closing night, the missioner told the thrilling story of his own conversion to God. Though it was a night of pouring rain, the Corn Exchange was again packed and crowded out into the street. The Divine blessing was felt with wonderful power, and the after-meeting was one long to be remembered. Many families are now rejoicing in new-found blessing, and the town rejoices in a great spiritual harvest. H. M.

Mr. C. Inglis at Liverpool.

A FORTNIGHT'S Gospel Mission has been held at the Liverpool Wesleyan Mission, Wesley Hall Mission Church, by Mr. Charles Inglis. On the first Sunday evening the hall was crowded, and numbers decided for Christ. During the mission interest deepened until, on the closing Sunday, the hall was packed, and a most gracious influence filled the place. At the after meeting some touching scenes were witnessed. A young man who has been a member of the church for some time had the joy of seeing his father, mother, and grandmother enter the inquiry room and give themselves to the Saviour. In several instances husband and wife were seen seeking the Lord together. Roman Catholics, too, have been truly converted to God. One young man was presented with a copy of the New Testament by his master who had only the week before found the Saviour. He read the Testament and decided to attend the mission, and was led into the light of God. Two or three men who have notorious for their wickedness are now clothed and in their right mind. It has been a wonderful work of grace, and many prayers will follower the missioner that God will bless his ministry more and more.

(Rev.) J. A. Lee.

Evangelists' Movements.

A work of grace is reported from various places in Cornwall in connection with the Gospel labours of Mr. G. W. Clegg, evangelist.

[1058]

Mr. S. J. West, of the Evangelisation Society, has been holding an eight days' special mission at the Brunswick Rooms, Portswood, Southampton. His labours have been much owned of God.

Rev. J. O. Ogilvy, of Malton, Yorks, has concluded a fortnight's mission in connection with one of the branch churches of College-street Baptist Church, Northampton. Much spiritual blessing was experienced.

We desire to thank God for blessing received during Mr. Westwood's four weeks' mission in Blandford. Young and old have been brought into the fold of Christ, and many believers have been revived. E. Foster.

The Baptist church of Cullompton, through a ten days' mission conducted by Miss C. L. Gill, of Devonport, has been favoured with a season of refreshment. At a closing meeting many testimonies were given as to the stimulus derived from her presentation of the Gospel.

Mr. J. J. Sims has recently conducted missions at Newbattle, Bonnington, and Dalkeith, giving a week to each place. Notwithstanding much indifference, there has been real interest shown and distinct blessing to many. Mr. Sims is now conducting services in the Free Assembly Hall, Edinburgh.

Rev. Wm. Baird, U.P. Church evangelist, recently concluded a week's Gospel services in Eyre-place Church, Edinburgh, with many tokens for good. In addition to the services for adults, meetings for children were held, some 1,200 young people being present every night. Many are bearing testimony of the benefit received.

A heart-searching mission has been conducted at the British Workman Hall, Shifnal, by Mr. John Coates and his helper, Mr. Harvey, of the Ross Bible Carriage and Tent Mission. The meetings were crowded and several decided for Christ. This town greatly needs such effort, and we trust the seed sown will bring forth abundant fruit for the Master's glory. Victor Thurston, Pastor.

Mr. King Lambert, of the Evangelisation Society, has closed a three weeks' mission in Cleobury Mortimer, Salop. The services, which were held in the Oddfellows' Hall, were well attended, and the interest increased day by day. Believers have been cheered. Many have received blessing, and all have rejoiced in the Gospel being set forth with such clearness and power. T. W.

A fortnight's mission has been held by Mr. W. D. Dunn in the Dalry Free Church, Edinburgh. The attendance was good, increasing nightly, and crowding the church on Sunday evenings. Some remarkably clear cases of conversion have taken place; many were broken down, and night after night anxious ones were found seeking the Saviour. A Christian conference was held on Saturday, and proved a time of real liberty and help. Mr. Dunn also conducted the prayer-meeting. R. C.

A six days' mission at Richmond-street, Walworth, has been held by Mr. T. L. Johnson, the coloured evangelist. His earnest, pathetic, and faithful pleading with sinners brought crowds of inquirers and workers together. His sweet rendering of simple Gospel hymns to his own accompaniment, and his winning simplicity in Bible exposition, moved many hearts. At the closing service the hall was filled to overflowing. The work in Walworth has received a decided stimulus.

From November 7 to 13 Rev. A. A. Harmer, of Devonport, conducted evangelistic services at Orchard Place Baptist Chapel, Neath, which have been attended with great blessing. The results have far exceeded the anticipations of the workers. Good congregations assembled, and not a service concluded without renewed proofs of the saving power of Jesus. The church has also experienced the awakening of zeal, the strengthening of spiritual energy, and the blessing of renewed consecration. E. R. E.

A mission held in Wealdstone Parish Church, from November 5 to 14, by Rev. F. Trevelyan Snow, has been much blessed. The afternoon Bible Readings were well attended, and the tradespeople agreed to close their places of business at eight p.m. during the ten days of the mission, so as to enable their employees to attend the services. Many, it is believed, have been led to Christ, and not a few believers have entered into deeper blessing. The mission was closed by a united praise meeting. As one of the results of this special effort a weekly meeting for the deepening of spiritual life and other gatherings for the same purpose will be established. A mission to young people is contemplated for the Spring of next year.

Missionary Convention, Bromley.

A UNITED foreign missionary convention, promoted by churches of different denominations, has been held at Bromley, Kent, and has evoked much enthusiasm in the town. The convention opened with a prayer-meeting, presided over by Lord Kinnaird, when a deeply spiritual address was given by Rev. C. G. Moore.

On the two following days meetings were held each evening. The speakers comprised Rev. H. E. Fox, of the C.M.S., whose earnest appeal to ease-loving Christians will not soon be forgotten; Rev. Arnold Foster (L.M.S.), who gave a stirring account of work in China; Rev. R. Wright Hay (B.M.S.), who told two touching stories of native Christian heroism in India; Mr. John Jackson (Leper Mission), who stirred all hearts by his pathetic accounts of successful labours among these poor outcasts of humanity; Dr. Douthwaite (C.I.M.), and Dr. Henry Soltau.

A ladies' meeting was addressed by Miss Morley (Zenana Bible and Medical Mission) and Miss Hoskyn (C.I.M.).

The most unique feature of the Convention was an enthusiastic children's demonstration, when the speakers were Mr. A. K. Langridge (of the John G. Paton Mission Fund) and Rev. G. R. Forde (late of the Wesleyan Missionary Society). Bands of children from different churches in the neighbourhood formed into a "procession of countries," carrying banners upon which were inscribed the names of eight heathen lands. The children recited facts respecting the countries, and appropriate texts, while the number of missionaries in proportion to the population, as compared with the number of ministers to the population at home, was forcibly illustrated by means of cubes.

The whole series of meetings has been well attended, and it is felt that such stirring appeals—such realistic descriptions of the awful needs of heathendom—cannot fail to arouse many to a sense of the responsibility which privilege brings, and to lead to the going forth of some into the regions beyond. Should churches of other neighbourhoods wish to combine in arranging a similar convention, a programme containing many striking diagrams, together with other information, will gladly be supplied by Miss C. Benham, Mitfield, Bromley, Kent.

The Governments of India and Ceylon have decided to join in the scheme of Imperial penny postage from the beginning of its operation on Dec. 25 next.

There have been great rejoicings in Crete over the evacuation of the island by the Turks. A Te Deum was sung in the cathedral at Canea, and the Bishops invoked blessing on the four protecting Powers.

As significant of the development of the British position in Egypt, arrangements are made for a course of instruction in English in the School of Law. This has hitherto been given in the French language.

Requests for Prayer.

For blessing on a fifteen days' mission at Speldhurst, in Kent, conducted by Mr. J. J. Scroggie.

For a mission (which began on Monday, Nov. 21) at Emmanuel Church, Glasgow, conducted by Rev. James Lyall, of Chicago.

For blessing on services to be conducted at Hazelbury Plucknett by Mr. J. H. Roberts, Evangelisation Society, November 27 to December 11.

Obituary.

DR. S. W. DUNCAN.

The death is announced of Rev. Samuel W. Duncan, D.D., foreign secretary of the American Baptist Missionary Union. He sailed from Boston in August last, expecting to make a tour of the Asiatic missions. He was not strong, but hoped for rest and recovery from the voyage. These expectations were disappointed, and he continued to lose strength, until at Port Said it became clear that it was neither safe nor wise to continue the journey. Returning, he reached Boston on Saturday, the 29th ult., and was taken to his home in Brookline in a prostrate condition. Dr. Duncan passed away on Sunday, October 30, his loss being mourned by a wide circle of friends and fellow-workers.

REV. DR. KANE, BELFAST.

Rev. Richard Rutledge Kane, LL.D., died in Belfast on Sunday night. He was attacked by cerebral hæmorrhage at his residence, Christ Church rectory, on Saturday, and his recovery was from the first regarded as hopeless. Dr. Kane, since settling in Belfast in 1882, took a prominent part in public life, and was especially associated with the Orange movement and the opposition to Home Rule. Dr. Kane was attached to Trinity College, Dublin, where he took his degrees in Arts and Laws. He was ordained in the diocese of Down in 1868, and held curacies at Dundonald and Tullylish. In 1872 he was made rector of Tullylish, which parish he quitted to take up work at Belfast. For years past Dr. Kane has been a familiar figure at Protestant demonstrations in all parts of the United Kingdom.

MRS. S. C. MORGAN.

This devoted Christian lady has soon followed her husband, whose portrait and biographical sketch were given in The Christian of May 19. On November 15, after a serious operation, she passed peacefully and trustfully to her heavenly home. Her work for God has been richly owned in the salvation of souls. When her husband was vicar of Swansea, her chief work was among young women. Her influence has been largely exercised in missions. In one class of twelve members the leader speaks of eight having been won for Christ by Mrs. Morgan's testimony. Afterwards, when at St. Mary's, Leamington, while young women continued to occupy a large place in her head, her chief work was amongst men, for whom she conducted large meetings. Amongst these was a weekly meeting for policemen, which was much owned of God; and when on Friday last her earthly remains were interred at Leamington, members of the police force who formerly belonged to her class bore her to the grave.

FRANCIS D. BLENNERHASSETT.

This faithful worker amongst the children was called away suddenly to higher service on Wednesday, November 10, at the age of sixty-five. Converted in days of youth, he became a diligent Bible student, and a most efficient worker amongst poor children. Joining the Ogle Mews Ragged School, he found his life's work as teacher and superintendent for over forty years. He was regarded as a model leader, and was instrumental in training many of the present-day workers amongst the young. He was an active member of the Council of the Ragged School Union, and had a heart full of compassion for the needs of poor children. Drinking deeply of the Master's spirit, he was ever ready to spend and be spent in his service. Latterly he has lived at Plumstead, where his talents for holding the attention of the children have been in constant requisition. He had a triumphant passage, spending his last moments in praying for all his friends and fellow-workers by name. His remains were interred in the Plumstead Cemetery on Saturday. The Vicar of St. James's bore testimony to his worth, as did also Col. Francis and Mr. John Kirk.

Egham Y.W.C.A.—The annual meeting was recently held in the Memorial Hall. Between seventy and eighty sat down to tea. A very satisfactory report was read at the subsequent meeting. Mrs. Albert Day gave a short account of her work in Berlin, and Miss St. Quintin gave a very earnest Gospel address. Thirty-three new members joined the association during the year.

Possibilities.

By ALFRED J. BAMFORD, B.A.*

God is not dumb, that He should speak no more;
If thou hast wanderings in the wilderness
And find'st not Sinai, 'tis thy soul is poor.
There towers the mountain of the voice no less,
Which whoso seeks shall find; but he who bends,
Intent on manna still and mortal ends,
Sees it not, neither hears its thundered lore.
—Lowell.

"BLESSED are your eyes, for they see; and your ears, for they hear," said Jesus to his disciples in reference to his own teaching by parables, teaching that astonished his friends and apparently irritated those who looked on Him with suspicion or hostility. The blessedness of those disciples consisted in their seeing and hearing. To them was given to understand what was hidden from others. In his parable of the Sower the great Preacher simply portrayed with the uttered word a picture often seen by his hearers—a picture, perhaps, at that very moment in the fields, within sight of the seashore on which they were gathered. Here He sat and taught them, and there on the hill slope was the sower scattering his seed on the stony places and the good ground. In the recorded parable nothing is said more than anyone could see for himself; but that which all could see spoke to some of them of the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, and to some only. The words of Jesus—the words He was then speaking—were good seed falling into various soils. They were idle words to some—to many; living words, words of life, to a few, falling into ground in which they would germinate and bring forth fruit.

What a sad parable this seems when we think how much of the ground on which the Divine seed is sown is hard, unbroken rock, how much the thorns and weeds monopolise, and how many are the beaten tracks across it made by careless feet! But we need not think of these only. The good soil is fruitful, and is there not hope even of the others? Our best soils are but disintegrated and pulverised rock, with the vegetable mould formed by the ceaseless growths and decayings of the plant life that has found successive lodgment and sustenance on it. God's earthquakes and thunderstorms, his frosts and rains, break and wear down the stern, forbidding crag till it becomes the sheltered bank on which the tender harebell blooms. And the ground now choked with thorns is CAPABLE OF BETTER THINGS.

It could nourish more gracious growths, nor are the germs of these absent. God's germs lie long in the earth, waiting patiently. Botanists know well enough that new railway cuttings and freshly turned soil afford plants that are rare or hitherto unknown in the locality. The seed has lain dormant there for years. Other growths have prevented them from germinating by thickly covering the surface, but as soon as the conditions are rendered favourable they quicken into living activity and beauty. I recall to mind a coppice in which I saw the ground thickly covered with foxgloves, whose bold and striking colour so dominated the eye as almost to make it oblivious to the green of the brushwood. Three years before that coppice had been a wood covered with trees under whose shade no sign of a foxglove had been found. As soon as the trees were cut down and carried away, and more light and air were afforded, the hitherto unsuspected foxgloves appeared, and, after their probationary year of modest green, burst forth

Have we not often found this with the seed of the Divine Word? It has been read or heard—so far received; but it has lain dormant in our memory as idly as the ungerminating seed in the soil where the conditions are not favourable to growth. But when, by the discipline of life, the condition of the heart has been prepared for the apprehension of the hitherto hidden meaning, the Word becomes life.

Was not this the purpose of our Lord in speaking in parables? The parable is heard, received simply as a story with no apparent application to us. It is retained in the memory as a story of a sower sowing seed, or of a foolish lad who left his father's home and was glad enough to return to it. But by-and by light flashes upon it; it is no longer merely a remembered story, it is a lesson living in the heart.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Church of England.

A CHURCH is to be erected at Kensal-rise to the memory of the late Dean Vaughan. The building will seat 750, and is estimated to cost £7500.

The Church Missionary Society has received permission from the Egyptian Government for three of its representatives to proceed at once to Fashoda.

Mr. R. W. Hanbury, M.P., speaking at Preston, said that if the Church was to be broad and comprehensive more Evangelical bishops would have to be appointed.

An anonymous donation of £1000 has been sent to the fund for enlarging the Wakefield Cathedral, as a memorial of the late Dr. Walsham How, the first Bishop of the diocese.

The Duchess of Albany will open the annual sale of work, in aid of the Church Army Labour Homes for the outcast and destitute, to be held in the Portman Rooms, Baker-street, W., on Dec. 7.

The sum paid by Mr. Hooley for the gold plate presented to St. Paul's Cathedral has been returned to his trustee and accepted by him. The transaction has been purely voluntary. The money has been given privately and anonymously through the hands of a member of the Chapter.

Rev. T. J. Bass, vicar of St. Laurence, Birmingham, is endeavouring to form a Nurses' Home in the midst of his very poor district. Two nurses have already been engaged, and work is so eminently necessary that the vicar believes that when it is known the nurses' stipend and furniture will be forthcoming.

An interesting story of "the widow's mite" comes from the parish of St. Crispin, Bermondsey. An aged widow, whose income is £1 a week, on hearing that the vicar was in need of about £50 for the repair of the church heating apparatus, took to the vicarage five sovereigns as her contribution, and on the vicar going round to thank the donor she insisted on giving him another five.

Captain Davey, of the Church Army, speaking at Newbury on the social, rescue, and prison work, mentioned that during his recent mission in H.M. convict prison at Portland some 200 convicts asked to have a special interview. The rector of Newbury (Rev. E. I. Gardner) and others having spoken, £15 was collected by those present for the Church Army Discharged Prisoners' Aid Fund.

The annual service of intercession for preventive, rescue, and penitentiary work, and for those engaged in it, will be held, under the auspices of the London Diocesan Council, on December 9, at 4 p.m., in St. Paul's, Onslow-square, by permission of Prebendary Webb-Peploe. The preacher will be Rev. Dr. H. C. G. Moule. After the service there will be a social gathering of workers in the church-room adjoining the church.

Lord Ashcombe introduced the question of the formation of a bishopric for Surrey at a meeting of the clergy and laity of the Dorking rural deanery held last week. It was resolved—"That in the event of the formation of the diocese of Southwark this meeting of the rural deanery hereby expresses its wish to be included in the new diocese, which it trusts will include nearly the whole of the greater part of the county of Surrey."

Congregational.

Rev. J. H. Stowell has received and accepted a call to the pastorate of the Mount View Congregational Church, Stroud Green.

Meetings in support of the London Missionary Society have been held in the Congregational churches of Edinburgh and neighbourhood.

Dr. Harry Guinness will preach at Westminster Bridge-road Church during Rev. F. B. Meyer's absence in India. The assistant pastor will take one service, and Dr. Guinness the other, each Lord's Day.

The Church Aid and Home Mission Committees of the Union have unanimously resolved to undertake the supervision of the work at Comely Bank, Edinburgh, and are making arrangements for the supply of the pulpit recently rendered vacant by the removal of Rev. H. Jenkins, M.A., to Leith.

Rev. H. D. Bull, pastor of Grays Church, asked the members of his congregation to send in their ideas upon the question, "Why are many Sermons a Failure?" The papers were read from the pulpit on the following Sunday, and formed the basis of Mr. Bull's sermon. The service evoked great interest.

Baptist.

Lord Radnor has presented a plot of land to Bodenham Church for the enlargement of the building.

Rev. J. S. Johns has resigned the pastorate of Hope Church, Bridgend, owing to the fact that he is a Strict Baptist, whereas the deacons have decided that there should be "open communion."

A united Communion service has been held at Brondesbury in connection with the London Baptist Association. Rev. C. W. Vick presided; Rev. B. Thomas gave the address. Rev. E. G. Gange opened a conference, before the service, on "Our Young Members and How Best to Help Them."

Recognition services in connection with the settlement of Rev. Joseph Gay as pastor of the Woodborough-road Church, Nottingham, were held on Thursday last week. Among those who took part in the proceedings were Revs. J. T. Marshall (Manchester Baptist College) and Dr. Witton Davies (Midland Baptist College).

Services in connection with the seventh anniversary of the Tabernacle, High Barnet, were held on Sunday and Thursday, Nov. 13 and 17. The report showed that twenty members had been enrolled during the year, thirteen on profession of faith. Miss Ada Parker, a member of the church, is in training at Doric Lodge for work on the Congo.

Methodist.

Seven Free Methodist missionaries have lately tasted for foreign fields.

The Leeds Primitive Methodist Churches have held a united evangelistic mission. Mid-day services were a special feature.

The Wesleyan district convention meeting at Derby, conducted by the President of the Conference, proved very helpful and stimulating to the cause.

No fewer than twenty of the new mayors are Methodists, including the Lord Mayor of Liverpool, who is a prominent member amongst the Wesleyans.

At the eleventh anniversary at Birmingham Central Mission (Wesleyan) some highly interesting accounts of work by Visiting Sisters were given in the Town-hall. Rev. J. H. Jowett commended the mission work, and the sum of £500 was raised.

The foundation-stones of the Home, Shelter, and Labour Yard for Men established by the Manchester and Salford Wesleyan Methodist Mission in Wood-street, Ancoats, Manchester, have been laid. There was a large attendance at the ceremony. Dr. Marshall Randles presided.

After two years' experience of missionary work in West Africa Rev. R. W. Burnett is returning to England, having accepted the superintendency of the Guildford circuit of the Primitive Methodist Connexion. He will thus succeed his father, who next year enters upon the office of secretary of the Connexional Missionary Society.

Rev. W. Foster read a paper on "Empty Central Chapels" before the London Wesleyan Methodist Council. He contended for picked men for special work; then ministerial concentration, the extension of the term, and some outside financial help until success was reached. The executive committee is to consider what can be done in the matter.

The trustees of the Fernley Lecture (Wesleyan) have invited Rev. Dr. C. J. Little, president of the Garrett Biblical Institute, in the United States, to deliver the lecture at the British Conference of 1900. In accepting the invitation, Dr. Little says: "The recognition of America and American Methodism will, I am sure, be appreciated in all our borders and beyond them."

Presbyterian.

The Commission of the Established Church of Scotland has agreed to nominate Rev. John Pagan, D.D., of Bothwell, as Moderator of its next General Assembly. The Commission of the Free Church of Scotland has agreed to nominate Rev. James Stewart, D.D., for many years the president of the well-known Missionary Training Institute at Lovedale, Cape Colony. The Moderator of the English Synod will probably be Dr. John Watson, of Liverpool.

Salvation Army.

A notorious devil-dancer has recently been converted in South India.

The Shelter at Paris is doing good work. The number of people asking admission increases nightly.

The Salvation Army in Japan has just been celebrating its third anniversary. Two new corps have been opened in Tokio.

The social work in Chicago during the past twelve months has made rapid strides; hundreds of men are assisted weekly.

The City Board of Stockholm has handed over to the management of the Army a public bath, which has cost the town 30,000 kroner for fitting.

A large hall has been secured in Manila, the capital of the Philippines. A large number of English-speaking people have already been brought to Christ.

Fallen Asleep.

Mr. John Wilson, J.P., of Edinburgh, was an earnest worker in the cause of the poor.—Miss Ridley, of Felstead, Essex, for many years superintendent of the Congregational Sunday-school, and last year president of the local Sunday School Union.—Rev. D. Donaldson, minister of the Presbyterian Church at Alnwick.—Colonel Theophilus Boileau, late of the 20th Hussars, an elder of the Marylebone Presbyterian Church for about twenty-five years, and later at Ealing for over ten years.—Dr. W. S. Duncan, foreign secretary of the American Baptist Missionary Union.—Mr. R. Surtees, circuit steward of Whitley Wesleyan Church, North Shields.—Rev. George Sexton, M.A., LL.D., well known on both sides of the Atlantic as an eloquent preacher and lecturer.—Alderman E. T. Bass, J.P., of Lydd, accidentally burned to death. He was superintendent of the Wesleyan Sunday-school.—Mrs. Alice J. Harries, wife of Rev. J. Harries, and daughter of Rev. John Rees, one of the oldest ministers in the Methodist Connexion.—Mrs. J. B. Roberts, aged eighty-eight, an earnest Sunday-school teacher and industrious worker amongst the Wesleyans at Bourne, Lincs.

Across Uganda to the Congo.—Reuter's Agency has received notes made by Dr. Albert Cook, who, with Bishop Tucker, has just completed a very interesting journey across Uganda to the Congo Free State. Writing from Butanuka, Toro, on July 30, the doctor says:—"Bishop Tucker, Mr. Buckley, and myself are on our way (from Mengo) to the Albert Edward Lake. We have marched 300 miles in the last four weeks, and although the country is disturbed we have travelled in perfect safety. I persuaded the bishop to come in a dug-out canoe to visit the island called Kizinga. Leobeni, the Christian teacher with us, was a Muganda, and acted as interpreter. The island was a small one, but I counted over 200 full-grown men alone, who quickly surrounded us. The chief was friendly, but, of course, the people were sunk in the deepest heathenism, worshipping the spirits of their fathers, and all wearing chains."

Temperance Notes.

ONE hundred thousand gallons of whisky were sold one day last week in a City sale-room. The sale realised about £20,000.

The production of Scottish whisky has risen from 18,159,651 gallons in 1888 to 33,744,503 gallons this year.

A movement is on foot to establish, at a cost of £3000, a new temperance hall, etc., in Preston, as a memorial to the late Joseph Livesey, one of the seven men of that town who were pioneers in the temperance reform.

The Yorkshire Women's Christian Temperance Union has now completed twenty-one years of service. At the annual conference, held in York, the Lady Mayoress gave a reception to the delegates. All accounts of work given were most satisfactory.

The Archbishop of Canterbury, as president of the National Temperance League, has issued, dated from Lambeth Palace, a preliminary invitation to the national and international temperance organisations throughout the world for a World's Temperance Congress, to be held in London during 1900.

The Belgian Minister of the Interior has just submitted to the King for signature a Decree instituting a prize of 1000 francs for the best picture representing, on the one hand, a drunkard's physical organisation, together with scenes of drunkenness, and, on the other, that of a healthy man, with domestic scenes in homes where temperance is practised. The successful work will become the property of the State, and will be reproduced in chromo-lithography for use at public educational institutions.

A memorial to Lord Salisbury in favour of the Sunday-closing of public-houses in England, and in the five towns of Ireland now exempt from the Irish Act of 1878, is being promoted by the Sunday Closing Special Campaign Committee, of 34, Memorial Hall Chambers, Farringdon-street, E.C. The views emphasised in the memorial are that the sale of intoxicating liquors is the only trade lawfully carried on on Sundays, and that England is the only part of the Kingdom in which this exception still exists.

The London correspondent of the Dundee Advertiser understands that it is practically certain that the Licensing Commission will recommend the immediate and general suspension of the issue of new licences for public-houses. The views expressed by the members of the Commission make it clear that on this point they are nearly unanimous. Parliament will be recommended to pass a short Act for this purpose at once, subject, however, to the provision that in districts where new licences are regarded as necessary they shall be transferred from districts where an excessive number of licensed houses now exist.

Personalia.

Mr. John Wood, of the Evangelisation Society, has been and is still very ill.

M. Charles Fermaud, International Y.M.C.A. secretary, is at present in Scotland addressing meetings on the work of the Association.

Dr. Anderson Brown's Home for Women has been closed since the middle of October owing to her ill-health. Prayer for her recovery is earnestly desired.

Mr. Charles Inglis is leaving for America on Dec. 3 for some weeks, and will be visiting Chicago and other cities. Letters may be addressed, 99, Clinton-place, New York.

Mr. Lyall, of Chicago, recently delivered an address at the Y.W.C. Associations' conference at Saltcoats, and has also occupied the pulpits of Saltcoats and Stevenston Free Churches.

Rev. W. Mottram, deputation secretary of the Congregational Total Abstinence Association, will for the present direct its operations in place of Rev. G. E. Thorn, who, in consequence of the pressure of home work, has resigned the office of hon. sec.

Pastor D. M. Cameron hopes to be back to his work in Union Tabernacle, Wandsworth, by December 4. He has held five weeks' special services in Free and U.P. Churches in Nairn, N.B. Many, young and old, have been awakened and professed faith in Christ.

Rev. T. Manton-Smith is lying very ill at his residence, Bedford-road, Clapham, S.W., with a poisoned foot. Although it is hoped that danger of amputation is over, he is in a very weak condition. Prayer is asked to his complete recovery, but kind friends are desired not to send telegrams or letters of sympathy that require reply. All his engagements to the end of the year are cancelled.

Kent-street Sunday-school (Amicable-row, Tabard-street, Borough) will celebrate the completion of 100 years' work in the school by a meeting on Wednesday, Nov. 30, at 7 o'clock. Rev. F. B. Meyer, Rev. Thomas Spurgeon, and others will take part.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THE Lord's seal may be upon some whom we do not recognise as his. We may debar men from a means of grace if we decline to accept the service of those who willingly offer themselves to do gratuitous work of any kind in connection with the work of God.

One way to the heart of another is to put yourself under an obligation to him. We knew an old minister who never could get into kindly relations with a farmer in his congregation until he borrowed his horse; it was most willingly lent; the ice was broken; and they were good friends ever after. Of course, the obligations must not become exactions, nor the reciprocity be all on one side.

"Freely ye have received, freely give." "Remembering the words of the Lord Jesus, how He said, 'It is more blessed to give than to receive.'" These and many kindred Scriptures protest against regarding the collection as less devotional than any other part of public worship. In America we have seen the minister receive the people's gifts from the collectors and present them to God, giving Him thanks and asking his blessing. Such recognition of the Giver elevates the collection into its proper place in the sanctuary. The gift is laid on the altar, and the altar sanctifies the gift. The people give cheerfully, and the Lord loveth a cheerful giver.

We are convinced that there is a great mistake in not giving the people an opportunity of showing their appreciation of efforts for their good. We would not send the hat round at an open-air service, but when people are provided with seats in a hall, and perhaps also supplied with hymn-books, what objection can there be to giving them the opportunity of contributing, which in many cases they are more than willing to do?

"But now complete the doing also" (2 Cor. viii. 11, R.V.) is an exhortation needed by most of us. Like the Corinthians, we may have the willing mind, and we may have formed the honest purpose to do some good thing, but we halt at "completing the doing." Excuses prevail, or we are often too indolent to move. Many a Christian has gone down to his grave with an uncompleted gracious purpose in his heart. Money intended for some needy institution or Christian work was not properly assigned to it, and when death came there was no time to do anything. A kind gift was planned for some saint of God, but it never reached him. Among the living and vigorous much is incomplete; the plan, the intention, the wish is unexceptionable, but the work is not perfected until it is done. And the doing is the difficulty. Or we may be ready for that also, when the moment for action comes; we were only waiting for "the set time," and as the finger of God's clock pointed to it we arose with gladness, and said "Now can I complete the doing also."

Those who believe in the sacred character of the Lord's Day will rejoice at the decision of the London County Council regarding Sunday concerts in the Queen's Hall. The Lord's Day Observance associations have done excellent service in the matter. It was at the Council's Licensing Session that the decision was finally reached, that "a licence for music and dancing be granted in regard to Queen's Hall, subject to an undertaking that the hall shall not be opened on Sundays or other days prohibited by the licence for private gain or by way of trade."

On every ground this step will be gratifying. It is not merely that Sunday labour will be reduced, but the day itself will be preserved from much desecration. We believe so thoroughly in the observance of the first day of the week as of Divine origin, that we sympathise to the full with all wise efforts to save it from drifting toward the evils of "Continental" liberty and licence. We honour God in honouring his day. Besides, the chief patrons of these concerts were not so much the "hard-at-work-all-the-week" class as the well-dressed and comparatively leisured classes who have ample facilities in the week for entertainments of all kinds.

It is no reply to point to the many ways, direct and indirect, in which money is being made on the Lord's Day in other trades. It is easier to prevent the creation of a vested interest than to destroy one already in existence. On all hands the quiet and peace of the Day of Rest are being interfered with, and the example of the Council in this particular instance is one that may well be followed in Parliament on a wider scale. While Germany and other Continental countries are vainly trying to rescue the shreds and tatters of the day from the dominion of mammon, it is high time Britain awoke to the necessity of guarding the "things that remain" to us in this country.

At last it is announced that the railway companies have granted facilities for attendance at large religious gatherings by a reduction of fares. The remarkable thing is that for years reduced fares have been allowed to patrons of Sunday excursions, races, and other sporting meetings; but to attendants at the great annual gatherings of religious societies and communities all concessions were refused. We are quite sure that the decision will increase the number of visitors to Congresses, Conferences, Assemblies, and other similar meetings. As we have frequently urged, it was an entirely mistaken policy of the great railway companies to decline to act generously toward religious and philanthropic societies in this respect; and we are glad to see that protests have not been in vain.

The bishops are reported to have arrived at an agreement as to five points, and will collectively discountenance the following practices :—

1. The ceremonial use of lighted candles.
2. The ceremonial use of incense.
3. The reservation of the Sacrament.
4. The invocation of the Virgin Mary and of saints. And
5. The use at the stated services of the Church of any services other than those of the Prayer Book, save such as each bishop may approve.

So far these practices are of serious import. But it is desirable to know exactly what is to be understood by the discountenance of them. Does it mean that the bishops will absolutely prohibit such things and follow with penalty any failure to accede to the prohibition? Otherwise mere discountenance carries very little weight, and will by no means set anxious minds at rest. Two important subjects are, moreover, not touched in this list—the confessional and prayers for the dead. These, perhaps, are left for future discussion, but silence upon them is not reassuring.

Rev. R. C. Fillingham, vicar of Hexton, has administered the Lord's Supper in a Congregational Church at Wellingborough, to a large number of Churchmen, notwithstanding the inhibition of the Bishop of Peterborough, and has announced his intention of founding

A Society of the Lord's Supper, to provide the Sacraments of the Established Church for those Protestant Churchmen who are driven from the altars of that Church by the practices of Romanising priests.

Some Nonconformists object to chapels being so used, and argue that if Church folk still hold the sacerdotal superstition that a Christian cannot receive the Sacrament except at the hands of a priest who has been ordained by a bishop, "it is not for us to admit our inferiority by placing our churches at the disposal of a Protestant priest for a Communion Service." Still, the fact remains that many devout souls are deprived of the Communion Service in the manner familiar and agreeable to them, and this need will have to be met, in this or in some other way.

In a recent sermon, Rev. J. H. Jowett, of Birmingham, spoke with emphasis of the shallowness of modern novels, "the writers of which have closed their Bibles," and are "ministering to a skin-disease." Sand paper may remove the surface, but it does not remove the substance. "What we want is not so much finish, not so much culture, not so many accomplishments—but character. You will only get it by regeneration." It is by the preaching of this vital first principle—character by regeneration — that the open sores of humanity are to be healed, social problems solved, and true progress promoted.

The fact that there are "a million people every Saturday cheering and hooting round the football grounds" of England, should ensure that due attention be given to a vigorous indictment in this month's Contemporary against the "national game," from the pen of Mr. Ernest Ensor. It is affirmed that the influence of League matches on the players and the spectators is "thoroughly evil." Their tendency is all towards brutality. The professionals live a life of constant temptation to idleness, drink, fierce passions, improvident habits, and boundless conceit. The spectators are injured physically and morally. The old English love of "fair play" has receded to thinly populated or remote districts "where athletics cannot be exploited for money." It would be difficult to conceive a more serious charge against a popular amusement. Those who uphold it, and encourage it by their presence, should ponder the article with grave solicitude.

"An Anxious Minister," living in an average, medium-sized, manufacturing town, writes to The Independent giving the causes of his great concern as to the state of religion among the people for whom he labours. He denounces the two political clubs as a great hindrance to spiritual work—

Scores of our young people have found more attraction in the cigar and billiard table than in the meetings of the church. Young fellows who would formerly be seen in the Bible-class are now constantly at the club instead. There never was a greater delusion than to suppose that these clubs are educational. They are nothing of the kind. At least, all they teach lads to do is to smoke, and play cards and billiards. These same lads are less regular on Sundays since they have become members of a club.

He finds, and so have many other ministers, that when the most intelligent and active of his members have accepted office in some public body, they often are no more seen at any week-evening service. At the other end of the scale "the social club" is carrying away the working man.

These clubs are perfect pests, and are in many respects worse than the public-house. Some church members here quite recently have back-slidden through these baneful clubs.

The writer enumerates other hindrances, most of them new; but here we have enough to account for many a thin congregation. The remedy lies, not in the multiplying of new organisations within the Church, in order to compete with those outside. It lies rather in simplification of methods; in rallying round the centre of life and warmth; in spiritualising the tone and temper of the Church-life. Our weapons must be spiritual, not carnal; we shall overcome the world not by descending into its arena, but by giving rightful prominence to the simple verities of the Gospel, and preaching unswerving loyalty to the suffering and crowned Saviour. The very difficulties enumerated are the opportunity of the Christian Church, whose function it is to bear clear witness to the power and grace of God in a world of pressure and competition, of distraction and manifold temptation.

China has suffered many and grievous things at the hands of the West, especially England; there seems to be worse immediately impending. All who are interested in this yellow half of the human family, the Chinaman, will do well to read an article in the current number of The Review of Reviews, entitled "The Crime against China—and Ourselves." The most important part of it is that which refers to the attempt to inoculate a peace-loving people with the modern curse of militarism. The European Powers are beginning to lay violent hands upon the pacific yellow man, and by sheer force are about to compel him to become a soldier in spite of himself.

The various nations who share the plunder will require soldiers to guard their long frontiers. There will be constant rivalry between them, and constant danger of war. Can anything be done to avert this fearful crime of giving one half the human family over to a misery from which we are just about to try and save the other half? We can, first of all, pray, and God can and will give wisdom.

The winding-up of the New Icarian community in Iowa, U.S.A., marks another failure to realise the millennium by means of social reconstruction. The present community was founded by Etienne Cabet, in the time of Louis Philippe, whose government drove him across the Atlantic. His principles were expressed in the usual formula "liberty, equality, fraternity," equality of goods being compulsory. During the lifetime of the founder and his colleagues matters went on fairly well, though a certain number swarmed off on the plea that the founder arrogated too much authority to himself. But in the second generation the usual inherent difficulty showed itself. The thrifty and the industrious complained that the work was more and more forced upon them, while the idle and selfish members refused to work at all; and so at last the community broke up altogether. All this illustrates the complete futility of realising the millennium by human, and especially by social effort alone. "Every new earth," as it has well been said, "must come by way of heaven."

Interesting light is thrown on the origin of the Czar's famous Peace Rescript in an article in one of the reviews. It is well-known that the Rescript was the outcome of the Czar's personal initiative. What moved him to it was, it is stated, the reading of a great work by a Polish publicist on the Future of War in its technical, economic, and political aspects. This book, written by an expert, and published in six bulky volumes, is an exposé of the anti-climax to which militarism has brought modern civilisation, and a demonstration of the horrible evils into which a great war would plunge Europe. The impression on the Czar's mind was such that he had no rest till he began to move in the direction of lessening the progressive armaments of civilised nations. He was specially impressed with the fact that, while modern weapons of precision have transformed war into a "co-operative suicide," the vast size of present-day armies makes their utilisation practically impossible, and the cost of their maintenance incalculable.

But the crowning argument of the futility of war in this epoch-making book is a description of the result of a possible war between the Dual and Triple Alliances. Before a blow had been struck, untold misery would be caused by the fall in all stocks, the panic on every bourse, the closing of most industrial establishments, and the rise in the price of food. The daily expenditure of such a war would amount to £4,195,000, and the annual cost to the fantastic total of £1,747,120,000. Two years of such a war would irretrievably ruin both sides. Meanwhile, the world's trade would pass en masse into the hands of the United States, whose present prosperity is due to the absence of militarism; and Europe would ultimately become a pensioner on America. This forecast is based on such accurate and conclusive facts and observations, that the modern system of war is demonstrated to be a reductio ad absurdum; and if it could be read by all those who mould and those who constitute public opinion in Europe to-day, the Czar's proposals would soon come to some practical issue. A false ideal of glory and widespread ignorance — these are the two buttresses of militarism.

The instability of the "balance of power" among Continental nations is such that the announcement of a commercial treaty between France and Italy has caused considerable excitement and apprehension. Are we to have a fresh grouping among the Great Powers? Too much significance must not be attributed to a "trade understanding," but it is at least bound to bring about friendlier feelings between neighbours whose history at times has been anything but an exchange of courtesies. Religiously, we are told that it will mean the transfer on the part of France of a measure of her support "from the Vatican to the Quirinal," and so lessen the apprehension of danger in Italy from the ecclesiastical side of politics. This will be an unmixed blessing to both nations, which have recently suffered greatly from fanatical interference with their political affairs. Both the recent abortive revolution in Italy and the terrible Dreyfus affair are the result of clerical machinations.

Mr. Goldwin Smith, writing in The North American Review on "Faith and Morals," falls, like most Agnostics, into a curious confusion. He seems to identify the Christian ideal with the perversions of it which we find in Roman Catholic and other communities. He says: "The Christian ideal, however sublime and beneficent, is imperfect. It involves an impracticable secession from the world, and disregard of all worldly interests." In days gone by, the "holy life" was unquestionably confounded with the ascetic and monastic ideal. But it is not in accordance with the teaching of the New Testament. The advice of the Apostle to the first converts from heathendom was, "Brethren, let each man, wherein he was called, therein abide with God." They were to serve and glorify their Lord in their daily calling. This thought runs through the Epistles generally. If the advice had been followed loyally throughout the ages, the world would have become a very different kind of world long before this. It is of the utmost importance that Christians should realise and act on the principle that their highest sphere for serving Christ is in their daily life and occupation.

Dr. Rashdall gives, in his "Doctrine and Development," a very good test by which to judge of any view of Christ's nature that may be presented for our acceptance:—

The true test, as it seems to me, between a view of Christ's nature which can be regarded as a legitimate development of historical Christianity, and one which can only be looked upon as a new and different creed, is this, "Does it admit the Divine Sonship of Christ in some unique, some solitary sense, or does it make Christ merely one of many sons of God?"

For ourselves we cannot imagine what further knowledge concerning Jesus Christ any development of historical Christianity is going to give us beyond the knowledge revealed in the New Testament. The difficulty is to grow into that revelation, to apprehend and realise it; and as for going beyond it, the thing is impossible. As soon as anyone proclaims some new view of Jesus we may be sure that it falls below that of Paul and John.

There is something very refreshing in the confessions of new converts to the truth. The words of some of those priests on the Continent who have recently abandoned Romanism come to the heart in a very direct way. One writes:—

Would it not be hypocrisy to continue to mount the altar, to perform rites in which I, following the testimony of Christ and his Apostles, recognise no higher value than of a commemoration of his Last Supper with his disciples? Would it not be hypocrisy to believe myself invested with a power reserved to God alone—that of pardoning sins after having previously exacted a detailed confession of them?

We may theorise about confession, but these men know exactly what it is, and does; and the one just quoted says that in it he finds for children "the surest school of lying," for those of older years "the school of the most terrible immorality," and a danger for the most sincere and honest priest.

Suggestive Readings.

1859 AND NOW.

BEFORE the memorable Revival of 1859 there had been years of preaching of a character more calculated, perhaps, to convict of sin than to give peace with God through the finished work of Christ. The judgment to come in all its terrors was dwelt upon in terms which are now unheard.

When the Revival came, its first manifestation was a vivid and awful realisation of things which are unseen and eternal—of the sinfulness and guilt of sin, of the powers of darkness, of the personality of the Holy Spirit and of the Evil One, and of the "terrible crystal"—the light of God.

Under the terrors of these experiences, sinners of either sex, of all ages and of all conditions, were stricken down, and cried out in agony of soul.

But these cases were not more numerous, nor necessarily more real, than others in which there were of despair, nor perhaps such evident or apparent issues into the liberty of the glory of the sons of God.

The Spirit of God alone could minister to these minds diseased. His remedy was such passages of the Word of Truth as Isa. liii., John iii. 16; v. 24; Rom. iv., v., viii.—in a word, the Gospel of God—Jesus and the Resurrection.

We quote the following from early numbers of THE REVIVAL, to show the deep conviction of sin, and the peace which followed it.

A young woman, extending her open hands in an attitude of the most appalling horror, exclaimed, "Oh, that fearful pit! Lord Jesus, save me. I am a sinner, a most unworthy sinner; but, oh Lord, take him away, take him away. Oh Saviour of sinners, remove him from my sight."

Some general features distinguish all the cases we have met with, though marked by great variety in other respects. The influence was irresistible. Its first effect is a keen and frequently agonising sense of personal guilt and danger. This seems to occupy the whole soul, while the cries for mercy are constant and piteous. This gives place, without any outward cause, to peace, comfort, and joy. The assurance of God's favour is as distinct as was the conviction of his wrath, and gladness beams forth in the countenance where anguish has been depicted. Love and praise to the great Deliverer then engross the powers of the soul. The name of Jesus is uniformly precious, and they never weary of telling of his love. Earnest concern for unsaved friends is evidenced in constant prayer and urgent entreaties. These are not feeble and occasional: they are without exception the accompaniments of this work, no matter how averse the subject of it.

I never heard any cries more piercing and affecting than those of some of the girls in that store last night — characters who were notorious in Port Glasgow. After the meeting had been desired to separate, a great many remained behind most anxious to hear the Word.

There was a large crowd outside, and on my asking if they wished to hear more, they said that they did. I spoke till ten o'clock, and they were unwilling to go away. Till an advanced hour of the night I was visiting the persons stricken down, and I saw a number of them this morning who had found peace and were rejoicing in Christ.

The Gospel of comfort and encouragement to convicted and confessed sinners in process of time came to be applied to unconvicted sinners, like plaster laid upon unwounded flesh. The older method of "shaking them over hell," as it was sometimes termed, was discarded; hardened or careless sinners were assured that they were sons of God; eternal judgment was denied; hell was smiled at as an exploded myth; Satan was evaporated into an evil influence. And this in places which, by tradition and trust deed, were pledged to the old evangelical faith as the truth is in Jesus.

The consequence has been that for the last thirty years there has been little conviction of sin such as appalled both sufferers and spectators in 1859. Salvation has been made free and easy. The dictionary has been ransacked for adjectives so to describe it. Whereas Christians used to be spoken of as "serious," now neither God nor the devil, neither heaven nor hell, neither saint nor sinner, is to be taken seriously. Everything must be bright, pleasant, cheerful, joyous, manly, enthusiastic, etc., etc. Truly, Wisdom's ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace; but the law of the Kingdom is

"FIRST PURE, THEN PEACEABLE."

How has this easy-going state of things been initiated? Not by the world, but by the Church. The serious, the terrible, the judgment side of the truth has been largely overlooked. Preachers and teachers have, to a great extent, lost touch with it. The Spirit convicts the world of sin through men who are themselves convinced. Light thoughts of sin reduce Satan to a shadow; hell to a figure of speech; atonement to at-one-ment, and "the precious blood of Christ" to a degrading form of words which we will not insult the Triune God by repeating.

In order to a Revival must we not become fellow-workers with God, by meditating upon sin as rebellion, as treason, as usurpation of the rights of God? Its most prominent points are (1) the endeavour of the created angel, Lucifer, the covering cherub, to seize the throne of the Creator and Ruler of the universe; (2) the yielding of man to the temptation of the fallen spirit, "Ye shall be as God"; (3) the claim by man, under the influence of the Evil One, not only to the throne, but to the very being of God: "So that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God."

Inspired history is but the filling up of the intervals between these acts of treason; and the significance of the cross of Christ can only be believed, known, experienced, and preached, as the horror of the rebellion, the treason, is comprehended by the preacher, and as he is apprehended by it.

Dr. H. M. Williamson, of Belfast, says that since Mr. Moody's first visit to that great town, no Gospel work has been more effective than that of Major Whittle, who for four days preached of nothing but SIN, and then proclaimed the atoning blood of Jesus as God's only remedy. The converts of that time have been some of the most consistent, continuous, and successful winners of souls. M.

The late Marie Hilton's Creche.—DEAR SIR,—This institution is still carried on by my family, though I am fully expecting an arrangement for its permanent and efficient management by other hands will not be much further delayed. The number of children keeps up, and we shall be grateful for such kind Christmas gifts as our friends have for so many years been good enough to send.—Yours truly,

JOHN HILTON, Treasurer.

Famine in Persia. — Dr. Shedd writes:—"Prices have again gone up to famine rates in Oroomiah, Persia. Wheat costs three times what it did a year ago, and four times the usual price; and it is almost impossible to get any. From the Tigris Valley, between Diarbekr and Mosul, one of the great wheat-growing plains of the world, most pitiful accounts come. They tell us of wheat more than five times the usual price, of deserted villages and even of girls sold into captivity." Dr. Shedd appeals for help so that they may be able to feed the hungry. Rev. F. G. Coan will be in Bohtan and Mosul during the winter, so that he can distribute the relief there. Deacon Airshalom Sayad, of the Nestorian Church in Oroomiah, will forward any contributions sent him at the Missionary Training Home, Drayton Park, London, N.; and will also gladly give information about Persia at any meetings invited.

TRYING TO DESTROY GOD'S WORD.—Jer. xxxvi. 20-32.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"The Word of our God shall stand for ever."—Isa. xl. 8.

JEREMIAH was the son of Hilkiah, the high priest (mentioned in last lesson). He commenced to prophesy when he was about twenty-one years of age, and doubtless at the same time did service as priest in the Temple. He was timid and shy, but once roused he could dare all things for the sake of duty. He had to preach unpopular truths to the great of the land, but never flinched from it. Jeremiah was one of those men who saw the danger—judged it accurately, yet faced it. 'Tis easy for a blind and deaf man to walk calmly in perilous places. Jeremiah was a born teacher. He could forcibly illustrate what he wanted to teach. A few examples of this: Jer. vii., xiii., xviii., xxiv.

KING JEHOIAKIM.

When the Egyptians marched through Palestine against the Assyrians Josiah joined the Assyrians. In the battle Josiah was defeated and slain. His third son was crowned, but after thirteen weeks he was made prisoner and carried away. Pharaoh Necho then placed Jehoiakim (an elder son of Josiah) on the throne. He had to pay heavy tribute to Egypt. After four years the Assyrians were conquered by the Babylonians, and the Egyptians driven home. Then for three years Jehoiakim had to pay tribute to Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon (it was at this time, beginning of the three years, that Daniel, etc., were carried away captive). So that Jehoiakim was only king in name. But the above facts show the period of trouble which produced the Lamentations of Jeremiah.

READING THE ROLL OF JEREMIAH.

Jeremiah had been prophesying for twenty-three years, and he now wrote out the substance of his message at God's command. He dictated it to Baruch, the scribe.

A fast day was appointed (perhaps on the approach of Nebuchadnezzar's army), and as Jeremiah was put in retirement, probably commanded by the king not to preach, Baruch took the roll and read it to the multitude from a balcony. The matter was reported to the nobles, who sent for Baruch to read the roll to them. They were interested in its contents, and so carried the news to the king (20), who sent Jehudi to fetch it. He listened to a few leaves of the roll, and then in anger cutting the roll with his penknife (used for sharpening the reed with which they wrote), he threw it into the fire bit by bit.

Lesson.—Beware of anger; in such moments the most precious things of life are destroyed—e.g., friendships.

THE ROLL RE-WRITTEN (27, 28).

Jeremiah was commanded to re-write the roll. Although it was done at God's bidding, yet the act proves that Jeremiah was not a man to be daunted by failure and disappointment.

In God's work perseverance and pluck are more needful than anywhere else. We are to toil on and do his bidding, assured that the sowing will produce the harvest, and the battle will result in victory.

HOW WE DESTROY OUR BIBLE.

(1) By never reading it at all, keeping it as an ornament, or idol, but not using it as the "sword of the spirit," "the bread of life."

(2) By reading it in tit-bits, which we call texts. If we would understand it aright we must read it as we do any other book—not merely pick out a sentence here and there.

(3) By not obeying its commands and following its teachings. The Bible is a dead letter to many who profess to study it.

GOD'S WORD IS EVERLASTING (29-32).

No man can destroy God's Word. He may burn all Bibles and other books in which God speaks. He may stop his ears so that he cannot hear God's voice. He may close his eyes to God's parables. But the Word of God still exists. The punishment which Jeremiah foretold came upon the sinful king and nation, although the writing had been burned.

They who fight against God, and try to destroy Him or his truth, injure only themselves.

FROM OTHER LANDS.

Aintab, Turkey in Asia.

EVER since 1847 Aintab has been a mission station of the American Board, and to-day the institutions include a college, girls' seminary, hospital, and orphanage. The president of the college and hospital is Rev. A. Fuller, D.D.

It is nearly fifty years since the girls' seminary was opened. The early seventies saw the first college classes, but the building came a little later. The hospital has grown out of the medical needs of the people. The orphanage has been opened since the massacres, and contains about twenty-five girls and boys. The language principally used is Turkish, with English so far as is practicable.

The plan of the Mission has been not so much to impose foreign modes of thought on the people as to develop a self-dependent Christian community, and one fruit has been an unusual degree of co-operative feeling with the Gregorian churches in which Protestant pastors and teachers have frequently been invited to preach and teach. This friendly feeling was much increased by the massacres, but now there is a certain withdrawal on the part of the Gregorian Church in this respect. The cheerful content of the impoverished people is very striking. Business is adjusting itself, and though want is often extreme, yet some of those who seemed to have no prospect whatever two years ago have now contrived, under a fairly good governor, to get some things together and to be making headway again.

The massacres and plunderings have not been the only calamities the Mission has almost staggered under. The girls' seminary buildings and a large portion of the college have been burned down in days when insurance was not possible in the interior of Turkey. There is at Aintab so small a supply of water that fire can hardly be fought except with chemicals. But, happily, insurance has now been effected. The work of seminary and college has been very fruitful in good to the country. Pastors and teachers and leaders among men and women in different parts of the country speak with affectionate pride of their having been trained at Aintab. The large majority of the teachers and professors are natives of Turkey.

It will be readily understood that fire and sword have left the material part of this Mission in straits. Among immediate needs are library and reading-room fittings, and books for the college and seminary. £300 would suffice. The hospital requires enlargement, and a good supply of surgical instruments. The orphanage needs steady support. Other requirements may be learned by addressing Rev. Dr. Fuller, at the college.

Nyassa Industrial Mission.

WRITING early in September, Mrs. Deeath, of the Nyassa Industrial Mission, gives an interesting account of a service held at Cholo, where she and her husband have recently taken up work on one of the mission plantations. This place is situated about forty miles from Blantyre. The congregation, largely consisting of women and children, gathered on the verandah of the house, since there is no school building as yet. They listened attentively, though the Gospel was to them altogether a new thing; and it seemed hard to get them to grasp the meaning of a Saviour's love for sinners. One has to talk very simply to them, for they are like little children.

Writing a few days later, Mrs. Deeath says that some seventy of the natives were present at the service on the second Sunday—a most encouraging commencement in this dark district. Prayer is asked on behalf of this effort to break up entirely fresh ground in the heart of heathendom.

England and China.—An interesting letter on the hindrances to our legitimate trade with China that are found in the Indian Opium Supply, written by Mrs. Archibald Little, appeared in The St. James's Gazette on November 18. Mrs. Little writes from exceptional knowledge.

Gospel Work in France.

WHILST gladly uniting in the enlarged interest for missions to the ends of the earth, in obedience to our Lord's commands, we must not "pass by on the other side" our next-door neighbour, so near and so much claiming our solicitude, France, with all her wants, moral, social, and political. Some of her children, her best friends, are doing what they can to evangelise her, and greatly need our help and sympathy; they labour amidst mountains of obstacles. Hear what a beloved and faithful pastor says of these obstacles:

"First, Atheism, which, under the pretext of clearing away all the encumbrances of the past to liberty and progress, viz., its beliefs, superstitions, and prejudices, and every idea of religion, raises its flag in the name of that liberty and progress, rejects every overture, and with unheard-of violence and desperation, seduces, draws, and fanaticises crowds of working people.

"The second enemy is Clericalism, which, obeying the commands of its superiors, advances insidiously and insinuates itself by crooked, persistent ways. It acts with the double desire of profiting by the disorder in which the folly of irreligion has enchained a large part of the population, and preventing Protestantism from leading them to the faith of the Gospel. As calumnies and lies always find simpletons to be caught, when there are fanatics to propagate them, the object of this very general conspiracy is attained, and daily becomes more formidable, if not fatal.

"Indifference is another obstacle to gaining the ear of the French people; but still not a few reject the perpetual clerical outrages upon reason, the conscience, and the heart. Not a few will not side with the irreligion and demoralisation so prevalent."

Happily, in scouring the country, people are met with who have soul-wants, and sigh for relief to conscience and repose of heart, and these turn to the heralds of a true faith and an unbought salvation. Notwithstanding all the clerical manœuvres, multitudes of villages are turning to the Gospel, and the one great need is for zealous Christians to go over the country, and by means of tracts, Gospels, and New Testaments, with conversation, to shed light upon the path of the people. A Christian lady did this in Poitou, and in one village there was so ready a reception of the truth that it was thought desirable that an evangelist should settle down in a central village and work around where there is such an outcry for Gospel teaching. The friends at Rue de Lille, in Paris, contribute about one-fourth of his support, but the remaining three-fourths, or, say, £56, is needed to retain him with his family—wife and three children—in this vicinity. It is earnestly hoped that some friends across the Channel may help to make up this sum. Funds may be sent to Mr. Sainton, 48, Rue de Lille, Paris.

There are, happily, signs of movement all round. There was an interesting gathering in August on a mountain of the Cevennes, to commemorate the promulgation of the Edict of Nantes. It was for prayer, fellowship, and encouragement to follow the faith of the martyrs, and to remember the struggles of the Camisards—looking down from the panorama of the Cevennes on the scenes of their struggles.

Other open-air meetings were held in various provinces. The Mission Intérieure is actively at work here. The McAll Mission is moving for a second missionary boat. Mr. Cremer, of the Société Evangélique, is asking for means for a large tent. A congregation has lately occupied a deserted Roman Catholic church. Let us pray for the Holy Spirit to work and bless.

Marseilles. GEO. PEARSE.

Mission Work in Madras.—An interesting account of success is to hand from the St. Thomas Mount Mission Station of the Wesleyan Missionary Society, in the Madras District, India. A combined chapel opening and baptismal service was held at Varadarajapuram on September 13. The total number baptised was fourteen, of whom eleven were direct from heathenism and two from Roman Catholicism. In one case a new convert has had to face terrible persecution. Through it all he has stood firm. The prevalence of cholera has militated against the attendance at services in some cases, but in spite of all the work of God prospers. The labourers in this far-off field need the prayers of Christians at home.

Priests and the Scriptures.

THE latest report of the Belgian Missionary Church, issued from the office at 129, Chaussée d'Ixelles, speaks of progress in various directions. A special interest attaches to the colportage work, on which the report says:—

"We have eight Scripture readers, and five colporteurs. Of these, four are in the province of Liège, one in the province of Namur, four in the province of Hainault, three in Brabant, and two in the Flemish part of the country. The National Bible Society of Scotland continues to help us for this branch of our work. In every commune where the colporteur goes from door to door offering the Scriptures, he has to take into account the influence of the Roman Catholic priest.

"Our Flemish colporteur writes that the priest is not content to preach against his books and to forbid anyone buying them; he goes round to his parishioners and takes away any New Testaments they may have bought. In some villages the inhabitants will not allow the colporteur to enter their houses, nor listen to him, and they insult him. Elsewhere, if books are bought, his address is taken, in order to send them back if the priest says they are bad books.

"In the Walloon provinces it is much the same. In a village near Liège, where the curé had preached against the 'bad books' of the Protestants, several New Testaments had been found in an out-of-the-way corner, where they had been thrown to get rid of them. 'I acknowledge that what you say is true, and I do not believe that masses can save us,' said a woman in the neighbourhood of Waterloo; 'yet I cannot buy this book. I would not even accept it for nothing, so forcibly has our curé impressed upon us that it is a dangerous book.' This did not, however, prevent the colporteur selling eleven Testaments in the village.

"Often, indeed, the more violent the priests are in speaking against the Bible, the more the people want to buy it. People prefer to be told about the love of God than about the mass. They do not, however, always dare to be seen buying. A blacksmith said: I have your book, and have read it several times. It is really a beautiful book, though the priests do not like us to read it. I have a friend who also has the New Testament. He cannot read, but his children read it to him. When the curé said at mass that we must burn our books, he came to tell me of it, saying, 'I shall not burn mine; it is too good a book to be burnt.'

"In the neighbourhood of Huy, the colporteur knocked at a door. 'I want nothing,' exclaimed a woman. 'It is the Gospel that I am selling.' On hearing this she ran to me, looked at the book and said joyfully, 'It is the same book that the curé took from my father; how happy I am to get it!' And she bought a Testament. One of the greatest encouragements to the colporteur is to find that the books he sells are read. In a village in the province of Namur, where the colporteur had sold some copies, he was pleased to hear, some months later, that a few persons meet once or twice a month at a workman's cottage to read the Bible."

Englishmen in India.

FOR nearly thirty years the work of the Anglo-Indian Evangelisation Society has gone on; but the need is great and increasing, and the work done painfully inadequate through scarcity of workers and lack of funds. "The society should have fifty agents," said the veteran Dr. Garden Fraser, himself a voluntary helper of the work. This year, on the resignation of Rev. D. C. Boyd, as secretary, a new arrangement has been decided upon. Rev. P. R. Mackay, of Prestonpans, was asked to go to India as secretary, to inquire carefully into the need of the Anglo-Indian population and the wide field requiring to be occupied, also to impress the claims of the work upon European residents in the large cities of India.

Mr. Mackay is accompanied by Mr. Andrew Stewart, of Wardie, Edinburgh, a young gentleman who has been much used of God in evangelistic work, and who goes out as a voluntary worker. Farewell meetings have been held in different parts of Scotland, and have awakened much interest. Mr. Mackay and Mr. Stewart sailed in ss. Rome on November 17. All who would like to know more of the work, or to help, will get information from Mr. W. Stewart Thompson, Organising Secretary, Ivybank, Wardie-road, Edinburgh.

Shankill Mission, Belfast.

ON more than one occasion we have noticed the remarkable work founded by Rev. Henry Montgomery in the Shankill district of Belfast. As minister of the Albert-street Presbyterian Church, Mr. Montgomery has had many demands upon his time and energy, but these have not fully absorbed his attention, nor satisfied his heart's desire in the service of Christ.

Having surveyed the slum-land of Shankill, and realised its sad need, Mr. Montgomery organised a series of mission operations, which have been steadily growing since 1896, to the great benefit and blessing of the population. During the summer months a tent has been used for evangelistic meetings, and when winter storms caused the frail tabernacle to collapse a wooden building was reared. Now a handsome structure, in every way suited for the varied ministries of the mission, has been provided, at an outlay of £11,500, some portion of which has yet to be raisd.

These new buildings were formally opened on Friday last by the Lady Mayoress of Belfast, Mrs. Henderson. Those who were privileged to be present could not but rejoice in such a centre of testimony and work in a district made wretched by its with countless dingy habitations, and a ruinously large number of gaudy gin-palaces. At length the work has a worthy home; here the Gospel will be preached and practised, and from here will go forth the visitors who for some time past have been doing such a grand work in the homes of the sick and poor. Here, also, the loafers, loungers, gaol-birds, and others who have already come to know of the Mission will be further brought under its influence, and by God's blessing will be led into the paths of peace and wisdom, sobriety and true happiness.

In the course of the inaugural proceedings, the Lord Mayor said he regarded the enterprise as a new departure for the Presbyterian Church; in fact, as one of the greatest efforts ever made in connection with that church in the interest of the "lapsed" masses.

MR. MONTGOMERY FOLLOWED

with an address in which he explained his motives and purposes. He said he had been led from his study on Saturday nights into the streets that he might see the people and find out how things really did exist among them. These rambles in crowded thoroughfares and back-streets and lanes, where the humbler classes lived, were a revelation to him. He found squalor and wretchedness and misery where none need exist. The chief source of the social misery he found was attributable to the drinking habits of some member of the family. Where drink had a footing, generally speaking, happiness was at an end. These investigations led one also to see that while drink was Satan's predominant partner, there were other evils working havoc amongst the people, and especially amongst the young. He also had an opportunity of seeing the congested condition of the leading thoroughfares of the city during church hours, and this also made a deep impression. The natural outcome of wrong in life is for a person to be led away from influences likely to call the wrong to remembrance. Hence attendance upon the house of prayer soon becomes a thing of the past. There are many in Belfast, who, so far as attendance upon a place of worship is concerned, are practically heathen. There may be blame on both sides. The church may be too stiff and cold; those outside are often hardened and indifferent. The result, however, is that a sadly large proportion of the working and humbler people, without speaking of those in the upper classes, never darken the door of God's house.

To leave them alone without holding out a helping hand seemed not only cruel but criminal. The vision was not that of a sheep in the fold, but of sheep away upon the bleak and barren mountain, exposed to the pitiless storm. Called, as we believe, by a Divine voice, a few of us began at a street corner our work amongst these wanderers.

THE LORD ENCOURAGED US.

Numbers were blessed, and led to begin a new life, through Divine grace. Thus the little seed grew, and, through God's blessing alone are we to-day in this Shankill Mission-home. It cannot be too deeply impressed on the community that social evils allowed to grow unchecked may prove a very serious injury to the commonwealth. With our nineteenth century civilisation there has developed a condition of life amongst the indolent and lawless which it requires all the power and experience of the Government to curb. Rogues never were more plentiful; thieves never were so clever as they are to-day; and even children not well into their teens have become audacious burglars. It is true the law is strong and well administered, but there are developments in our modern life that do not lead us to plume ourselves when we think of them.

No country can do well without the Ten Commandments. Any day you may read the wreck of the whole decalogue in the faces of many men in Belfast. A different class found in every manufacturing city is that absorbed in pleasure and pastimes of various kinds, to whom the Day of Rest suggests no visit to the place of prayer. They are young, good wage-earners, willing to pay for themselves in the home, but bent on self-indulgence and pleasure. The lapsed constitute not only a large, but a very varied assortment of humanity, and to cater for them for their good is not an easy task. It has been found in other large cities that held in a building not particularly associated with religion has been used to attract the very class who are the object of our quest. In view of this ascertained fact, and encouraged by the good wishes of many friends, we resolved, in God's name, to see what could be done for the Shankill-road district. The result you are met here to inaugurate to-day.

Several friends of the work followed with hearty addresses, including Rev. W. Gorman, Messrs. J. Taylor, J. Colville, M.P., R. C. Morgan (London), W. Weir, and the Right Hon. Thomas Sinclair. At a second meeting, in the evening, Rev. Dr. Williamson made a speech full of warm sympathy. The other speakers included Messrs. Robert Anderson, J. Thompson, and D. A. Black, also Rev. W. Park, all of whom combined local knowledge with general interest in the undertaking.

It is impossible to go into full details regarding this many-sided work. There is, of course, a medical mission. There is also a social and recreative department, which will be ultimately equipped so as to accommodate about a score of students, whom the work of the mission will provide with practical experience while preparing for service in the foreign field.

Brentwood Convention.

A REFRESHING time was the experience of those who attended the convention in the Town Hall, Brentwood, November 15-17. The meetings were better attended than last year, greatly to the encouragement of the convener, Rev. Samuel Wilkinson, and the various speakers.

The subject for the first day was "Fulfilled Prophecy, a Proof of the Inspiration of the Word of God." Rev. G. Soltau took the Bible reading in the afternoon. In the evening Colonel Morton was in the chair, and Pastor Fuller Gooch spoke of the primary meaning of prophecy for the telling and foretelling something direct from God. Rev. John Wilkinson followed with a soul-stirring address, calling attention to 2 Peter i. 19-21—"Holy men of God spake...moved by the Holy Ghost." Many instances of fulfilled prophecy were mentioned in such a manner as to encourage prophetic study.

On the second day the Bible reading was again taken by Mr. Soltau, who took for his subject "Fulfilled Prophecy concerning the Second Coming of our Lord." There was a large gathering at the evening meeting, when Rev. A. H. Treddennick occupied the chair, and addresses were delivered by Dr. McKilliam and Rev. J. Wilkinson.

On Thursday, the last day of the Convention, Dr. Bullinger gave helpful addresses in the afternoon, dealing with the practical bearing of prophetic teaching on daily life. In the evening, with Mr. Soltau in the chair, the speakers were Mr. Campbell and Pastor Sprunt. As the gathering drew to a close, hearers were urged to consecrate their lives to the service of Christ. Some stood up in token of their decision to live to the glory of God.

Factory Girls.

DEAR SIR,—The Factory Helpers' Union seeks to organise Christian work amongst the 200,000 factory and laundry girls of London, as well as in other centres of industry. The needs of this important class are beginning to be understood, and there are many clubs in existence supported by friends who are personally interested in them.

There is just now a great danger lest the central society should be overlooked, and its usefulness greatly crippled for lack of help. The central fund is responsible for the support of seven clubs, a restaurant, and a boarding house, and makes grants to several others; it has also eighty-one affiliated missions, it organises fresh work, arranges for factory visiting, establishes technical, educational, and Bible-classes, and seeks to co-operate with all who have the temporal and spiritual needs of these girls at heart.

To carry out these operations successfully £3000 a year is needed. Unless generous support is forthcoming, not only must the "open doors" be disregarded, but much valuable existing work must be discontinued.

Medical Practice.—Can anyone recommend an experienced Christian doctor to a good-class residential town of not less than 8000 inhabitants, where there would be a good opening for medical practice? Advertiser has money to start in good style, and would want a first-rate house, with garden. A bonus will be paid for a bonâ-fide opening, if accepted. Address, with fullest particulars, to "Evangelical Churchman," care of Haddon's, Bouverie House, Salisbury-square, E.C.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, December 4.

Genesis xlii.

THERE is much to arrest our very careful attention here. First. The record itself has a great fascination. From our childish days we have come back to it with ever new interest. And we can almost hear again voices reciting it, which have long been hushed in death.

Secondly. It is interesting to see the method which Joseph adopted of waking up these dormant consciences. His rough speech, his repeated assertion that they had come to spy out the nakedness of the land, his binding and putting them in prison, were all intended to reproduce that scene at the pit's mouth, which was rapidly receding into the dim distance of the past. Joseph's stratagem had its desired effect. "We are verily guilty concerning our brother."

Thirdly. It is interesting as throwing a light on events which are transpiring around. Jesus, whom the Jewish people rejected for his dreams of power, is now on the throne. He knows them, though they know not Him. And it is more than probable that the rough treatment which they are experiencing in the present day, is intended to awaken their consciences and compel them to say, "We are verily guilty concerning our Brother, Jesus; behold, his blood is required." And at the same time their Brother provides them with money. As a people the Jews are notoriously wealthy.

If your sins have not been confessed and put away by the blood of Jesus, they are always liable to a similar resurrection, and the terrible looking-for of judgment.

MONDAY, December 5.

Genesis xliii.

We shall one day see this chapter re-enacted. This is a miniature of scenes in which we shall probably have a share, when his brethren come to Him whom they pierced, and mourn because of Him. Has God cast off the people whom He foreknew, and of whom is Christ as concerning the flesh? Nay, verily; but their eyes are darkened that they cannot see, and they have stumbled, that through their fall salvation should come unto the Gentiles, for to provoke them to jealousy (Rom. xi.).

Jesus still tenderly loves his brethren according to the flesh. His heart yearns over them. It is only at the cost of great self-restraint that He refrains Himself at this very hour from breaking through the reserve which He has imposed on Himself for their sakes, that they may be led to true contrition and repentance.

What an inimitable delineation is afforded us, also, of the way in which God is dealing with men. He makes them sit at his table. How richly he has provided for our wants from the days of childhood! Our God, the God of our fathers, has given us money in our sacks. Our feet are washed, our names and ages and dispositions are known and regarded, our souls are filled with food and gladness. But all the while the hand that blesses us is hidden. The veil is kept drawn, and the tender love refrains itself. Amid it all the mercy of God is gently and tenderly leading us to repentance.

How ingeniously God brings us to Himself! How many methods He employs! Now driven by hunger, then bathed in tears of bereavement, and compelled to return for Simeon. It is a perfect network of grace, that is woven to catch us and compel us to return to Him.

TUESDAY, December 6.

Genesis xliv.

Before Joseph could reveal himself, he must be sure that there had been a very genuine change in his brethren's dispositions. To announce himself as Joseph before he was sure of their repentance would have been prejudicial to their true welfare. They would have stared at him with open-mouthed bewilderment, but could never have entered into fellowship with him as their brother and friend. There would ever have been an unbridged sense of alienation, fear, and estrangement. There was only one way of preparing for a blessed future of reconciled fellowship, and that lay through confession on their part and forgiveness on his.

If the Jewish race are to become, as we believe, the chosen missionaries of the Gospel during the next dispensation, and if they are to share in all the blessings of the reign of Jesus, it is clear that the cup must be found in Benjamin's sack, and Judah must plead with Joseph for mercy.

Do you not see why your own life has been so troubled lately? Your Benjamin has been stricken. You have been found wanting at the very point where you were most sensitive, and most sure that there could be nothing wrong. You prided yourself on your uprightness, your purity, your chivalry for truth; but these have been called in question. The cup has been found in Benjamin's sack, that you may be compelled to cast yourself on the undeserved, unmerited grace and mercy of Christ. We have no standing with God on the ground of merit, but every claim on that of grace.

WEDNESDAY, December 7.

Genesis xlv.

Some day, if we are true to Him, we shall stand on the vantage ground of God's fulfilled purpose and review our lives. We shall see the meaning of God's dealings with us, and be able to forgive, yea, and love, those who once seemed the greatest foes of our happiness. Bidding them come near, we shall say, Be not grieved, nor angry with yourselves; for God was in all, making all to work together for good. It was not you that sent us hither but God; and He hath done all things well. We cannot see that now; but we shall see it. And there will be a rounding-off of our life-story in a way worthy of God. All his stories end well, to those who trust Him to work out his perfect plan. Jacob again presses Joseph to his heart, and the valley of death-shadow is as if it had not been, save that the embrace is tenderer.

The great story of Redemption shall end well, also. When Jesus makes Himself known to his brethren, saying, I am Jesus, your Brother, whom ye rejected and hanged on a tree, and when He bids them share his kingdom and glory, they will at first be troubled at the announcement. But He will allay their fears, saying, Be not grieved nor angry with yourselves, for I was delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God. Your fall was the riches of the world, and your loss the riches of the Gentiles. I have been able to save life, to be a Father to the nations, and a Saviour of an innumerable company from among the heathen. Then the Jewish remnant shall be glad to live on his bounty. Both old and young, they shall bow before Him as their Lord, and own Him as their Saviour; and then shall ensue the restitution of all things of which the holy prophets have spoken since the world began.

Genesis xlvi.

To go down to Egypt for help was ever the synonym of backsliding in the Old Testament days. Abraham went thither, and fell in cowardly untruthfulness. Israel went thither in after years, and incurred the prophet's woes. But it was otherwise when God gave the command to Jacob, "Fear not to go down into Egypt, for I will make of thee a great nation." Always wait for that, even when the waggons are ready to hand, and everything suggests to our judgment the advisability of taking a certain course. There will come a clear impression of God's will, as He speaks in the visions of the night, calls us by our name, describes his claim on our audience and obedience, and bids us take the open pathway.

And what an assurance accompanied the command—"I will go down with thee." When God sends us on some dangerous and difficult errand, He always accompanies us. No child of his ever goes into the heart of temptation and trial, at his bidding, unaccompanied by the strong escort of God's almighty presence. "I am God, the God of thy father, I will go down with thee into Egypt."

And what a hope was woven with these twain! "I will also surely bring thee up again." Egypt was not to be their abiding place. At best it was only a temporary halting-place in the long journey between Abraham's birthplace and their destination in their own country. They must never forget that they were strangers and sojourners as were all their fathers. God's way is as a spiral staircase. We come back to the former spot, but on a higher level.

FRIDAY, December 9.

Genesis xlvii.

After a stormy career Israel came to rest under the protection of Joseph. The days of his life had been as a pilgrimage, and as he reviewed them seemed few and short; but they were nearly over, and at eventide there was peace. We are reminded of a serene sunset which follows a stormy day. Amid other interests in the old man's life was the ever-increasing splendour of Joseph's administration, in virtue of which all the land of Egypt was brought again under the suzerainty of Pharaoh. The Egyptians said, Thou hast saved our lives, let us find grace in thy sight, and we will be Pharaoh's servants.

Here again we have an anticipation of what shall be realised in our world when the Jews shall have recognised Christ as their Brother, and shall live in peace and prosperity, whilst the great mass of men shall also look to Him as Saviour, and avow themselves eager to be his servants.

These two elements should underlie every life. There should be the perpetual recognition of its pilgrim character. Here we have no continuing city; we are pilgrims and strangers as were all our fathers. And there should be also that entire devotion to our Saviour, which arises from the infinite obligations under which He has placed us. He has redeemed us to God by his blood, has taken us to be his own beloved friends, has given us a name and place among his chosen; surely He has hourly claims on us to do Him service with the liturgy of holy and consecrated lives. He also will give us the seed with which to sow his fields.

SATURDAY, December 10.

Genesis xlviii.

What points are they which arise from the mists of the past, as we review it in the near presence of eternity? Much which we had deemed essential drops from view; but among the remainder such things as these assert themselves:—The appearances of El Shaddai, and his promises, which were ordered in all things and sure. The death of those whom we had loved as ourselves, with the young, fresh love of early life. "Rachel died by me, and I buried her." The thought of the fathers, and of their walk with God. The memory of the angel who had redeemed from all evil. The land where the happy days of childhood were spent, and to which the aged heart turns again. These are the thoughts which engage the dying.

Let us, whilst we live, make much of these same considerations. God, love, home, the God who has fed all the life long unto this day, and the Angel who redeemed us from destruction, and crowned us with loving kindness and tender mercy.

You, too, may be comforted. God will feed you all your life long. Notwithstanding all the changes and chances of your life He has fed you. No good thing has failed. Your bread has been given, and water has been sure. As there have been new mouths to feed, there has been sufficient to give to them. The handful of meal has not wasted, nor the cruse of oil failed. And He will not fail you. The manna will fall till you can eat the old corn of the land of Canaan. The river will flow beside you through the sands. Do not always fill your minds with gloomy forebodings of the future. I have noticed that wealthy men take care of their old hunters and hounds after they are past work; and I cannot think God will treat us worse if we have served Him faithfully. Nay, the Angel will redeem us from all evil.

The Seven Sayings of the Cross.*

By Rev. F. B. MEYER.

John xix. 16.

DRIVEN from one position after another by the Jewish notables and rabble, Pilate at last, much against his will, gave directions for tha Lord's crucifixion. The scarlet cloak flung over his shoulders was replaced by his own simple clothes, though the crown of thorns was not improbably left upon his head.

Two others were led out to suffer with Him—highwaymen lately captured in some redhanded deed. Barabbas, their chief, for whom the central cross had been designed, had escaped it by a miracle; but they were to suffer the just reward of their deeds. A detachment of soldiers was told off under a centurion to see to the execution of the sentence, and the heavy crosses were placed upon the shoulders of the sufferers, that they might bear them to the place of execution.

It would be about 10 a.m. when the sad procession started on its way. Two incidents took place as it passed through the crowded streets, which surely had never witnessed such a spectacle; no, not even in the days when David traversed them in flight from Absalom.

The beams laid on our Lord proved too heavy on the steeper ascents for his exhausted strength, and his slow advance so delayed the procession that the guard became impatient. Here comes a foreigner! A Jew of Cyrene! Harmless and inoffensive, he would gladly make way for the crowd. Why should not he bear this burden under which Jesus of Nazareth is falling to the ground? The insolent soldiers, with oath and jest, constrain him, and he dares not resist. Probably Simon had no previous knowledge of Him for whom he bore this load, and loathed the service he was compelled to render; but that compulsory companionship with Jesus carried him to Calvary. He beheld the wondrous tragedy, heard the words which we are to recite; from that day became, with his family, a humble follower of Jesus. We at least infer this from Mark's emphatic mention of the fact that he was father of Alexander and Rufus; whilst the Apostle Paul, in the Epistle to the Romans, tenderly refers to Rufus and his mother. This is not the only instance in the history of Christianity when the has led a man to Christ. Many a time has compulsory cross-carrying led men to the Crucified.

Of the vast multitude who followed Jesus, a large contingent consisted of women. From the men, in that moving crowd, He does not appear to have received one word of sympathy. Timidity, or questioning with their own hearts, or inveterate hatred, closed their lips. But the women expressed their sorrow with all the outcry of Oriental grief, rending the air with piercing cries. "Weep not for Me," the Saviour said, ever more thoughtful for others than Himself; "but for yourselves and your children." And He who had been mocked because of his claim to be a King, and who would shortly from the cross begin to minister as a Priest, then as Prophet foretold the approaching fate of that fair city, asking significantly, since the Romans dealt thus with Himself an innocent sufferer, what would they not do when exasperated by the pertinacious resistance of the Jewish people in the protracted siege.

Just outside the Damascus Gate, by the side of the main road, was a little conical eminence which, from its likeness to the shape of a skull, was called in the Aramaic Golgotha, in the Greek Cranion, in the Latin Calvary. As we speak of the brow of a hill, they called the bald eminence a skull. There the procession stayed, and what transpired may be best followed as we touch on the seven sentences our Lord uttered on the cross, as we collate them and set them in order from the four Gospels.

I. "Father, forgive them; they know not what they do." Arrived at the place of execution, Jesus would be stript once more, a linen cloth at most being left about his loins. He would then be laid upon the cross, as it rested on the ground, his arms stretched along the cross-beams, his body resting on a projecting piece of rough wood, misnamed a seat. Huge nails would then be driven through the tender palm of each hand, and the shrinking centre of each foot. The cross would then be lifted up and planted in a hole previously dug to receive it, with a rude shock causing indescribable anguish. "So they crucified Him, and two others with Him, on either side one, and Jesus in the midst."

Pilate had written a title to be nailed to the head-piece of the cross according to the usual custom, with the name and designation of the Crucified, "This is Jesus, the King of the Jews." It was written in Greek, the language of science; Latin, the language of government; and Hebrew, the language of religion. It is this fact that accounts for the differences in the Gospels. One Evangelist translates from one language, another from another. The inscription was meant to insult the Jews. It was equivalent to saying, This nation cannot produce a better monarch than this; and this is the fate which will be meted out to all such pretenders. The authorities were indignant, and did their utmost to induce Pilate to alter it. But in vain. He would be master this time, and dismissed them with the curt reply, "What I have written I have written."

EACH MAN IS WRITING HIS CONCEPTION of the nature and claims of Christ by the way in which he treats Him, either acknowledging his Divine glory as he enthrones Him, or repudiating his claims as he tramples Him under foot, and turns away to his sin.

The criminals' clothes fell as a perquisite to the soldiers specially charged with the execution of the sentence. With our Lord's outer clothes they had no difficulty; they were too poor to be worth keeping entire, so they tore them up into equal pieces. But the inner tunic was of unusual texture; perhaps it had been woven for Him by his mother's hands, or by one of the women who so carefully ministered to Him. In any case it was too good to tear. The dice were ready in the pocket, one of the helmets would serve as dice-box; and so "they parted his raiment among them, and for his vesture they cast lots." These things therefore the soldiers did.

It was probably during this bye-play that our Lord uttered the first cry of the cross, and entered on that work of intercession, which He ever lives to perpetuate and crown. He thinks, not of Himself, but of others; is occupied, not with his own pains, but with their sins. Not a threat, nor a menace; but the purest, tenderest accents of pleading intercession.

When was that prayer answered? Seven weeks after this, on the day of Pentecost, three thousand of these people, whom Peter described as the murderers of Christ, repented and believed, and in the days that followed thousands more, and a great company of the priests. That was the answer to this intercession. When we see our brethren sinning a sin not unto death, without realising its full significance and enormity, if we ask God, as Jesus did, He will give us life for those that sin not unto death. There is a sin unto death, and concerning that we are not encouraged to pray. "I obtained mercy," said the great apostle, "because I did it ignorantly through unbelief."

II. "Woman, behold thy Son; Son, behold thy mother."—The second saying was about his mother. His cross was the centre of bitter mockery. The chief priests, and scribes, and elders challenged Him to descend from the cross, pledging themselves to believe if He did. The crowd caught their spirit with contemptible servility, and repeated their words, "Son of God, come down from the cross, that we may believe." A passer-by called out derisively, "Where is now the boast that He could raise the Temple in three days? Let Him do it if He can." The soldiers even caught up the abuse, and vented their coarse jokes on one whose innocence and gentleness appeared to exasperate them. And the malefactors who were hanged cast the same in his teeth.

Were there no sympathisers in all that crowd to exchange glances of love and faith? Yes, there was one little group. When Peter left the Hall of Caiaphas John probably lingered there still, followed to the bar of Pilate, waited long enough to know how the matter would fall, and then hastened to the humble lodging where Mary and a few other women, in awful suspense, were awaiting tidings. As soon as the mother knew all, she resolved to see her beloved Son once again. "It is no place for women," John would say. But she answered, "I must see Him again." Then said John, "If you will go, I will take you." "I will go too," said Mary, her sister, the wife of Cleophas; "And I," said Mary of Magdala.

for those loving hearts, when they saw the crosses in the distance, and knew that on one of them was hanging the dearest to them of all on earth! But the love that makes the timid deer turn to fight valiantly for its young made them oblivious to everything except to get near Him. But how little had the young mother realised that Simeon meant this, when he told her that a sword would one day pierce her soul!

Jesus knew how much she was suffering, and how lonely she would be when He was gone. He had neither silver nor gold to leave, but would at least provide a home and tender care as long as she required them. Elevated but very little above the ground, He could easily speak to the little group. "Woman," He said, not calling her "mother," lest identification with Himself might expose her to insult, "behold thy Son." Then, looking tenderly to John, He consigned her to his care.

Did He give a further look, which John interpreted to mean that he should lead her away? It may have been so, for from that hour he took her to his home; and so she passes from the page of Scripture, except for the one glimpse we have of her, in the upper room, awaiting the baptism of the Holy Spirit.

III. "To-day thou shalt be with Me in Paradise."—We cannot explore all the causes which brought about so great a change in this man, and produced so lofty an ideal of his fellow-sufferer. We have to deal rather with the response of Jesus. Lost by the first Adam, Paradise was being regained by the last; and it is not far away. A dying man may see the sun leave the zenith, but ere it set in the western wave he may be in the land of Paradise. Absent from the body, present with the Lord. There is no state of unconsciousness between the two. We close our eyes on the dimming spectacles of this world at one moment, to behold the King in his beauty the next.

Men may strip Jesus of everything, but they cannot touch his power to save. In the moment of his greatest weakness He was able to rescue a man from the very brink of perdition, and take him as a trophy of his power to Heaven. What will He not be able to do now that the mortal weakness is passed, and that He is exalted to be a Prince and a Saviour!

Christ Church, Westminster-road, S.E.—A prayer-meeting will be held in the Lower Exeter Hall, on Monday, Dec. 5, at 5 p.m., for the purpose of recommending to God in prayer, Rev. F. B. Meyer, starting for a two months' mission tour in India (Mrs. Meyer accompanying). All friends are invited to be present.

Of the Household of Faith.

By T. J. BARNARDO, F.R.C.S.Ed.

IT was a murky evening at the close of September. I had just left a Board Meeting of a Society in which I was interested, and was thinking over some points of the business transacted. As I left Moorgate-street Station, I was accosted by a diminutive little creature who was selling matches. Absorbed in my own thoughts I walked steadily on, but he followed by my side challenging my attention by a renewed offer of his wares, and repeating meanwhile, "Two a ha'penny! Two boxes a ha'penny! Buy 'em, sir!" Then after a pause, seeing I did not respond, he continued, "Could give yer three, but there ain't much profit then!"

That curious chant at length stopped me, and I took in the scene and the speaker at once. I saw a common sight, alas, in London: a little street vendor, shoeless and stockingless, his bare feet well muddied, his trousers ragged, and his jacket equally so. Trousers and jacket were all he had to cover him from the drizzling rain. A queer little old patched cap was perched on the side of his head in a knowing fashion. He might have been taken for about eight years of age, but I guessed him to be nine, as he was of stunted growth. We began to talk.

"Sold much to-day?" I enquired. He shook his head. "Six boxes ain't much; only tree a'pence for the lot." "Who sent you out?" "Mother." "And why does mother send out a little chap like you?" "She can't help it; she's werry bad." "Where is she?" "Home." "Anybody else there?" "Sissy." "How old is she?" "Oh, she don't count! She's littler than me—lots littler!" "Do you make much money?" "Sometimes, when I'm lucky." "Are you very lucky often?" "Not 'xactly often: I wor in real luck yesterday." "How's that?" "Such a nice gemman kem along, and says he, 'You are a pore little chap'; and he gev' me a bob. Oh, he wor a nice gemman, he were."

Such emphasis was laid upon the good qualities of this particular gentleman that I felt assured he was being held up to me for imitation. "Why don't you go home with your three-ha'pence?" "'Taint no use." "How's that?" "Must have sixpence; 'taint no use going home with littler nor that." "Do you always try to get sixpence at least?" The little head was quickly nodded.

"Well, now," I said, "tell me where your mother lives." "13, Plough-court, Banner-street, St. Luke's."

The place was not more than ten minutes' walk from where we stood. "Come on with me," I said, "and I will visit your mother. I am a doctor, you know, and I may do her some good." Without more ado the little chap trotted off by my side, showing me the way, darting in and out among the people whom we constantly met crowding the thoroughfare, but managing meanwhile to keep up a never-failing stream of talk, mostly about the "nice gemman."

On our reaching Banner-street, a few minutes brought us to the corner of a dingy, pestilential-looking court, lined on each side by tumble-down two-storey houses—houses that looked as if they had been originally jerry-built, and had been out of repair for many years back. They reeked of noisomeness. No. 13 presented a set of creaky and very filthy stairs, and without delay we began to climb them, up and up, until we reached a back room on the top floor. I allowed the boy to run in and tell his mother, while I waited outside. Only a minute elapsed, and then the door was thrown open, and I entered.

The room was literally quite devoid of furniture. There was no chair to sit down on; no table to fill up the space. Yet all seemed wondrously clean and out of keeping with the dingy court outside and the filthy worm-eaten staircase up which we had come. But the human occupants of this bare and squalid garret claimed attention. Near the window on the floor, on a heap of rags, which formed her only bed, lay a poor, decent-looking woman, fully dressed, but having her leg extended without a stocking.

The woman, I found, was a widow of about forty-five years of age. She had wounded her leg, and, instead of healing, it had apparently festered. A large unwholesome ulcer was exposed to view as I examined it. She had been twice as an out-patient to the nearest hospital, but could walk no longer. Nor could she, of course, any longer pursue her calling—that of a charwoman; so there she lay, helpless to move hand or foot on her own behalf. By her side stood a little girl of about six years of age—"our Bess," she called her—a bright-eyed, winsome little lassie, who soon made friends with me.

But Billy was the bread-winner! It was he who kept the wolf from the door. It was he who had boldly gone into trade and endeavoured to supply mother, sister and himself with bread. I cannot say how affected I was as I listened to the simple story. But why did she not go into a hospital? They would take her in. The question was hardly asked when I felt rebuked. "What would become of the children?" said the poor woman. "Billy might do for a bit by himself—he was a brave lad! But our Bess——" And then the poor soul fairly broke down.

"Why not," said I, "try to get the children into some Home or Refuge, where they would be looked after, while you are taken to the hospital and get properly treated?" To my surprise she said: "I have been praying to the Lord all the time I have been here to take care of the children, and to keep our Bess from the streets." Here, in this wretched room, deprived of everything, depending absolutely upon a child of nine years of age for food and fuel—here lay in whose prayerful breast there still burned the flame of faith and hope!

Mrs. Rider was indeed, I found, a woman of faith and prayer. Dark as her horizon was, she habitually exercised a simple, almost childlike, trust in God. And at this moment an incident occurred which at once filled my own heart with gladness, and humbled me to the very dust, as I thought of how often I had doubted the unfailing providences and faithfulness of God.

"Sir," said the woman as we talked, putting her hand under the pillow, and pulling out a copy of a well-known Christian weekly journal, "Look here, sir; read that!" And under my very eyes she placed a short narrative of one of my own rescues, which had been reprinted without my knowledge in this journal. How the page had drifted to her I know not; but the last lines of the story contained that statement of mine which has been so oft-repeated and which all the readers of The Christian know so well: "Never during all these years have I refused a single Destitute Child who has made application at my doors."

"There, sir," said the poor creature, not knowing in the least to whom she spoke, "I have been hoping and praying that God would let Billy and our Bess get in there. Then I know they'd be safe, and they'd both be together, and I'd go in cheerful to the hospital."

I thought for a few moments before I answered. At length I said slowly: "I did not tell you who I am; but now I must let you know. My name is Barnardo, and I have a great many poor boys and girls, and that is why I asked your little lad to bring me here to-day. Now, if I can help you by keeping the children for a while, I will."

It is impossible to describe the emotions of wonder and amazement which passed over that poor suffering mother's face! The tears began to pour down her cheeks. "Billy!" she called, and the boy ran quickly to his mother's side. "Bess, dear," she added. And then, holding the two children in her trembling hands, she said: "This is the gentleman that has all the little boys and girls.

I TOLD YER GOD WOULD HEAR ME, and now He's just sent him here to take and keep you both until I am well again."

There and then the arrangement was made. I was to admit the children for a time while the mother entered the Hospital. Of course I saw to the immediate wants of the family, but not until I made Billy tell me once again the story of the "nice gemman." "Now, Billy, what shall I do to be like the nice gentleman? Shall I give you a shilling now, or shall I take you both into my Home and send your mother to the Hospital?" Billy hesitated, but there was no doubt in Bessie's mind. The words were hardly out when she sidled over to me and placed her little hand trustingly in mine. Billy said, more slowly, "If mother wor well, I think it would be nicer to have the shillin', but I'll go with you, sir, all right," and thus the bargain was concluded.

Ere long one of my good women helpers was in the room supplying the wants of the patient, bringing food and fuel and a few needed garments for the children, while I meanwhile obtained the needful order which gave admission to the Hospital to this poor member of the household of faith.

Billy and Bess are not solitary in their history. I have in the Homes to-day not a few who, although rescued from the very deepest poverty, are the offspring of praying people. Surely such as these have the strongest claim upon the sympathy and love of those who call themselves followers of Jesus Christ.

Particularly now at the entering in of another winter do these needs press upon myself and my co-workers, and I ask Christian sympathisers far and near to bear us up in their prayerful remembrances. There is a large field white unto harvest!

Martyrs' Messages.

SIXTEENTH CENTURY.

(From Letters Written while Awaiting Martyrdom.)

A TIMELY CAUTION.

BEWARE of popery and popish idolatry, the idol of the wicked mass and other idolatrous service. Make not your body, which is a member of Christ, a member of Anti-Christ.—John Careless.

A CALL TO PRAYER.

Let one take the banner, another the trumpet; I mean not to make corporal resistance, but pray. Ye shall have Elijah's defence and Elisha's company to fight for you, for the cause is the Lord's.—John Rough.

AMEN!

The Lord make us stout in his cause, and give us grace to confess the truth before this adulterous generation. The Lord grant we may work his heavenly will, that when the time shall come He may receive us unto Himself.—William Coker.

BEWARE OF THE MASS.

Beware of that great idolatry and blasphemous mass. Let not that be your God which mice and worms can devour. I take Christ's testament to witness that it is not one of his ordinances, but a mere invention of men, and a snare to catch innocent blood.—Nicholas Shetterden.

EXHORTATION TO FIDELITY.

God send you of his grace to live in his fear, and to die in the true Christian faith; from the which (in God's name) I exhort you that you never swerve, neither for hope of life, nor for fear of death. For if you will deny his truth to lengthen your life, God will deny you and yet shorten your days.—Lady Jane Grey.

A MIGHTY CONFLICT.

Whatsoever we do, we may not bring the spirit in bondage to the body, but contrariwise we must subdue the body and the will of the flesh to the spirit, that the spirit may freely accomplish the will of God in all things; for otherwise we shall never be partakers of his promise with the true children of Abraham. For, as St. Paul saith, "They which are the children of the flesh are not the children of God...to be carnally minded is death, but to be spiritually minded is life and peace."—John Hullyer.

THINGS PRESENT...THINGS TO COME.

Man is born to die, and dieth to live. In this life he dieth through sin; in the life to come he liveth in righteousness. Here is time; there is eternity. Here is hatred; there is love. Here is pain; there is pleasure. Here is misery; there is felicity. Here is corruption; there is immortality. Here we see vanity; there shall we behold the majesty of God, with triumphant and unspeakable joy in glory everlasting. Seek, therefore, the things that are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God.—Bartlet Green.

A WARNING AGAINST FEARFULNESS.

There is no dallying with God's matters; it is a fearful thing, as St. Paul saith, to fall into the hands of God. St. John numbereth among them that shall dwell in the fiery lake, such as be fearful in God's cause. Set before your eyes always the examples of such as have behaved themselves boldly—as Stephen, Peter, Paul, Daniel, the three children, the widow's sons, and in your days Anu Askew, Laurence Saunders, John Bradford, with many other faithful witnesses of Christ. Be not afraid of anything, saith St. Paul of the adversaries of Christ's doctrine; the which is to them the cause of perdition, but to you of everlasting salvation.—Robert Glover.

A Fruitful Mission

IN BIRMINGHAM CHURCHES.

BY REV. CANON SUTTON.

IT is impossible, within the space at my disposal, to do justice to the grand work done in Birmingham between November 5-15; nor, if one had space, to tell the story of this Mission adequately, because there was no opportunity for comparing notes as to what had been done. There was, indeed, a very helpful conference at the conclusion of the Mission, following a breakfast given by certain of the clergy. But several of the missioners had left by early trains, others were too weary to be present, and the object was not to sum up results but to consider how best to follow up the Mission.

No one could have been selected with a greater right to speak on such a topic than the Rev. W. H. M. H. Aitken. Incidentally one gathered from his address that there had been very valuable work done in St. George's parish, the rector of which (Rev. G. A. Sowter) had secured him as his missioner. But it is too soon to speak of the work in the parish, as it extends over another week.

Nowhere had better preparation been made than at the parish church (St. Martin's). The new rector, Rev. J. A. Robinson, had Revs. R. Ransford and Gurney Hoare. The Bible-readings, given each day by the last-named, were well attended, not a few of the clergy listening to Mr. Hoare's most helpful addresses. Many others would have liked to hear them, the writer included, had not other duties kept them away. Mr. Ransford's manly forceful style exactly suited the men gathered together during the dinner-hour as well as those who came to the evening services. Addresses to slaughterers, of whom a very large number ply their trade within the limits of that parish, were another notable feature. There is reason to believe that real definite blessing has been the result of this attempt to reach a much-neglected class. Probably in no other parish was there such a lavish distribution of mission literature, for the rector thoroughly believes in the power of the Press. The open-air pulpit was in daily use. Indeed, to use a familiar phrase, "no stone was left unturned" to make the mission a blessing to "all sorts and conditions of men."

The conditions of St. Philip's parish, closely as the two approach each other locally, are very different from those of St. Martin's. It was a wise move on the part of the Bishop of Coventry (who is rector of St. Philip's) to secure such an able advocate of the truth as Rev. S. A. Alexander, reader of the Temple Church. Between one and two each day leading merchants, lawyers, doctors, and business men, representing very specially the intellect and business talent of Birmingham, listened with profound attention to Mr. Alexander's masterly addresses, which contained earnest appeal to the heart and conscience as well as to the head. Naturally St. Philip's, which could hold nearly half the total population of the parish, was not crowded at the evening services conducted by Rev. Raymond Pelly, of Malvern, but good work was done.

Two well-known churches, Holy Trinity, Bordesley, and St. Thomas's, Birmingham, were happy in having well-known men, who have, both as parish clergymen and missioners, been much blessed in their labours—Rev. J. F. Sheldon at the former, Rev. S. A. Selwyn (of Boscombe) at the latter. The blessing in each case was as remarkable as the preparations had been complete. Long before he left Birmingham Rev. F. S. Webster had, in his own enthusiastic way, begun to prepare for this Mission, and Mr. Williamson at Holy Trinity, Bordesley, had been no less energetic, while the new rector of St. Thomas's, Mr. Whicher, speaks in the warmest terms of the work done by Mr. Selwyn.

In Aston the Mission was carried on simultaneously in seven centres. With the single exception of Mr. McAuliffe, a well-known lay missioner, none of the missioners were much known as such. In the parish church the Mission was conducted by the Rev. W. M. Barrow, vicar of St. Philemon's, Liverpool. His clear, able, thoughtful Bible-readings in the church each morning at eleven were well attended and appreciated. His Mission sermons and after-meeting addresses were most spirit stirring. There was an entire absence of sensationalism; but the impression produced was deep, and bids fair to be lasting. Mrs. Barrow's addresses to women were also greatly valued.

A further notable feature was the excellent attendance at 7 a.m. prayer-meetings, and the very large number of persons who came out distinctly on the Lord's side at missions conducted by men, mostly young, and almost absolutely inexperienced in mission work. Indeed, I have reason to believe that unknown men, of no very remarkable powers of speech, of whom no one had ever heard, before the Birmingham Mission, beyond the limits of their own parishes, were wonderfully used of God in bringing sinners to the Saviour, and helping to bring the Lord's people into clearer and fuller light. In one instance, through the illness of a missioner, a young clergyman in deacon's orders had to take the services himself. There had been much prayer beforehand, and though at first there was some natural disappointment at the absence of the missioner, well known and much liked in that parish, yet before the end of the Mission it was clearly seen that the blessing depends, not on man, but on the Holy Spirit.

A husband and wife of mature age, long negligent of religious duties, were induced to attend a cottage meeting. From that they went to the Mission services on Sunday, and on the Friday following both were rejoicing in the forgiveness of their sins through the Lord Jesus Christ.

YOUNG FELLOWS BETWEEN FOURTEEN AND SEVENTEEN years of age received much attention from the young missioner. At a meeting held for such lads he sat quietly in his chair urging on his hearers the duty of giving up sin and at once accepting the Saviour. Nearly all these rough fellows were quite broken down, and before the end of the Mission more than a dozen professed to have found peace in believing.

I have heard of cases where girls in regular attendance at a Bible-class admitted that they had been guilty of theft and felt that they could not hope for salvation. It was pointed out to them that they must confess not only to God but also to those whom they had wronged, and must

RESTORE WHAT THEY HAD TAKEN.

This they did, and "Oh, what a change was to be seen in their faces when they came to the Mission next night," said my informant.

As is, however, nearly always the case, it was the Lord's people who seemed to be most blessed in every parish. The careless and indifferent were, in many instances, reached, but Sunday-school teachers, district visitors, Church workers of all kinds bear willing witness to the fact that their spiritual life was deepened, and that they will henceforth go about their work in a far happier and more hopeful spirit than heretofore. There were

SOME SURPRISES.

Persons supposed to have long known the Lord confessed that their "light had been darkness," and humbly thanked God for the message which had truly brought them to Christ.

Many names of missioners and parishes must be passed over altogether, not because there is no blessing to record, but through lack of space and information, but such men as Revs. H. G. Thwaites (at St. Matthias's, where the parish, very poor and hard to reach, had been grandly prepared by the vicar, Mr. Filleul), G. P. Cushing at St. Matthew's, and A. G. Whaley at St. Catherine's, ought, were it possible, to have prolonged mention.

The two things which struck one most were: (1) The intense interest taken in quiet, unsensational Bible statements of truth. (2) The evident presence of God the Holy Ghost, as seen in the power which accompanied the faithful delivery of the message of salvation. There was no attempt at oratory, no outstanding eloquence, nothing, humanly speaking, to awaken special attention; yet if thronged churches (on week-days as well as Sundays), a breathless attention to the "old, old story," after-meetings from which hardly any went away till the speaker came to a conclusion, numbers seeking still further help in private, and then professing to have received definite blessing, constitute a successful mission, then must we, with deep gratitude to "the Giver of every good and perfect gift," declare that the Birmingham Mission of 1898 was an emphatic success. "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me, bless his holy name."

The Salvation Army.

WOMEN'S SOCIAL WORK.

AT the annual thanksgiving meeting held last week at the Holborn Restaurant, in connection with women's social work, the Hon. Dr. Cockburn, Agent-General for South Australia, presided.

Dr. Cockburn said that for years past he had taken the deepest interest in the work of the Salvation Army. Some little time ago he made a thorough examination of its work from many points of view, and came to the conclusion that it was noble, philanthropic, and Christian. It aimed at saving the body and the soul together, and was the first great organisation which had laid down the principle that if you wished to save the soul you must care for the body also. A sort of Christian optimism underlay its operations, which he had examined from the threefold standpoint of politician, philanthropist, and medical man.

So thoroughly had the Government of South Australia—which was not alone in this matter—recognised the value of the work that they had subsidized to a considerable extent the prison-gate and night-shelter work of the Salvation Army.

Mrs. Booth presented the yearly report of the women's social work, which, she explained, was only a small portion of the "Darkest England" scheme. They had been able to extend their operations and to improve previously existing agencies. They were satisfied with nothing less than the permanent restoration to well-doing and virtuous living of the women who passed through their hands. They had now in this country seventeen rescue homes, with two receiving homes, one home for inebriate women, a maternity house, a prison-gate home for women, nine industrial lodging homes, three shelters for the homeless, and three midnight posts.

During the year 1518 new cases had been passed through the rescue homes in this country, in addition to 452 re-admissions. The total number of rescue homes maintained by the Salvation Army was sixty-eight, and there were passed through them each year over 4000 friendless and lost women. Altogether there had passed through the homes over 18,000 women, representing every class of society. The gross cost of the women's social operations in this country last year, apart from the industrial section, was £19,508. The amount contributed by outside friends was £7483, while the persons helped had themselves by their labour or payments provided £12,024.

The women and girls who were received came not only from the poorer, but also from the professional classes, and there was not a county or a town of any size which was not indebted to the Salvation Army for the rescue of some of its daughters. Among the cases dealt with were those of Roman Catholics and every shade of Protestant opinion, and many had been returned to the care of the fold to which they had previously belonged.

Lord Monkswell and others afterwards addressed the meeting, and donations and subscriptions were announced amounting to about £1000.

A Liverpool Mission.

A DANCING-SALOON in Liverpool was, some months ago, converted into a Gospel mission-hall. It was jointly purchased by the Liverpool Medical and Town Missions. Lambeth Hall is rented by the Union Presbyterian Church for Gospel mission services, and is worked by Mr. James Gunn, Liverpool town missionary, and a band of earnest helpers. The change is very marked indeed, and Kirkdale, in which the hall is situated, feels the difference. The neighbourhood seems disinfected of an element which was not only hurtful to passers-by, but was poisoning the moral and spiritual life of many.

At the anniversary meeting of the work, last week, presided over by Rev. A. B. Barkway, many testimonies were given of blessing received. Men and women stood up and testified to the power of grace in saving and keeping them. It was a living evidence that the efforts of the Town Mission in the north end of the city are being owned of God. The Medical Mission have extended their good work to the district, and occupy the hall twice a week.

Enterprise and Extension.

THE MANCHESTER (WESLEYAN) MISSION.

HOW many thousand persons attended the tenth anniversary of this remarkable movement in Manchester last week it would be difficult to estimate, as no doubt a good proportion were present a second and a third time during the day. At noon the Central Hall held 2000, at three the vast Free Trade Hall accommodated its 5000, and at seven—or, rather, an hour earlier—admitted as many more, plus some hundreds by whom no seats could be obtained, but who filled every nook and cranny, so far as public safety would allow.

In the morning a singularly appropriate and forcible sermon was delivered by Rev. W. L. Watkinson from the words, "And ye may add thereto"; while Lady Chubb and Mrs. Chant shared the afternoon function; and in the evening characteristically strong addresses came from Dr. Alex. Maclaren and Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, as well as from other speakers, all of which were enthusiastically received by the vast audiences.

But, after all, the mere crowds on a particular day are of small moment when compared with the aggregate of those that are thronging the various centres of the Mission all the year round. The Free Trade Hall itself presents the same spectacle every Sunday night, the attraction being no more than a bright hearty Gospel service; and this is only one (although the largest) of the many points from which the same message is proclaimed week by week. As Dr. Maclaren put it, "When others have given of their best in the way of music, lectures, etc., for the educating and enlightening of the people on Sunday evenings, and this Mission has proved that the greatest attraction of all is the Cross of Christ."

WE HAVE SOMETHING BETTER,

That the anniversary proceedings were characterised throughout with the utmost heartiness goes without saying; yet it was not an enthusiasm born of a special and great occasion, but rather a sample of that which pervades the entire work.

It is late in the day to describe the varied agencies in operation, for to most of our readers the story is already familiar—how that the Methodist Church awoke to the fact that the masses were not being reached as they ought to be, and might be, and accordingly organised these special aggressive movements, here and in London, Bolton, Leeds, and other large centres of population. Yet for all this none know so well as the workers themselves that the story in its development is ever new, for not a day passes without adding its quota to the store of romance (albeit dread reality) that is constantly unfolding as they come more and more into touch with unfortunate or degraded humanity.

"But," someone may ask, "are not the workers exceptional persons?" Yes, unfortunately they are. "Why unfortunately?" Because, in the first place, many of them having drunk so deeply of the bitterness of sorrow and sin—yet are thus the better able to succour the tempted and to save the lost; and, in the second, because every Church might have in it many more of the same kind, if only it would go the right way to secure them. Speaking broadly, and excepting its initial leaders, the Mission by going out into the "highways and hedges," winning the lost ones, and then training its converts to put into practical and energetic shape their newfound joy in salvation by seeking out others who know it not.

Stagnation or selfishness are unknown quantities in the Mission's calculations. On the other hand, "enterprise" and "extension" are ends to which all contribute; and these have no limitation. Year by year they have gone on hand in hand until now there are numerous and varied responsibilities to face.

The work among the outcast and destitute is one that requires constant new departures, both as regards organisation and housing facilities. Men, women, and even children all cry for aid, and to these must be stretched forth a helping hand. Hence the ramifications of the Mission agencies are ever multiplying. These are set forth very fully in the new (tenth) annual report just issued, illustrated by photographs of no little practical and pathetic interest. We hope many of our readers will procure this report, which is, apart from its relation to the Mission itself, as a book of 203 pages, most engrossing in its recitals of deeds of daring and tales of woe. It may be had of the superintendent, Rev. S. F. Collier, Central Hall, Oldham-street, Manchester (price 1s. post free), and its purchase not only helps the funds, but will more than repay the readers for their small outlay.

There are fourteen centres—twelve within the city, and two beyond its boundaries—which comprise Gospel halls, young people's institutes, rescue home, women's shelter, labour yard, men's home, etc., in all of which the love of God in Christ to the erring and fallen is earnestly proclaimed. In no sense is philanthropy recognised as a saving force apart from submission to the prior and absolute claims of the Gospel; and while material aid is given to the body, it is only that opportunities may be the more readily afforded to bring sinner and Saviour into soul-saving contact.

The following cases may be regarded as typical of many more, the first being told in his own words by one who is now an active member of the Aggressive League:—

"It was in the Grand Theatre, at a lantern service, that I signed the pledge and gave my heart to God. I used to be a gambler and a drunkard. In the days of my drinking we sold up three homes. Many a time have I left the wife more dead than alive through ill-usage. Everything that could be pawned was gone. I made good wages—from 30s. to 35s. a week—but by Sunday night we never had a shilling left. Rent was the last thing we ever thought of paying. During the last three months before my conversion we never paid any rent at all. There was nothing left in the house that the landlord could take, so we were under no alarm. After signing the pledge we paid three shillings and sixpence a week for house rent, but now we pay six shillings and threepence, and we've never missed our rent since. All our family belongs to the Central Hall now. There's six of us altogether. My wife signed the pledge the same night as I did. And now at this present moment we've got as nice a little house as a working man could have in Salford."

Another. "He was once a leading representative of a Manchester firm in South Africa. He had taken to drink, and it had been his ruin. When he came to the Mission, like all the rest, he was at the far end of everything. The Mission got the man reconciled to his wife and family, from whom he had been separated. A position was found for him at 18s. per week. He has since had two advances. In addition, he takes evening work for a Manchester firm. Above all, he has become soundly converted to God."

AMONG THE WOMEN.

"During the year Sister Pattie has interviewed 3441 cases, of which 2581 have been definitely helped. Sister Pattie interviews each case in the office. Long experience has enabled her, by question which is always kind, but at the same time shrewd and searching, to ascertain the truth in general. The particulars thus gathered are entered in a book for future reference. Investigation follows.

"A single afternoon's interview will be of interest, and best explain this part of the work. As usual, there were several women and young women waiting to see Sister Pattie. The first admitted to her room was a respectably-dressed young woman, who came seeking advice as to how to help her younger sister. Her mother was in an asylum; her father was too ill to take any responsibility in caring for the children, and the grandfather had them in charge. (The younger sister, aged fourteen, had wandered away from home, and was, at that early age, leading an immoral life on the Manchester streets.) As soon as her need had been met, another young woman came into the room, evidently full of great trouble. She had come to Manchester to hide her disgrace. Again the Mission was able to meet her need; and the door opened for another poor woman—a member of the Mission, who came to tell how her daughter was a great anxiety because she seemed certain to go astray, unless someone could get control of her. A fourth visitor proved to be a girl who had been ruined by her stepfather. She was not sixteen years of age. Her destitution and trouble had compelled her to seek advice and help. Then a woman came in deep anguish. Her daughter had been decoyed that afternoon by another woman and taken to a house of ill-fame. The mother had made an attempt to get the girl out of the place, but had been assaulted in so doing, and now she came to ask Sister Pattie's help. Waiting to enter the office, and almost impatient of delay, was a young man who had brought his sister. She had been led astray, and in her agony and difficulty had attempted to commit suicide. Her brother had brought her to the Hall in the hope that something might be done for her.

"These six sad stories followed one another in quick succession, and immediately steps were taken to deal with every case. One was sent to a rescue home. Temporary lodgings were provided for what would prove a maternity case, and payment secured from her master, who is the father of her child. Another was sent to a situation suitable to her. Sister Pattie went herself to the house of ill-fame, and brought back the girl who had been decoyed, and placed her with two of the others in the Night Shelter, until something further could be done for them. I have since ascertained that of these six, five are still in touch with the Mission, and are so far proving very satisfactory. This one afternoon's experience at the Central Hall is nothing unusual, and will give the reader some idea of the kind of work that is being done."

It will be seen from these extracts (and those who read the report itself will be even more firmly convinced of the fact) that these great Forward Movements are doing the work of all denominations, and can therefore look with justice to support from all branches of the Church of Christ. And such support we hope will not be withheld from them, whether in Manchester, London, or elsewhere, for they are proving the wise words of the Apostle James:—

"If a brother or sister be naked and destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto them, 'Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled,' notwithstanding ye give them not those things that are needful to the body, what doth it profit? Shew me thy faith without thy works, and I will shew thee my faith by my works." G. E. M.

Barnwell Theatre, Cambridge.

IT is twenty years since this useful building came into the hands of the servants of the Lord for Gospel use, and very good use they have made of it. In the midst of a dark and at that time largely neglected region its saving beams shone forth, and many a heart has been regenerated and many a home made happy under its ministrations.

Although aggressive agencies in the neighbourhood have, happily, been multiplied, there is still plenty of need for this long-established and fruitful work; and it is pleasing to note the firm place it has always held in the confidence of the clergy and ministers of the town. This is shown by their presence and appreciation of its annual meetings, the last of which was held the other day. The ever-buoyant Rev. W. R. Mowll, of Brixton (a staunch ally of the work since its inception in his undergraduate days), presided, as he has done for many years, supported by the kindly vicar of the parish, Rev. J. G. Dixon; and a number of other local ministers and friends, who spoke hearty words of cheer and exhortation.

The theatre has proved a training ground for many a young preacher in the University, now scattered abroad in positions of responsibility at home and in the foreign field. It therefore deserves more than local support; and so thinks its hon. superintendent, Mr. W. K. Vawser. The Cury, Cambridge.

Mr. Thomas Jackson.

INDUSTRIAL schools rank amongst our philanthropic institutions, notwithstanding their regulation by Act of Parliament. They were founded by Christian benevolence, are shrined in Christian sympathy, and only efficiently conducted by the enthusiasm of Christian love. To hearken to the "cry of the children" and make "faces that are sad to see" glow with glad life; to guard, instruct, train, and equip friendless boys and girls for honest occupations, happy home-life, and worthy citizenship—this is practical Christianity.

Those who are actively engaged in this ministry of mercy live in the esteem of Christendom, their work is valued, and their names and memories are sacred. A year ago there passed away from us Mr. Thomas Jackson, Governor of the Ragged and Industrial Schools of Stockport for fifteen years; of the Homes for Little Boys at Farningham eight years; and of the Industrial Schools, Manchester, thirteen years. He had special qualifications for the position he long and honourably held — genial, tender-hearted, powerful and attractive in public address, thoroughly acquainted with institutional works, possessing a deep love for children, and keeping up correspondence with many of his boys after they were apprenticed to trades or had emigrated to other lands.

His beginnings were unpretentious. The work grew in his hands, and the man grew with his work. The first report of the Stockport Ragged and Industrial School states "that its operations commenced on the 7th August, 1854, with four boys, under the superintendence of Thomas Jackson and his wife, whose devotion to the interest of their charges had been highly satisfactory." The object of the school was to shield destitute, mendicant, and neglected children, to educate and reform juvenile outcasts and offenders. The rent of the first house taken was £12, and during the first year twenty-six children were cared for. Afterwards Townend House, Hillgate, was taken, and to it numerous additions were subsequently made.

In those early days Mr. Jackson went through the lowest parts of the town by night searching for homeless children. Happy the child on whom he laid his firm but kindly grip! When old pupils came to the Christmas dinners, the contrast between their appearance and what it was when they were received into the school was so striking that the late Mr. James Sidebottom once said, "If we had made only one of these fine-looking fellows out of the many we have had in hand it would have repaid all our time and money a thousandfold." During the cotton famine applications for admission were so numerous that the vacant barracks were taken for a time, and a hundred inmates received.

In due time the enlarged Townend House was certified under the Industrial Schools Act, and placed under Government supervision, a separate home being taken for the girls. The reports of H.M. Inspectors testify to the cleanliness, comfort, and successful working of the schools; that the children were well attended to and their conduct satisfactory.

In the industrial department 150 boys are engaged in printing, shoemaking, tailoring, and joinery; and sixty girls are occupied in needlework and laundrywork.

Mr. Jackson removed from Stockport to take charge of the homes for little boys at Farningham. This excellent and well-equipped institution is situate in a beautiful district of Kent, and provides homes, education and training for 300 boys. Visitors were impressed not only with the situation of the institution, and the completeness of its arrangements, but also with the fitness of the governor and matron for their responsible positions.

From Farningham, Mr. Jackson removed to his native city of Manchester to take charge of the industrial school at Ardwick Green. Here he had 200 boys under his care, and during the thirteen years of his governorship 507 boys passed through the institution.

In 1890, through failing health, he retired to Blackpool and lately removed to Walton, Liverpool, where he died. Amongst his treasures he preserved piles of letters received from his old boys, and had the joy of seeing much fruit after many days.

Work at Costers' Hall.

THE far-reaching service carried on in the densely-crowded Hoxton district by Mr. W. J. Orsman has continued without pause or slackening through another year. Mr. Orsman says: "At least fifty operations every week are carried on, under our supervision, by the voluntary help of about 160 converted men and women drawn from the ranks of the industrial classes." Sunday services, Sunday-schools, and temperance work are all successfully carried on.

For various reasons the district is degenerating in its class of population. It has become the rendezvous of the criminal classes, driven from other parts of the Metropolis by public improvements. Decent people formerly occupying a house, or at least several rooms, are moving northward, with the appalling result that whole families now crowd into one room. One-room life is a cause of untold depravity; but large numbers of poor and honest people cannot afford more extended house-room out of their scant wages of less than a pound a week.

During the winter breakfasts are given to 300 half-fed children who attend the elementary schools. Mr. Orsman, Shacklewell-green, N.E., appeals for funds on account of the general and benevolent work, and also for left-off clothing, etc., which latter should be sent to Costers' Hall, Hoxton, N.

Mrs. Meredith's Prison Mission.

A VERY severe trial to our faith and patience has come to pass in this work, although God's blessing is increasingly manifest in the objects of our service. Many ex-prisoner women are doing exceptionally well, and workers who have been long and anxiously labouring are much cheered, and greatly encouraged, in their labour for the poor criminals.

The attendance of the Church Army in our prisons is the answer to many of our prayers. We have long sought permission to deal with the poor souls in the cells for their spiritual good, always feeling there was work for men evangelists, to start the foundation for the Godly ministration of the chaplains, who exhort the members of their church to good works instead of evil; while those who have not had the benefit in youth of learning the commandments surely need to take them to their heart in their retirement. So whether the prisoners are Nonconformists or not, the Church Army forms a suitable agency to impress them with the duty of repentance.

When the women come to us for employment we find them wonderfully open to the Gospel, and many receive it into honest and good ground, as their penitence proves. I can see in our Homes Chapel, on Sundays, some who have been brought to lead new lives by God's grace.

Our great difficulty at present is the state of our premises, where we have all our offices and laundry, etc., where our Conference Hall provides for our Gospel meetings, teaching, etc. There is a house in which the deaconesses and I have lived for many years, and without which we are seriously inconvenienced in holding our meetings and gathering our friends. Our greatest, and latterly most important, Gospel branch of prison work is grievously hampered by the lady who managed it being obliged to live away from the office; and other valuable workers have also to vacate their rooms. I cannot even come to town for a few hours to attend to business, because the house (143, Clapham-road) is unbearable to me on account of the machinery in the new factory adjoining, which shakes the building; the perpetual noise checks all business and service. This most grievous mischief is going on daily worse and worse, and we have to seek accommodation at expense and great hindrance to our work.

The cost to me of providing in these emergencies is so great, and the loss of funds, from the inability to pursue our usual efforts to procure them, and to admit our friends to the premises, is such as to make us feel that the pressure endangers the whole service. The only hope we can indulge is that God will deliver us from the strain of want of money to accommodate his work and live at sufficient ease to be able to do it.

We need £1000 to meet our losses before Christmas. I beg that this exigency will be considered by our ever kind and helpful readers of The Christian.

The helpers in our Home and Foreign Letter Prison Mission held their usual Bee meeting, this season, under serious difficulties. They have sent off by post to the European prisons in their respective languages, and to Colonial and American prisons in English, about 13,000 letters already, and have several thousand still to despatch, and I most earnestly ask your prayers, dear friends, that God may speed these silent messengers. With the horizon darkening momentarily with the shadow of popery, and the depth of lawlessness and ignorance, we need neglect no opening granted us to press the Lord's call to all, Come unto Me!

My pen is not now so able as of old, and at my time of life I can only tell my wants feebly; but I do it in faith in God, and trust you will be faithful to Him and his work. Susanna Meredith.

Home Missions Convention.

THREE DAYS AT EXETER HALL.

CONCLUDING DAY.

THE morning meeting of the Home Missions Convention, at Exeter Hall, on Friday, Nov. 18, was devoted to reports of aggressive evangelistic work in town and country. Colonel Macgregor, C.B., presided, and announced with sorrow the serious illness of Mr. John Wood, of the Evangelisation Society. This brother was to have spoken at the meeting, but in his enforced absence prayer was offered to God on his behalf, Major Mackinlay leading the devotions of those assembled. In some opening remarks, the Chairman spoke of the intense heathenism prevailing in some centres of population in London The obligation upon Christian people to take the Gospel to such is very great. The first set speaker was Mr. H. D. Brown, who outlined the story of the CHRISTIAN COLPORTAGE ASSOCIATION.

Nearly twenty-five years old, this organisation carries on a great work in a singularly quiet manner. The object in view is to counteract in some measure the mischief of impure and degrading and misleading literature; and this is done by placing before the people reading matter that is good and uplifting and definitely Christian. The agents of the Association knock at the doors of "every creature"—for it is to all that Christ's Gospel was sent—and they are now about 130 in number. During the period of the Association's activity nearly eight hundred thousand copies of the Word of God have been sold, and in most cases to people who had no desire to possess the blessed Book. In many an instance the entrance of God's Word has given light; infidels, Roman Catholics, and Jews had purchased the Scriptures, and many cases of conversion had been reported.

In Belgravia, especially among the servants, a large number of Bibles have been sold, one agent there disposing of over two thousand in two years. While this work of evangelisation has been going on in London, great exertions have been in progress in various districts of the provinces. In a wonderful way God has owned his Word, and men and women have been led into newness of life. The colporteurs preach the Gospel from house to house, dealing with people one by one; and in many a case, where a dream-book or a book of fate has been asked for, the Scriptures have been sold, being commended as the best of all "dream-books," and the only one in which all the dreams come true! In conclusion, Mr. Brown spoke of the Training Home at Hastings, which was opened in July last, and has already proved of great service in equipping men for the practical work of colportage.

THE COUNTRY TOWNS MISSION

was represented by Mr. G. H. Mawer, who pointed out that the work consists in daily visitation in the houses of the people—in villages as well as country towns. The Scriptures are read to the people, and the sick and infirm and lonely are specially cared for. For over sixty years the Mission has been in existence, and the present staff of workers is forty-nine. At the same time there are many evangelistic efforts about the country which the Society has established, but which are now being carried on under other auspices. The Society not only opens up work, but it undertakes to find suitable men—a very important thing. In some cases missions associated with the Society are endowed through the thoughtful provision of departed friends of the Society.

Adverting to the more special work of the Society, the speaker referred to Northampton, where a missionary visits a number of large factories, and follows up the acquaintances thus formed by looking up the people at their homes. A worker in a Staffordshire town visited twenty-five villages last year by means of his bicycle. In one case, at the house of a sick man, he found an old acquaintance trying to lead the sufferer to Christ. It was to his joy that he saw this; for the earnest soul trying to enlighten his friend had himself only come to the light a short time previously through the instrumentality of the visiting missionary. In conclusion, reference was made to the great need of many villages, owing to the utter lack of sound Gospel preaching and light. There are many openings for occasional and temporary efforts, and the promotion of such was mentioned as one of the many ways in which Christian people with means may help the Society.

THE RAILWAY MISSION.

This work was represented by Mr. R. Nixon, who spoke of the serious responsibilities devolving upon many railway men, and of the consolation we should all feel in knowing that so many of them are Christian men, working for the various companies as in the sight of God. While thanking God for all the churches and chapels, the speaker pointed out that there are places where the Railway Mission is the only witness for the simple Gospel, and the doors of the mission-halls are never closed against anyone. The conditions of railway work militate against the Christian principles in which many of the men were brought up in country homes, and also single out such men as demanding special treatment. From the beginning God has greatly blessed the work of the Mission, which has about four hundred branches scattered throughout the country, superintended by friends who are free from the limitations incidental to railway work. These workers, sometimes gentlemen, at other times ladies, take a kindly personal interest in the men, and visit their wives and families.

There are about a hundred and sixty workers who devote their lives to the Mission without any recompense. There is also a staff of about forty paid workers employed in the great railway centres. There is a branch work in South Africa, where, in many instances, the railway men live far from civilisation or Christian influences; also in Japan, where the movement has begun under promising auspices; and in India, where one worker has just entered upon service. In conclusion, mention was made of the Convalescent Home at St. Leonards, which has been the cause of great blessing.

THE OPEN AIR MISSION

came last on the programme, and its claims were advocated by Mr. Frank Cockrem. Having outlined the story of the Mission from its inception in 1853, the speaker said that the work is now resolving itself into a series of determined attacks upon home heathenism, and the attacks have in many cases been glorious triumphs. On racecourses and at country fairs the Mission is represented by large bodies of evangelists; to this great work the Mission is now bending its utmost energies, and the Lord has given great blessing. At Epsom and Doncaster tens of thousands of betting men have heard the Gospel, and the same may be said of Ascot—a sort of Royal enclosure and reserve.

The secret of success and blessing has been found in the prayers of God's people, and among others who have held up the hands of the workers were some noble Christian policemen at Ascot, who, when the races were on, had their own prayer-meeting in the morning, and assisted the preachers at the close of the day. Among incidents related was the story of a man who gave up a betting life through the preaching at Doncaster; he said he had found out that "it was impossible for a betting man to be a happy man." At Great Yarmouth, also, a work full of encouragement was carried on during the summer, thousands of people hearing the Gospel. In conclusion, the work at Douglas, recently described in these pages, was spoken of.

AFTERNOON MEETING.

The afternoon gathering was presided over by Mr. S. Gurney Sheppard, and addresses were delivered on temperance and rescue effort in various phases and departments. The attendance was somewhat larger, including a number of well-known supporters of work of the class described.

BRITISH WOMEN'S TEMPERANCE ASSOCIATION.

This was represented by Mrs. Pearsall Smith, who opened with the statement that the Association is organised mother-love, and aims at the salvation of the children and the homes. Every woman's heart should respond to the appeal of the Association, the strength and power of which is found in its allegiance to the Lord Jesus Christ, and its dependence upon the Lord. Not money, nor influence, nor power did she appeal for, but more women, and with enough of them she would undertake to manage Parliament, face any obstacle, and overcome every difficulty.

The speaker asked her hearers to realise what the liquor traffic is—as it affects the child-life and the home. To her it was an amazing thing that the children of the nation were not considered as they should be. Whatever we make the children of the present, that the future of the nation will be. It is marvellous but true that Governments do their best to ruin the children of the country. Can it be anything but degrading for young children to carry jugs to public-houses? In Canada no one is served under twenty-one; but in England no response is made to the appeal for publicans to be forbidden to serve children below the age of thirteen.

We make criminals, and then bring in a great machinery to deal with them. The Association is collecting statistics on the question of the effects of the traffic on the child-life of the nation; and the active interest of all good men and women in this undertaking was particularly requested. A friend of the speaker's was recently informed that a medical man had some seventy children to treat on one Sunday, suffering from injuries which they had received on the previous Saturday night from drunken fathers and mothers. Other forms of abuse and neglect emphasise the need for a great accumulation of information on the subject of child-life and the home, as they are being degraded and ruined by the drink traffic.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN SAILORS' SOCIETY.

Rev. E. W. Matthews spoke for this society, which was started in 1818, after some years of embryonic efforts to organise work for the good of the seafaring community. Beginning on the Thames, the work has expanded all over the world, and there are now eighty-nine rests, reading-rooms, and bethels in 101 ports; there are floating bethels, steamers, and boats, one and all engaged in carrying on the work in many waters. Whether in home or foreign ports, the agents are dealing with British sailors, bluejackets as well as mercantile marine, so the work may well be reckoned as connected with Home Missions. Over eleven hundred Christian sailors have joined the Bethel Union Association, and the flag is flying all over the world

THE RESCUE OF YOUNG WOMEN.

The next speaker was Mr. C. Stuart Thorpe, who told the story of the Society for the Rescue of Young Women and Children from its origin in 1853. The various branches of the work were explained in interesting detail, and many sad stories, associated with the inmates, were narrated. Of twenty-seven in one of the homes, four had been charged with attempted suicide before they were taken in hand—in one case charged four times. In cases where destitution was attended with moral danger, the society had stepped in and saved girls from degradation and shame. Children thus taken in hand are not only saved from namelessperils, but trained for service and fitted for useful lives. The efforts of the Society in preventive work and befriending expectant mothers were also described, and pathetic incidents given in proof of the great service rendered by these branches.

SEAMEN'S CHRISTIAN FRIEND SOCIETY.

The work of this agency, now fifty-three years old, was described by Rev. G. J. Hill. The Society's missionaries have for the most part been sailors, either in the navy or merchant service, and they are helped by hundreds of honorary assistants. In connection with the work are homes, rests, and institutes in nearly forty ports. Gospel meetings are held in these places, and ships leaving them are provided with religious books and good literature. The speaker described in detail the round of work at the headquarters down at the London Dock, and was able to tell of great blessing attending the operations of the society.

"FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN."

Mr. W. J. Taylor spoke of the Female and Preventive Reformatory Institution, now between forty and fifty years old. The story of the rise of the work and its development was full of interest. In addition to a refuge open all night, there are five homes, one of them preventive; an average of 180 inmates are provided for daily. Year by year there are some eight hundred applicants for admission, more than half of them on behalf of preventive cases. A large proportion of the inmates are orphans, and many of them natives of provincial towns. Ministers and magistrates, prison chaplains and Christian workers, send cases to the Society. The work is conducted on strictly temperance principles, with spiritual aims and objects always in view. In providing homes for the friendless and fallen, this Society has engaged the interest of many Christian workers.

NATIONAL VIGILANCE ASSOCIATION.

A paper on the work of this organisation was read by Mr. W. A. Coote, who traced its history and explained its objects and procedure. During the thirteen years of its existence the Association has assisted many wronged girls in the way of legal advice; it has also secured legal decisions on important issues; prosecuted men who, under various pretexts, have compassed the ruin of young women; and has done much to suppress the circulation of obscene books and pictures. Within a few years the Association procured the destruction of fifty thousand pictures of an evil nature. At different times over a thousand books, sometimes of great money value, have been sent to the Association for destruction by persons who did not wish others to be contaminated as they themselves had been. The speaker referred with special pleasure to the various triumphs of the Association in the courts, before licensing boards, and in Parliament. Recent developments of the endeavour against the white slave traffic, already outlined in The Christian, were also explained.

EVENING MEETING.

Sir George Williams occupied the chair in the evening, when the gathering was larger and more representative than on previous occasions. The addresses were devoted in particular to work among young people, although an opportunity was afforded for speeches of a more general character in the interest of specially needy classes. In some opening remarks, the Chairman rejoiced in the tone and substance of the addresses that had been delivered during the Convention. If, in the words of Lord Shaftesbury, the missions and agencies had not given us a city of angels, they had certainly preserved us from becoming a city of demons. Sir George expressed a hope that the stimulus of the meetings would be crystalised into renewed efforts, which would not only enrich the home churches, but do much to help the work in foreign fields.

LONDON CITY MISSION.

Rev. Robert Dawson spoke with much vigour of this great organisation, now sixty-three years of age. He described of its inception, amidst much discouragement, through the energy and devotion of the well-known David Nasmyth; and its growth and development, with the passage of years, after Fowell Buxton had accepted the post of treasurer. The founding of the Mission solved two knotty points—First, the union of Christian men in the work of the Lord; and, second, the bridging of the gulf separating the Church from the godless masses of London. The hearty co-operation of men belonging to various Evangelical denominations has been complete; and although there are now 460 agents, there has never been any dissension or difficulty arising from denominational differences.

The Mission has been engaged in a great pioneer work, the men going from house to house, from room to room, from man to man, arresting people, and bringing them to Christ. Where there are no churches the missionaries go, and many openings are continually before them in their anxiety to spend themselves for Christ. Where possible the people are gathered into mission halls, or assembled in cottage meetings; and from the first open-air work has been a great agency in the work. Bands of men make it their business to speak and sing the Gospel; and for special classes of the people the Mission has special workers. A hundred and twenty men are thus engaged; otherwise there would be little or no getting at bakers, cabmen, sailors, navvies, police, dockers, men of various nationalities, landlords and customers in public houses, soldiers, gipsies, workhouses, inmates of common lodging-houses, and others.

THE P.S.A. FEDERATION.

Rev. W. S. Stephen, secretary of the P.S.A. Federation, had an encouraging tale to tell. There are at the present time from twelve to fifteen hundred societies, with about two hundred thousand persons in attendance weekly. The place of Mr. John Blackham in the origin and development of the society was honourably mentioned; and the allied agencies—reading-rooms, helping-hand funds for the relief of those who are overtaken with sickness and distress, the savings bank, and labour bureau—were described. To fight the drink evil, there is a total abstinence society, which has been fruitful of great good. In conclusion, the speaker showed that by various means fellowship is promoted among the members.

THE Y.W.C.A.

The Hon. Emily Kinnaird spoke of the Y.W.C.A., which has its place in the home as well as the foreign mission. Its early syllabus, in 1855, described it as a union for prayer and work, although it has for the most part been regarded as an organisation for work. The Association aims particularly at training young people for future usefulness, and in its work and sympathies it is world-wide. North and South Africa lie heavily upon the heart of the Association at the present time, whence earnest appeals are coming.

The Association looks more to the Prayer Union membership than to the executive; the various bands and committees are at all times busy looking after the young women and taking them under their care. All Prayer Union members agree to serve as far as they can, to love the Lord Jesus Christ, and help to save other girls. The Association is not for girls of one class only, as some have supposed; it is not merely an organisation for those requiring to be worked for, but also an organisation to provide work for others who are at liberty to undertake it. Bible study is a special point; and then there is the daily portion and the daily text. The organisation is a Christian Association but not an association of Christians; of whatever class, creed, or colour a member may be, by joining she becomes an associate under Christian influence; although such associates are not Prayer Union members. In conclusion, Miss Kinnaird bespoke the interest of ladies in the work.

THE CHURCH ARMY.

Rev. Wilson Carlile, speaking for this organisation, rejoiced that the Church of England had taken off her kid gloves and gone down into the gutter. God had raised up a body of earnest men who are devoted to the work; between six and seven hundred are engaged in preaching, colportage, and going into the prisons with the Gospel. The Poor Law fails because it does not take Christ to the poor, and therefore implants no desire or ability to work. The speaker mentioned the homes (not "shelters)" in various parts of the country, in charge of men and women willing to father and mother the helpless and hopeless who come under their influence. He appealed for young men and women with a yearning to win souls to Christ—especially "Church people"—to consider whether they might not find a sphere of usefulness in one of the many branches of his organisation.

Answering the objection that the Church Army goes to ritualistic churches and others that were associated with "broad" teachings, he said he should have thought that earnest people would be delighted that such opportunities were accepted for the preaching of the pure Gospel of God's grace. The Church Army offers endless scope for simple Gospel preaching. It has the warmest sympathy of the bishops, and the workers are preaching up and down the land in consecrated buildings.

THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR SOCIETY.

The cause of this young people's society was pleaded by Rev. J. G. Train. Though only of the age of "sweet seventeen," the movement is widespread and showing ever-growing vigour. In Britain as well as America the Society speedily took root, and at present the membership throughout the world stands at considerably over three and a quarter millions. It has commended itself to churches of varying polity; and connected with the churches of London alone there are five hundred societies, with twenty-five thousand members. Statistics go to show that the Society has, by its quiet influence, led a large number of young people into membership with the churches.

When the question is asked, "Do C. E. societies help the churches?" the answer must be, "That depends upon the churches," whether they show sympathy or not towards the young people whom they would wish to enrol in their ranks. The Society recognises that the young have gifts, and that it is well that they should first of all be exhibited in the circle of the young. The various other characteristics of the Society were passed in review; and it was shown that being inter-denominational it promotes a gracious regard for one another among members of various communions.

THE Y.M.C.A.

Last, but not least, came the address of Mr. W. H. Mills, secretary of the National Council, on the Y.M.C.A. The origin of the Association may be passed by, and no defence of its existence is now required. The importance of the work was the note struck at the very outset of the address. Coming to the Central Association, Exeter Hall, Aldersgate-street, and Cornhill, the speaker said that there are now 2143 members and over 900 associates; but the work extends far beyond the membership. The multiplicity of effort was then explained, and it was shown that by meeting the wants of young men as they are found, a great work has been done.

In London alone there are seventy Associations, and in the country there are some fourteen hundred centres of work, with 105,000 members, while the work flows over the wall and affects thousands of people beside the members. Being missionary in character, the Association has flourished marvellously. Into some of these details Mr. Mills passed, to explain that in all the colonies and in other lands a warm hand is ready to show an interest in young men going from England into strange surroundings. In conclusion, it was maintained that the young man's affair is the affair of everyone, and therefore it was most reasonable that the Y.M.C.A. should reckon on the deepening interest of Christian people.

"Give Peace in our Time."

Peace, spread thy wings abroad!
Thy righteous rule we laud,
In happy song;
How lovelier, better far,
Thy victories than war,
Won even without a scar,
Or shade of wrong!

'Tis wisdom's highest aim,
'Tis valour's brightest fame
Peace to maintain—
To build—not to destroy,
To bless—not to annoy,
To sweeten—not alloy,
Earth's fair domain.

War clouds the fairest day,
War holds all good at bay—
The nation rends;
Peace smiles upon the scene;
Peace moves with joyous mien
'Midst nations—fair, serene,
Cementing friends.

Peace founded firm on right
Turns darkness into light,
From shore to shore.
Peace, fix on earth thy throne,
Let wars no more be known;
Love's banner wave alone
The wide world o'er!

With sceptre stretched afar,
Lord Jesus, banish war,
And wrong dethrone;
Earth's amity increase,
Bid war's alarms to cease,
Bring in thy reign of peace,
Hush every groan!

A Conversational Bible Reading is held at Hyères, France, in the Hotel Palmier every Tuesday morning. Major Gen. A. H. Hutchinson or Capt. W. H. Dawson will preside.

THE EVANGELISTIC FIELD.

Gipsy Smith at Norwich.

AN eight days' mission, conducted by Gipsy Smith, under the auspices of the Free Church Council at Norwich, has been greatly blessed. Very many have been led to Christ and to declare their allegiance to Him, while others have had their spiritual life quickened.

It is too soon yet to know the actual results, but nearly four hundred passed through the inquiry-room, seeking and professing faith in Christ, and the workers were greatly encouraged by the apparent reality on the part of the inquirers to serve their Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

The services, which were held in Prince's-street Congregational Church, were crowded to overflowing each night, many being turned away, while the services on the two Sundays in St. Andrew's Hall were equally full, and great numbers were unable to gain admission. The Free Churches of Norwich felt truly thankful that they had the privilege of having such a man as Mr. Smith to conduct this mission. His intense earnestness, his tender pleadings, his love and yearning for lost souls all gave great power to his preaching. The burden for souls was a living reality to him, and each poor, erring and wandering soul in those congregations seemed to be brought into personal contact with the preacher, and felt that he was longing and striving by the power of the Holy Spirit to bring them to a sense of their sins and to faith in the Saviour.

God grant that the seed sown may bring forth much good fruit, and that the blessing this week has been may be a lasting one—that not only may members have been led to Christ, but that all who attended those services may awake to a sense of their own responsibility in the service of Christ, and seek themselves to bring others into his fold.

The Brothers Weaver in Hull.

DURING November these evangelists conducted a fortnight's mission in Prospect-street Presbyterian Church (Rev. J. J. Mackay, pastor). From the beginning to the close there were manifest signs of Holy Ghost power. Mr. Frank Weaver sang the Gospel with sweetness and power; and Mr. Bewley Weaver preached it with intense earnestness, clearness, and spiritual force. Night after night men, women, and children were inquiring the way of salvation, and manifesting joy in a Saviour found. About 140 persons, of whom about forty were boys and girls, entered the inquiry rooms. They are being visited and looked after. It was a time of real reviving and refreshing to many Christians, and of restoration to backsliders. The workers have been greatly cheered, and are full of gratitude to God.

Evangelists' Movements.

Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh has been conducting an eight days' mission at Hollinwood, near Manchester, among working-men, with good results.

Crowded and cheering meetings have been held in connection with a mission at Ugborough, Devon, by Mr. John Elliot. Some of the most careless have been reached.

A Gospel mission has been held at the Wesleyan Chapel, Pembroke, conducted by Mr. Raymond Preston. Numbers came out for Christ, and believers were refreshed.

Mr. Geo. Loudon, late of Evangelisation Society, has conducted an eight days' mission at the Railway Mission Hall, Saffron Walden. It has been a season of great blessing to many.

Rev. David Lyall, of Chicago, is conducting evangelistic services in Emmanuel Church, Glasgow. He is having much success in his work, and is reaching many of the non-churchgoing class.

A two weeks' mission has been held at Langloan, N.B., by Mr. Ferguson, of the Lanarkshire Christian Union. The meetings were well attended. Souls have been won for Christ, and believers greatly quickened.

Mr. H. Stafford-Smith, of the London Evangelisation Society, has closed a three weeks' mission at North Seaton. Amongst the most earnest workers were those converted during his former mission four years ago. Mr. Smith is at Alvediston, Wilts, until December 18.

A ten days' mission has been held by Mr. Henry Thorne in Exeter. The statistical results (says a correspondent) are not the only nor the chief results. Mr. Thorne has shed forth a unique spiritual influence and a rich suggestiveness of character and faith that must be incalculable and abiding.

On Sabbath, November 27, Mr. David Rea, Irish evangelist, closed a four weeks' mission in connection with the City Temple, Glasgow. Mr. Rea is well known in Glasgow, and had large audiences at all his meetings. His direct and personal appeals found a response in many hearts, and arrested some who were careless.

Mr. T. W. Canning, of the London Evangelisation Society, has just concluded a three weeks' mission in Saltcoats, Ayrshire. The meetings were well attended, and, amid many signs of blessing, a large number earnestly professed to have accepted salvation. The mission closed with a farewell meeting in the Free Church.

A fortnight ago Rev. Hugh C. Wallace, of Burnley, concluded an evangelistic mission at Norwood-grove, Liverpool. The congregations were very large, and many professed to receive blessing. During the past week Mr. Wallace has been conducting gospel services in connection with Eidlow Congregational Church, Wigan.

The work at the American tent is now in the twelfth week at Tottenham; it will soon be brought to a close and the tent removed to Hammersmith. Meantime meetings will be continued on Sundays (at 11.0, 3.0, and 7.30), and also on Thursday nights. On Thursday last an evening gathering for converts was held. About 400 friends sat down to tea. Kindly and helpful words were spoken to the converts by Mr. William Grove, Mr. Leonard Weaver, and Mr. Garstin.

A thirteen days' mission has been held in the People's Hall, Boone-street, Lee, S.E., by Mr. Ned Wright. Large numbers have attended nightly, and the earnest pleading of the evangelist will not soon be forgotten. In response to his appeal, a large number held up their hands to testify to God's saving power.

J. W.

During the past two months Rev. R. Mackay has conducted missions in connection with the Free Church Federation at Cowes, East Cowes, and Newport, Isle of Wight; Tunstall, Staffs; and Hucknall Torkard, Notts. The meetings at Hucknall Torkard, which closed on Sunday evening last, were much used in leading a number of young men to decision for Christ.

Mr. Moody has been working in Denver, and a correspondent in that city says:—"The State elections are upon us, and we are in about twelve different kinds of politics; but the Press is seemingly devoting as much space to the great preacher as to politics. Indeed, the cartoon in one of our dailies represented the politician gesticulating before empty seats, and Moody addressing a packed house."

A six days' mission has lately been held at the Baptist Chapel, Totteridge-road, Enfield Highway (Pastor A. Welch), in connection with the open-air work carried on at the Small Arms Factory, Enfield Lock. The mission was conducted by Mr. Charles Cook, and there were good gatherings. Promising results have been evident. The open-air services in the Market-place at the factory were started by Rev. John Cropper, Enfield Highway, who has received many testimonies from the men of blessing received through this effort.

Mr. Monro Collings has concluded a fifteen days' mission in Hounslow. His visit was the outcome of a mission at Feltham ten months ago, the results of which are increasingly manifest to-day. And we, too, have much to praise God for. Night after night the Spirit of God was in our midst, convincing of sin and revealing the Savour, able to save unto the uttermost. People of all denominations gathered together from far and near. The chief feature of the mission was the revival among Christians through the deeply interesting Bible reading held each afternoon. Another cause for gratitude has been the great blessing which has broken out among the young people and children.

Shaftesbury Villa, Hounslow.

Under the auspices of the East Somerset Free Church Council a mission has just been conducted at Clutton by Mr. Newton Jones, of London. The meetings held extended over a period of three weeks. From the beginning they were well attended, and the last Sunday was especially successful in the matter of attendance and power accompanying the Word preached. Over thirty names of inquirers were taken. The three churches of the village—Congregational, Free Methodist and Wesleyan—joined together most cordially, and each has received accessions to its membership, as well as stimulus and encouragement in the work. Many prayers and good wishes will follow Mr. Newton Jones in his evangelistic work. His illustrated addresses are particularly effective, while his methods with young people and children are fresh, and most helpful in bringing them to decision for Christ.

Requests for Prayer.

For blessings upon gatherings at Ipswich, on December 8.

For blessing on a forthcoming mission by Mr. H. Thorne at Lymington, Hants.

For continued blessing on the Sunday evening meetings for men at Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street.

For blessing on a ten days' mission to be conducted by Miss Gill, of Devonport, in the Baptist Chapel, Launceston, beginning December 4.

For blessing on a Children's Special Service Mission to be conducted by Mr. Jas. Tyler from Dec. 4-15 at the Mission-hall, Gay-street, Liverpool.

The Free Churches and Ritualism.—St. George's Hall, Liverpool, was crowded on Monday evening on the occasion of a meeting held under the auspices of the West Cheshire Federation of Free Church Councils. One of the resolutions passed expressed devout thankfulness at the rapid strides of the movement, and recognised in it one of the most effective means whereby the cause of Christian unity might be promoted, the growing sacerdotalism counteracted, spiritual religion vindicated and maintained, and the vigour and purity of national life secured. Dr. Clifford, in the course of a vigorous address, referred to the resurgent sacerdotalism which is menacing our national character, and deplored it especially because it is playing into the hands of falsehood, treachery, deceit, and intrigue.

The Protestant Crusade.—The Religious Tract Society offers a prize of £100 for the best book on the subject: Protestant Belief. A popular and thorough vindication of Evangelical Protestantism against Romanism and the Romanist tendencies of the day. The MS. is not to exceed 120,000 words, and must reach the Book Editor, 56, Paternoster-row, London, not later than April 29, 1899. The Society also offers prizes of £50, £35, and £21, for the best stories of 90,000, 70,000, and 35,000 words, respectively, on the present-day aspects of the controversy with Rome. These stories should deal with present-day life, and illustrate the evils which Romanism and the drift towards Rome are working in the life and thought of to-day. The MSS. must reach the Book Editor not later than March 31, 1899.

FOR YOUNG PEOPLE.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to UNCLE TOM, Office of THE CHRISTIAN, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C.

MY Dear Young Friends,—As I feel sure it will be interesting to you all, I am giving you this week a few of the letters I have received from the last prize and certificate winners. They have pleased me very much indeed, and I thought they might encourage some of my "nephews and nieces" who have not been successful so far.

I must also thank some of you for thinking of "Uncle Tom's" work every week. I want those "nephews and nieces" who are inclined to grumble sometimes, and say the questions are too difficult, to remember how much work there is in correcting all their answers.

But my kind helpers and I want you to remember that though it is very nice to gain prizes of books, etc., the real aim of Our Bible Searcher is to teach you to love the study of God's Word, so that you may know his will, and thus gain the great PRIZE—Eternal Life.

MY DEAR UNCLE TOM,—I have not written to you since I began doing the Bible Searchers, although I have often thought of doing so. I received the prize last week, Saturday, I like it very much. Thank you very much for sending it for me, and for all the others, too. On Saturday I got one of my friends to join the Searcher. I go to school at a place called Westwood, about eight miles from Brown's Town. A lady from England is the teacher. The other teachers, one is from Barbadoes and the other two from Jamaica. I suppose you have heard of the dreadful hurricane in Barbadoes and St. Vincent. There is hardly a tree standing in St. Vincent, but in Barbadoes it was not so bad, although Bridgetown, the capital, was destroyed. We are very glad that the war is over, seeing that it was going on just ninety miles distant from Jamaica. In the battle of Santiago, once, they could faintly hear the report of the cannons.

Both my brother and I have stamp albums. There is quite a rage over stamps in Jamaica, and if you would like some Jamaica stamps I would send you some. Brooks is trying very hard to get a prize, and also to get stars.

Not long ago I gave my heart to Jesus. I am trying to get others to love Him too. Brooks wants to love Him too.

I think I will have to close my letter now. Give my love to all my other cousins. A. H. (13 years).

Papa says he would like to know your real name, if you wouldn't mind telling it. He is very interested in the Bible Searcher.

. . . .

I am writing to thank you for the lovely prize which I have received. I am sure it will be very interesting to read all about the different animals mentioned in the Bible.

I hope I will be successful in winning many other prizes in the competitions. Again thanking you, I remain, your loving niece, M. R. (14 years).

. . . .

Thank you very much for the beautiful book you sent to me as a first prize. I was very pleased with it, and like it as far as I have read. All who have seen it, and especially those who have read it, speak very highly of it. I like reading about the Reformers and martyrs.

G. L. (15 years).

Thank you very much for the nice book you have sent to me for a prize. I was so glad to see that my answers were right in the competition. I have been looking out each day for the Parcel-postman, and was delighted to see him come to-day.

I shall read my book to my little sister Enid, who I hope will belong to the Bible Searcher when she can read.

I like looking out the answers, and always do it on Sunday afternoons.

I am just going to bed, so must say good-bye, with love from K. P. (8 years).

. . . .

I received my prize a day or two ago, and must now write and thank you for it. It is a very nice book indeed, and I expect it will be very useful. I have never had a second prize before, so I am glad I got it this time. My little sister Winnie has not yet been able to try for the competition, but I expect she will next time; anyway, I hope we will both be in the honour list. The weekly questions are very interesting, and I love doing them.

D. P. G. (13 years).

I thank you very much for the lovely book. I have enjoyed reading some of the stories very much. It was like a birthday present coming rather soon. I hope I will get a prize when I am over ten. E. L. E. (9 years).

. . . .

I have received my prize, and am very well pleased with it. I have started reading it, and enjoy it very much. What power of expression Knox has! No wonder he had such an influence in the land. Please accept my sincere thanks. J. W. T. (17 years).

. . . .

We all thank you very much for the nice books you sent us for prizes. I think they are the nicest we have ever had, and we are delighted with them.

I am sending our photos, thinking you might like to see them. Eddie, the little boy standing between Maggie and myself, hopes to do the "Searcher" next quarter.

W. P. (16 years).

I am very pleased with my prize, and think it is a lovely book. I have been reading some of it this afternoon. I tried very hard to gain a prize, but found some of the questions rather difficult. I have been also trying to get some of my school friends to join the Searcher.

I have tried to gain a star this week; sometimes when I try very hard I do not get one. What a lot of nieces and nephews you must have; it must take you a very long time to correct their answers. I am interested to see "A. H.'s" name in the Foreign list sometimes, as I have a letter and text which came from him and his sister. I prize it very much, as it came from China. Q. U.

Thank you very, very much indeed, for the beautiful book you sent me. I am very pleased at having earned a prize, and there is nothing I like better than reading.

I have a motherless nephew, who is 2½ years old. Such a dear little boy, that I am sure you would like him. D. S.

. . . .

Thank you so much for the lovely book you sent me. I take the CHRISTIAN in, and mother wanted it bound; but I did not know she did, so I have lost some of the numbers. I am so glad I have it. M. S. (9 years).

. . . .

I thank you so very much for the pretty certificate you sent me. We have had such bad weather lately, and the Forth flooded its banks, and the water came up to the front doors of some of the houses, and the water was so high that there was no room for a boat to pass under the arches of the bridge. E. D. P. S. (9 years).

. . . .

Thank you so very much for my "honourable mention." I think it is so pretty. I was quite surprised when I saw it. When you are ever down at Southampton, mother will be very pleased to see you, and we, too. M. B.

. . . .

Many thanks for my certificate. It is a very nice one, and I like it much. I find the weekly "Searchers" very helpful to myself, as I hope they are to others.

L. E. U. (16 years).

. . . .

Thank you so much for sending me the second certificate, and for all the trouble you take about our Bible Searcher questions. I hope next time I may get a prize; at any rate, I will try and do my best. I like doing them very much on Sunday afternoons. H. H. B.

. . . .

I was so pleased to get a star last week, and shall try always to get one, though I am only seven years old. I do so like doing them. I should like to see you, but I send my love and a kiss to you. N. D.

. . . .

Thank you very much for the lovely prize you sent me. I have been reading it a lot, and I think it is very kind of you to give prizes to children you have never seen. I like doing the questions very much, and I hope I shall get a first prize again next competition.

When we went away in the summer we went to Italy, and we spent nine weeks in the Apennines at Palagnana, then we went to Florence, Bologna, Venice, Milan, and Genoa.

They talk here a great deal about there being a war between England and France. I hope there won't be, but please tell me what you think about it.—With kind love, I remain your affectionate nephew,

L. W. H. B. (nine years).

DEAR UNCLE TOM,—I hope you are very well. I am writing this at school. Miriam's cat, Smut, has got two kittens, one named Spot, because it has a white spot under its throat, and Raven. I am learning out of Brewer's English History, and have got as far as Richard I. Cœur de Lion. Eddie (my youngest brother) is practising the Bible Searcher. I am learning French, and I like it very much so far. We have had some very foggy days here. I expect I am going to a boarding-school called Ackworth next year. I am 55½in. in height and Miriam is 53in., in our shoes. Miriam and I are learning Longfellow's "Children's Hour." Rather babyish, isn't it, but beautiful! I have learned one of Tennyson's poems, "Break, Break, Break." Miriam and I have learned one of Longfellow's, "Reaper and the Flowers," and "Autumn," Wordsworth's ode "To the Cuckoo," and Sir Walter Scott's "Battle of Flodden," from "Marmion." My favourite poets are Longfellow, Tennyson, and Scott.—I am, your loving niece.

M. E. (10 years.)

ANSWERS TO LAST WEEK'S SEARCHER (No. 150).

[ I am very sorry to find that 2 Chronicles was printed instead of 2 Kings at the head of the Bible Searcher. It should have been 2 Kings xxii. and xxiii. It is very satisfactory to note that in spite of this difficulty so many correct papers have been sent in.]

1. Hilkiah was the high priest, and Shaphan, the son of Azaliah, was the scribe in the reign of Josiah, King of Judah. (2 Kings xxii. 3, 4.)

2. Hilkiah was sent by the king to Shaphan that they might pay the workmen who were repairing the temple from the sum of money given by the people who worshipped there. Hilkiah found in the temple the book of the law which Shaphan read to the king. (2 Kings xxii. 4-11.)

3. Huldah was a prophetess, and wife of Shallum. (2 Kings xxii. 14.)

4. That destruction would come upon Jerusalem, but not in Josiah's reign, as he had humbled himself before the Lord. (2 Kings xxii. 15-20.)

5. To keep the commandments of the Lord with all his heart and all his soul. (2 Kings xxiii. 3.)

6. He was slain at Megiddo by Pharaoh-nechoh, King of Egypt. His body was brought to Jerusalem and buried in his own sepulchre. (2 Kings xxiii. 29, 30.)

7. Jehoahaz was imprisoned by Pharaoh and died in Egypt. (2 Kings xxiii. 33, 34.)

8. Jehoiakim. He did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord. (2 Kings xxiii. 36, 37.)

Obituary.

DR. H. L. WAYLAND, PHILADELPHIA.

A well-known figure in religious circles in America will be missed through the decease, at the age of sixty-eight, of Dr. H. L. Wayland, who for years conducted The National Baptist. He was a man of original and versatile gifts, and was in great request as a platform speaker. He frequently attended the Northfield Convention, and gave addresses full of sparkle and Christian cheer.

REV. JAMES SMITH.

News has been received at the Baptist Mission House of the death of Rev. James Smith, the oldest missionary of the society. Although of late years he was stationed at Simla, he began preaching in the streets of Delhi in 1858, and at the same time was constant in his evangelistic and educational efforts. Mr. Smith had reached the ripe age of eighty-one. We hope in an early issue to give a portrait and sketch.

MR. GEORGE PEARSON.

There passed away on Friday, November 25, George Pearson, a veteran in the Master's service. For the past twenty years he has served Highgate-road Baptist Church in word and deed as a deacon. Some years ago, as a mark of esteem and confidence, he was elected to the office for life. He was for many years leader of a large men's Bible class, where many were led as trophies by his instrumentality to the feet of Jesus. Amidst many tokens of respect he was borne to the grave in Highgate Cemetery on Tuesday, an impressive service having first been conducted in the chapel by Pastor James Stephens, M.A. "Till the day dawn." B. G. S.

REV. GEORGE CHARTER.

By the death, in his eighty-eighth year, of Rev. George Charter, of Sydney, the Congregational churches have lost their oldest minister in Australasia. He was a native of Cambridgeshire, having been born in 1811 at Melbourn. He was trained at the Theological Academy which then existed at Barnet, and was ordained in 1838 on the eve of leaving for the Society Islands, where he laboured for some years at Raiatea for the London Missionary Society. Owing to health failure, he left in 1853 for New South Wales, and for over thirty years was actively engaged in Sydney and district. He initiated several churches, and was one of the founders of the Albert Memorial Hospital at Sydney.

REV. DR. HONEY, INCHTURE.

In the death of Rev. John Adamson Honey, D.D., which took place last week at The Manse, Inchture, another link with the past generation has been severed. If not the oldest, Dr. Honey was certainly one of the oldest ministers of the Church of Scotland. He was known and universally respected throughout the length and breadth of the land, and was especially venerated and esteemed throughout the Church, as a high-toned Christian gentleman, and a faithful preacher of the Gospel. When he was appointed to the parish of Inchture there were many things in the district that required immediate reform, and the new minister promptly set himself to the task. Additional services were instituted, a Sunday-school was started, and the parish church of Inchture was speedily regarded far and near as an example of progress, and his work well worthy of emulation. In his good work Dr. Honey was ably assisted by many of his parishioners, and when he extended his sphere of operations, especially in connection with the treatment of the ploughmen in the bothies, he met with the cordial support of the late Lord Kinnaird. In his parish Dr. Honey, during his long life, fully maintained the love and affection of his people. Kindly and warm-hearted, he was beloved by the young, and in their upbringing and welfare he took a lively interest.

Ragged Schools in Spitalfields.—The fifty-third annual meeting of the King Edward Mission was held on Tuesday night at the Institute connected with the mission. Mr. F. A. Bevan presided. Sixty-seven prizes were awarded to scholars for good conduct in their situations by Mrs. Bevan. The chairman spoke highly of the necessary and valuable work accomplished by the institution, and an encouraging report was read by the honorary superintendent (Mr. C. Montagu).

Personalia.

Rev. Dr. Berry has had a serious relapse, and his condition is a cause of grave anxiety to his friends.

Mr. Jas. Wharton is sailing for America on December 3, to resume work among the freedmen of the Southern States.

Mr. John Wood, hon. sec. of the Evangelization Society, has been for five weeks very ill, and has now had a second relapse. Prayer is asked that he may yet recover.

Professor and Mrs. W. G. Blaikie request that letters for them be no longer addressed to 9, Palmerston-road, Edinburgh, but to 2, Tantallon-terrace, North Berwick.

Rev. J. Pearce Clark, recently pastor of the Baptist church at Gunnersbury, is now temporarily resident at 45, Gildridge-road, Eastbourne. He is free to take preaching engagements.

Rev. Krikor Behesnilian, who has for some weeks been in Cyprus, awaiting his wife and family from Armenia, writes that at length his loved ones have arrived at Larnaca. Mr. Behesnilian expected to leave Cyprus for England on Thursday last.

Rev. T. J. Bass, vicar of St. Laurence's Church, is endeavouring to form a nurses' home in his part of blackest Birmingham. Two nurses have been engaged, and Mr. Bass appeals for contributions of money, furniture, nourishment, and appliances.

Dr. Baedeker tells, in a recent letter to a friend, of interesting visits to various parts of Central Europe, and of blessing on his labours. Budapest he describes as a rapidly-rising city, "the Chicago of the East." Dr. Baedeker purposes going to Constantinople, and afterwards visiting some orphanages and relief centres in Armenia.

Pastor Chiniquy will soon reach the ninetieth year of his eventful life. He is still active, and completing a new book, "Forty Years in the Church of Christ." The pastor preaches from time to time, and still draws large crowds of Frenchmen. His friends contemplate making him a testimonial on his birthday, in July next, to take the form of a sum of money in aid of his important enterprises in Montreal and the district of Quebec. Communications may be addressed to Mr. J. P. Picken, broker, 126, St. James's-street, Montreal, treasurer of the fund.

Foreign Missions.—Members and friends of the C.M.S. are invited to meet the members of committee at the Church Missionary House, Salisbury-square, on Thursday, Dec. 1, at 3.30 p.m., for prayer in connection with foreign missions.

A Conference for Bible study and the consideration of methods of Christian work was held at Mussoorie, India, September 14-24. It is noted that this movement will extend during the summer months to the various large hill stations in India.

British Chautauqua.—The first of the winter lectures will be delivered in the Haymerle Hall, Haymerle-road, Peckham Park-road, S.E., by Rev. C. Anderson Scott (of Kensington), subject: "The Gospels: their Date, how arrived at," on December 3, 1898, at 7 p.m.

Emgwali, Dohne, Cape Colony.—At our communion service on October 30, we had joy in admitting to the fellowship of the church twenty-seven people, eight of them by baptism. Our work in this district has prospered during the past year. Two new schools were opened during the year, and we hope another will be opened soon. Pray for us.

A. Welsh.

Channel Fleet at Gibraltar.—An effort is being made to help the men and bring Christian influence to bear upon them whilst in this port. Workers from different parts of the garrison have assisted, the ships have been visited, and Gospel letters written. During a seven days' mission at the Sailors' Institute several have professed conversion, and much good appears to have been done amongst the Christians.

Visitors to Hastings and St. Leonards will be heartily welcomed at the Y.M.C.A. Rooms. At the daily noon meeting workers in home missions have opportunity on Mondays of speaking about their work, a similar opening on Tuesdays being afforded to missionaries from the foreign field. All ministers and missionaries may obtain, free of charge, tickets entitling them to the use of the rooms, on application to the Hon. Sec., Mr. G. B. Howe.

"Figures of the True."—Mr. Frank Cockrem, of the Open-Air Mission, has, with the sanction of his committee, prepared a new pictorial lecture with the above title, which he is now ready to deliver occasionally in London or any part of the country in the interest of the Mission. The lecture is illustrated by specially prepared slides, representing the Tabernacle in the wilderness. The first delivery is fixed for Monday, Dec. 5, in the Talbot Tabernacle, Talbot-road, Bayswater, Pastor Frank H. White taking the chair at 8 p.m.

Temperance Notes.

Mr. Andrew Usher, the distiller, who died lately, prohibited any public-house on his property.

General Gallieni, the Governor of Madagascar, who is an absolute teetotaler, is doing his best to limit the use of alcohol in his colony.

A man was fined for drunkenness, and expired in the street after leaving the court. The coroner's jury recorded a verdict that death was caused by disease due to "constant nipping."

The Archbishop of Canterbury, as president of the National Temperance League, has issued, dated from Lambeth Palace, a preliminary invitation to the national and international temperance organisations throughout the world for a "World's Temperance Congress" to be held in London during 1900.

In connection with "Temperance Sunday," which was held in the Free Churches last Sunday, Mr. Arnold F. Hills, of the Thames Ironworks, has offered the sum of £5000 for the prosecution of the Sunday closing campaign in all the English constituencies on the condition that a like sum is raised by the churches and the temperance societies throughout the country.

The "Miff Tree."—Mr. Napoleon Smith recently gave his now well-known "Miff" lecture at the Gospel Hall, Wood Green, to an interested audience. The symbolical birds in the Miff Tree afforded much interest, and the lessons drawn from them by the lecturer were so practical that they could scarcely fail to accomplish much good.

North East London Gospel Mission.—The annual meeting of this useful Gospel Mission took place at Earlham Hall, near Dalston Station, on November 22. Mr. John McCall spoke some encouraging words to the workers. Mr. Chorley gave a most interesting account of the helpfulness of the mission, especially to the convalescents at the Homes of Rest, Lancing-on-Sea. He had many cases of blessing to tell of. Souls were being saved through the work of Miss Davis at Cubitt Town. Mr. A. Garstin, Mr. Ned Wright, Mr. Fisher, Mrs. Lazel, and others took part in the meeting, which was very encouraging in point of numbers.

Royal Normal College for the Blind.—The Duke of Westminster, in his capacity as president of the Royal Normal College and Academy of Music for the Blind, has issued a letter to the Press announcing that negotiations have been entered into and terms have been arranged for the reacquisition from the London School Board by the executive committee of the entire institution. On legal ground, the Education Department requires that all the money which has been expended by the School Board on capital account shall be paid into the School Board treasury prior to the retransfer. For this purpose £25,000 is required. Upwards of £6000 has already been subscribed, and an appeal is made for further assistance.

Zionism in London.—A branch of the English Zionist Federation has been established in West London. The Federation aims to give effect to the following resolutions, which were accepted by the Basle Congresses of 1897 and 1898:—"1. The acquiring of a legally safe-guarded home in Palestine for the Jewish people. 2. The fostering of the National idea in Israel. 3. The promoting and supporting of colonising and industrial enterprises in Palestine. 4. The using of Hebrew as a living language, and the fostering of Hebrew literature. 5. The establishing of schools and local libraries, and the taking of all such steps as may tend to promote the educational development of the Jews. 6. The publishing of an universal-Hebrew dictionary on historical and philological lines, embracing the whole of Hebrew literature, ancient and modern. 7. The establishing of athletic clubs for Jews. 8. The founding of a Jewish colonial bank, as an instrument towards the accomplishment of the above programme."

The Haven for Homeless Little Ones.—This useful institution at Walton-on-the-Hill, Surrey, is a spacious building, or rather series of buildings, capacious, healthy, and well fitted, in which numbers of children in unhappy circumstances are received, sheltered, and educated. "The hundreds of applications which we" (writes Mrs. Ransome Wallis, hon. sec. and treasurer) "receive every year, many of them containing stories of most cruel deception, would move any woman's heart to pity. We often wish that our subscribers and helpers could read these letters as they come in day by day. The work was begun on a very small scale in 1893, in dependence on God to raise us up helpers, and that we have now nearly a hundred children proves how He has supplied our need. The present great need of the work is that we should buy the Castle House and its grounds of eight acres as the freehold property, to be vested in trustees for the Haven for Homeless Little Ones."

THE BOOK WORLD.

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

The Young Crusader for 1898 gives, in bound-up form, the numbers of a readable little periodical, issued by the Church of England Temperance Society. (1s. Office, 4, Sanctuary, Westminster.)

There is always something good in Hand and Heart, edited by H. Somerset Bullock, M.A. The annual volume is filled with excellent reading, admirably illustrated. (2s. "Home Words" Office.)

Rev. Charles Bullock's monthly, The Fireside, continues its useful ministry, but it never looks better than when at this time of year it comes out in volume form, handsome without and excellent within. (7s. 6d. "Home Words" Office.) The frontispiece this year is an admirable portrait of the Duchess of York. There are serial stories by Agnes Giberne and Rev. C. W. Bardsley; sketches and papers on many topics; sermons and meditations by good men and true. As usual, there are selections from a wide survey of literature on hundreds of curious and interesting matters. The illustrations are numerous and good.

NELSON'S TEACHERS' BIBLES.

Bible readers have many series of helps and aids from which to select; and without instituting comparisons or dwelling upon distinctions and differences, it is as pleasant as it is easy to say a word in high commendation of Nelson's Teachers' Bibles, which have been issued in various sizes and bindings. This edition of the sacred Scriptures, in bold minion type, gives the text of the Old and New Testaments beautifully printed and accompanied by the usual references.

The additional matter consists of the Illustrated Bible Treasury, a compilation of great value, prepared under the editorship of Dr. William Wright. Results of the latest biblical research are given in this work, and the engravings, which are archæological and topographical, are over 350 in number. Many leading scholars in Great Britain and America were engaged upon this Treasury, which, with a large amount of information indispensable to the Bible student, includes a new concordance to the Authorised and Revised Versions, combined with a very useful subject-index and dictionary of Scripture proper names. Of course, there is also an atlas, with list of place names, including the latest identifications. Many a Sunday-school teacher would prize one of these Bibles, which in every feature are admirably suited for presentation purposes.

STORY BOOKS.

A Prince of Edom, by James Ballingall, B.D., is a tale designed to illustrate the period when David and Solomon ruled in Israel. (Alex. Gardner.)

Mrs. Molesworth is a favourite with many, and by The Laurel Walk her reputation is admirably sustained. There is a lost will and a ghost; but the story is a pleasant one, with a happy ending. (6s. Isbister & Co.)

A tale of North Devon, by Bessy Hawker, is entitled Overlooked, by which we are to understand "bewitched." The superstitious customs outlined by the way are, doubtless, "founded on fact." (3s. 6d. Wells Gardner, Darton & Co.)

Mrs. Stowe's Uncle Tom's Cabin will long be a classic story. It would be difficult to find a more serviceable edition than one issued by James Bowden (3s. 6d.), illustrated from drawings by Charles Copeland. The type is bold and clear, and the binding chaste and strong.

Mrs. L. T. Meade has added another to the number of tales depicting the anxieties of the Chartist days, entitled Cave Perilous. It presents some very exciting situations, and being fully illustrated and got up in a handsome form, it is admirably suited for presentation purposes. (3s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.)

A historical tale of exceptional interest is The Scourge of God: A Romance of Religious Persecution. By John Bloundelle-Burton. (6s. James Clarke & Co.) The scene is laid in France at the beginning of the eighteenth century, when the Camisards rose against the tyranny and cruelty of Louis XIV. As an imaginative creation, as well as an illustration of great historical events, the book deserves many readers.

Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co. are reissuing the works of the late J. G. Edgar. Cressy and Poictiers; or, The Story of the Black Prince's Page (3s. 6d.), is a capital boys' book, and has been well illustrated by Powell Chase and others. A new library edition of G. J. Whyte-Melville's novels has begun with the publication of Katerfelto; a Story of Exmoor (3s. 6d.), illustrated by Lucy E. Kemp-Welch. A volume of Australian stories, for the entertainment of elders rather than juveniles, is The Camp at Wandinong, by Ethel Turner.

STORIES FOR YOUNG PEOPLE.

Stolen or Strayed, by Harold Avery, is a story for young folks, got up in Messrs. Nelson's excellent style (1s.).

Two tales of home life are Joyce Macdonald, by Ethel S. Cann; and Rachel's Trust, by K. M. G. Girls will read them with interest and not without opportunities of profit. (1s. each. C. H. Kelly.)

"Christie's Old Organ," by Mrs. O. F. Walton, is a favourite still, and many will welcome a sequel in Christie, the King's Servant (1s. R.T.S.). It is a pleasure once again to meet with the old organ, and some of the old characters.

There are some exciting chapters in A Dreadful Mistake, by Geraldine Mockler (2s. 6d.). Younger boys will be delighted with Eric Sinclair's Luck, by A. B. Romney (1s). The former book is illustrated by William Rainey, R.I. (Blackie & Son.)

Those children who love fairy stories will welcome Mrs. Molesworth's book, entitled The Magic Nuts. The delightful wanderings of Leonore and Hildegarde in the borderland of the Fairies' Kingdom will charm our little friends. (Macmillan & Co. 2s. 6d.)

Messrs. Blackie & Son publish Her Friend and Mine, by Florence Coombe, an interesting story of two sisters, the scene of which is laid in Guernsey. It tells the story of school days and youthful diversions, and will entertain the young readers. W. Rainey furnishes some graphic illustrations.

Messrs. Partridge have issued some attractive and readable little books for children in Chrissy's Treasure, by Jennie Perrett; The Island House, by F. M. Holmes; Joe and Sally, by the author of "Grumbling Tommy"; and Puppy Dog Tales, by M. B. Maxwell, Jennie Chappell, and others. (6d. each.)

A Child in Westminster Abbey, and other stories, by Mary E. Palgrave, is a capital little book for boys and girls (2s. Religious Tract Society). There is more excitement in Captured by Indians, a tale of the American frontier, by Edward S. Ellis. (1s. 6d. Cassells.) We are taken still further afield in The Fortunes of the Charlton Family, an attractive addition to the "Chatterbox Library." (1s. 6d. Wells Gardner, Darton & Co.)

Among the publications of the Religious Tract Society are the following: Ruth's Path to Victory (1s. 6d.), by Evelyn L. Thomas; and Antonia's Promise (1s. 6d.), by the author of "Wapping Old Stairs." The former shows a path of discipline and trial; in the latter one of the characters is a wayward youth who was "sent down" from College. A Girl's Experiment (2s.), by Margaret Keston, tells of honest endeavour bringing its own reward; and The Wishing Well (2s.), by Lucy Taylor, finds fitting explanation in its secondary title, "Be content with such things as ye have."

Four excellent and admirably printed stories, published by R. Culley, Ludgate Circus-buildings, E.C., may be commended to those in search of Christmas presents or prizes. Gold and Glitter, by Jeanie Ferry, is a striking story of the misery caused by strong drink. Bessie's Ministry, by Alice J. Briggs, will teach young girls of "the good they may do while the days are going by." Lottie, Servant and Heroine, shows how real heroism is possible in lowly life. (1s. 6d. each.) Loyalty Rewarded, by Jeanie Ferry, illustrates the benefits of temperance and self-control. (2s.)

Stella Austin knows how to gain the favour of imaginative and lively young folks, if one may judge from her two stories just published by Wells Gardner, Darton, & Co. Our Next Door Neighbour (2s. 6d.) is a very diverting medley of fancy stories, with qualifying seriousness to salt the fun. For Old Sake's Sake (2s.) is full of whimsical humour, that abundantly gilds the pill of reflection. The Children of Swift Creek, by Noel West (2s., same publishers) is a tale of the free and untrammelled life of the Far West. Mr. A. Pearce's pictures illuminate the somewhat exciting narrative.

Two capital stories for boys and girls by Emily M. Bryant are—The Doings of Denis, and Other Stories, and Dolly and Syb at Boarding School. (1s. each.) Friend and Foe, by Alan-a-Dale (1s. 6d.), a very readable story of a Methodist soldier in Peninsular days, will have an interest for elders. Another picture of past times is Denis Patterson, Field Preacher (2s.), a story of early Methodism and John Wesley, from the practised pen of Kate Thompson Sizer. A still wider circle of readers should be secured by At the Gates of the Morning, a story of the Reformation in Kent (2s. 6d.), by Dora M. Jones. This last is worthy of special commendation at a time when lessons of bygone fidelity and devotion require to be taken to heart. (C. H. Kelly.)

Sun Glints for Cloudy Days, by Margaret Newnham (John H. Bell, 31, Castle-street, Edinburgh), may be said to realise the aim of the authoress to write a "cheerful, hopeful book for tired people." It is a neat little book, printed in extra large type, and worthy of extensive circulation.

The author of "Probable Sons" has given us another admirable story for lads in His Big Opportunity. (2s. Hodder & Stoughton.) It is not only most attractive as a naturally told story, but its moral will strike and stick. Mr. Cowell's live illustrations are finely reproduced.

Dr. Heywood Smith, in The Genesis of the Soul, finds in the opening verses of the Old Testament a picture or parable of man's soul-development. As a study, suggestive though slight, the booklet will be helpful to thoughtful Bible readers. (6d. net. H. J. Glaisher, 57, Wigmore-street, Cavendish-square, W.)

Year by year Rev. J. T. Wrenford, of Newport, Mon., issues a booklet message. This year's is as striking as any of its predecessors, alike in title and substance. Where Am I? is a serious question, and Dr. Wrenford's pages will assist many to give an answer as in the sight of God. (6d. per dozen. Partridge & Co.)

The "Heroines" series, by Frank Mundell (1s. 6d. each. S.S.U.), has included many attractive volumes. The latest is as good as the best, and is entitled Heroines of the Faith. "Perpetua of Carthage" and "The Wife of Richard Baxter" are two from many lives outlined in what is emphatically a "book for the times."

A pamphlet that deserves many readers is The Higher Critics and their Mistakes, by P. and R. H. (4d. nett. Marshall Brothers). The chapters originally appeared in The King's Own, and are evidently the result of wide and careful reading. For the purposes of distribution, copies may be had for 3s. per dozen, direct from the authors, at Oakley House, Spring-grove, Isleworth.

There are some books of the lighter sort that may be read for their illustration of history as well as for their own interest. One of these is The Adventures of Don Quixote de la Mancha, of which a capital edition, with coloured plates and hundreds of engravings, has been issued by Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co. (3s. 6d.) Old as well as young will find diversion in the pages of this famous work of satire.

The Light Side of Science, by Dr. Andrew Wilson (2s. 6d. James Bowden), will prove a capital companion for spare half-hours. The papers are popular in style, and deal with semi-scientific themes, and range from the infinitely little to the infinitely big. Dr. Wilson's encyclopædic knowledge makes him an authority on every-day subjects, and we can promise the reader no small entertainment as well as instruction.

A new Protestant book by W. Stanley Martin is Fire Ships, Fire Works, and Fire Brands. (Boards 1s., cloth 1s. 6d. W. Wileman.) The pages describe in a popular way conflicts for home and liberty, and show where Romanism has come in with her enslavements of body and soul. Such books as this and its predecessor, "Some Famous Bonfires," should advance the cause of right and good among the people of our land.

Children who are so happy as to possess a copy of Darton's Sunday Pleasure Book will count on the return of Sunday afternoon. The illustrated readings on Bible topics are well adapted to the youthful mind, while the "missing word" exercises, outlines for colouring, and verses for illumination, are sure to instruct as well as entertain children who have the privilege of Christian teaching and example. (2s. 6d. Wells Gardner, Darton & Co.)

"Blessed be Egypt" is a booklet giving some account of present missionary effort in Egypt, and the story of the Lord's leading of the Egypt Mission Band. Edited by Wm. J. W. Roome, of Belfast, these pages cover a ground that should interest many at the present time. Moreover, they outline the lives of workers who speak of blessing received at Keswick Convention, and of impulse through the agency of the Student Volunteer Movement. "Candidates in waiting" will read this booklet with pleasure and profit. (6d. and 1s. Marshall Bros.)

In his eightieth year, Rev. Henry Harris, B.D., formerly rector of Winterbourne-Bassett, Wilts, republishes, after careful revision, an essay which he first issued thirty years ago. The little book is entitled The Claims of the Priesthood Considered, and an appendix deals with "The Church and the Priesthood." The position is substantially that of Thirlwall, Lightfoot, and Westcott. As a thoughtful contribution to a great controversy, from an Evangelical point of view, this little work deserves a hearty welcome. (2s. 6d. Henry Frowde.)

We have received the Christmas numbers of the Queen (1s.) and Weldon's Ladies' Journal (6d.). They are full of the usual attractions of the season in the way of pictures, tales, fashion plates, etc.

Church of England.

The resignation of the Bishop of Bangor will take effect at the end of the year.

The Bishop of Natal is compelled to return to this country as soon as possible, in order to undergo an operation under a specialist.

The National Protestant Church Union has already sold more than 10,000 copies of the manual on "English Church Teaching," which is now in its third edition.

The Rock says: "The Bishop of Oxford positively had the audacity to forbid Rev. S. H. Soole, of Grey Friars Church, Reading, preaching Protestant sermons in his own church on Nov. 6."

Prebendary Webb-Peploe has publicly announced that, if the St. Paul's processional cross is carried before him, when he preaches in the cathedral, he intends to denounce it in the pulpit.

"Two friends" have just sent a cheque for 100 guineas to Rev. W. Carlile for the purpose of providing and equipping a third Church Army Mission and Colportage Van for the Exeter Diocese.

The Bishop of Rochester last week dedicated a new church in connection with Gonville and Caius College Mission and Settlement, which has been erected at a cost of over £4000.

The Bishop of London has ordained two deaconesses by imposition of hands at St. Andrew's House, Tavistock-crescent, and given them a regular commission, licensing them to Hendon and Christ Church, Marylebone.

A committee appointed to secure the erection of seven new churches in Plymouth report that all the necessary sites have been secured, five of the number having been given. It is expected that the whole seven churches will be built within five years.

An enthusiastic meeting on behalf of foreign mission work was held in Exeter Hall on Thursday last, under the auspices of the London Junior Clergy Missionary Association. The Archbishop of Canterbury presided, and the large hall was crowded.

The Bishop of Wakefield has recently made a tour of the slums of the city, and in concluding a sermon at Wakefield Cathedral, at which the Mayor and Corporation were present, he strongly urged the necessity for the improvement of the dwellings of the poor.

A deputation from the Church Missionary Society, headed by Sir John Kennaway, M.P., has waited upon Lord Kitchener, to urge upon him the desirability of establishing missions in the Soudan. The interview was private. It is understood that the Sirdar promised to comply with the wishes of the deputation as far as he was able.

The church accommodation at Cromer has become wholly inadequate, owing to the growth of the town, and in the season overflow services have been held at the Town-hall. An effort is being made now to erect a chapel-of-ease, and at a meeting of the parishioners last week it was decided to purchase a suitable site, at a cost of £950.

It has been resolved by the Evangelical party to arrange such a demonstration on the eve of the reopening of Parliament as will make an impression upon our legislators, the object being to emphasise the absolute unanimity of the Evangelical opinion against Ritualism. The voices of two Evangelical prelates, the Bishops of Liverpool and Sodor and Man, will be heard.

A corporal in a well-known line regiment recently received a legacy of £100. For some time previously he had been doing Gospel work amongst his comrades, and on receiving his legacy he spent £20 on obtaining his discharge, applied to the Church Army to be trained as an evangelist, and was accepted. He has already paid another £20 for the discharge of one of his old comrades who has also been accepted.

The Church Congress at Ballarat was attended by the Archbishop of Sydney, several bishops, and numerous members of the clergy from all parts of Australia. Bishop Thornton delivered an address, severely attacking the conduct, character, morals, and manners of the people of Victoria. Great indignation has been excited, and the Press criticises the address unfavourably. Young Australians are especially indignant.

Congregational.

At the last monthly meeting of the London Congregational Board, Dr. Horton delivered an address on Romanism in the Church of England.

Rev. J. McClune Uffen, of Dorchester, has held special meetings for men only and for women only subsequent to the ordinary Sunday night services, with a view to stimulating practical interest in religion.

The sixth anniversary of Rev. H. Russell's pastorate of Caversham Hill Chapel was lately celebrated. The flourishing condition of the church was spoken of with great thankfulness. Sixty-seven members have been received into the church during the past six years.

At the annual meeting of Perth Church (Rev. W. Finlay) two motions—(1) to make total abstinence a condition of membership; and (2) to refuse admission to all directly engaged in the liquor trade—were defeated, the latter chiefly on the ground that the usage of the church made such unnecessary.

Baptist.

The "diamond" jubilee of the church at Alloa, N.B., has recently been celebrated, when Rev. Jervis Coats, D.D., preached to large congregations.

Mr. T. E. Warner, secretary of the Irish Baptist Home Mission, has concluded a seven weeks' preaching and lecturing tour in Scotland on behalf of the funds of the Society.

At the thirty-first anniversary of Pastor Hazzard, The Lighthouse, Bow Common, E., the report showed increase all along the line. Thirty-four had been baptized and thirty had been added to the church.

Calvary Baptist Church of New York City, whose pastor is Dr. Robert S. McArthur, a Canadian, was founded fifty-two years ago under the name of Hope Chapel. Since that time it has had a total membership of 4445, it has educated 100 students for the ministry, and it has given more than £400,000 to benevolence and missions.

On Sunday last the pastor of West Green Church, Tottenham (Rev. John Edmonds), baptized thirteen candidates, nine of whom were young men. The large hall near West Green Station, which has been taken by the church for Sunday evening services, is now well filled with an appreciative audience, and there are frequent conversions.

Methodist.

The Wesleyan Book Room is preparing a new Welsh hymn and tune book.

The annual report of the Cork Methodist Association records a prosperous year's work.

The Secretary of State for War has appointed the Rev. Owen S. Watkins Chaplain to the Wesleyan troops in Crete.

The mission belonging to the Established Church, Obelisk-street, Guildford, has become a Primitive Methodist mission.

Hull P.M. Council has formed a sites committee to watch the growth of the town and secure sites in rising neighbourhoods before the value of land reaches a prohibitive price.

Rev. James Thompson, President of the South African Wesleyan Conference, has arrived in England to seek medical advice for a painful disease, and has undergone a severe operation. His duties as president and chairman of the district will be discharged by the ex-president, the Rev. James Scott.

Much interest has been aroused in Newcastle-under-Lyme by the visit of the President of the Methodist New Connexion (Rev. D. Heath) to his native town on the occasion of the opening of newly-built commodious Sunday schools. His brother (Ald. Heath) is the treasurer of the new enterprise, which is costing about £1,800.

The Wesleyan Metropolitan Chapel Building Fund sends out its thirtieth annual report. In addition to twenty-one sites already in the possession of the committee, nine new sites have been secured during the year. The income for the twelve months past has been £5598, of which £3537 is from investments, and £1502 from subscriptions and collections.

A number of Wesleyan ministers in Ireland are indisposed in the active work, Rev. Dr. Hollingsworth, Principal of Wesley College, Dublin, has been seriously ill, but is now much better. Rev. Samuel Cowdy is still unfit for circuit duties, and Revs. John W. Jones (Downpatrick), James Wherry (Castleblaney), and W. A. H. Robinson (Clones) have had to obtain supplies.

At Oxford-place Chapel, Leeds, the Rev. H. Price-Hughes, Dr. H. J. Pope, of London, and other leading Wesleyans were present, and explained the objects contemplated by the "Million" scheme; 30,020 guineas were promised during the day. This, with the 70,000 guineas promised at the inaugural gatherings held in London a fortnight ago, swells the net results of the first two great meetings to 100,000 guineas, or a tenth of the required amount.

Presbyterian.

Dr. Whyte has opened the new mission premises erected on the site of the old Cowgatehead Church, Edinburgh.

Rev. John McNeill has placed himself at the disposal of the Free Church Highland Committee till the end of next May.

Rev. G. G. Stott, assistant minister in South Leith parish church, has accepted a call to St. James's Presbyterian Church, Dulwich.

A member of the Wesleyan Methodist Connexion has, through Rev. Dr. Monro Gibson, promised £1000 to the Church Extension Movement of the English Presbyterians.

The new hall at Muswell Hill was opened for public worship by Rev. Dr. Dykes. The hall, which seats about 300, was crowded, and large numbers of people were unable to gain admission.

At a meeting of the Nomination Board, on the motion of Principal Dykes, seconded by Rev. Dr. Morison, Rev. Dr. Charles Moinet, of Bromley, was selected for the Moderatorship of the next English Presbyterian Synod.

The American Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions has declared itself ready to enter on work in the Philippine Islands, provided funds are contributed for that specific purpose. The church in Yonkers, N.Y. (Dr. G. F. Pentecost), has contributed the first gift, 1000 dols., for this purpose.

Salvation Army.

In memory of their own departed little ones, Commissioner and Mrs. Booth-Helberg, of Paris, have converted the house next to theirs into an orphanage.

Out of a total of one hundred officers in the Marathi Province only six are English, ninety-one being Marathis raised in the province.

The officer in charge of the Salvation Army Naval and Military Home, Hong Kong, has been kept busy with the blnejackets on temporary leave, who landed from the various ships of H.M. Navy, that have been passing and repassing recently.

Fallen Asleep.

Rev. J. B. FRENCH, assistant sec. of the Bible Lands Missions Aid Society, aged sixty-three.—Miss MARY LIZZIE LUCKETT, daughter of Rev. G. Luckett, pastor of Syston Congregational Church.—Dr. JOHN ADAMSON HONEY, of Inchture Parish, near Dundee, at the age of eighty-nine. Dr. Honey spent all his life in the ministry of this parish, having been ordained there in 1836.—Rev. HEMAN LINCOLN WAYLAND, D.D., of Philadelphia, at the age of sixty-eight.—Mr. ROBERT ROWLAND, J.P., of Portmadoc, one of the chief supporters of Welsh Calvinistic Methodism.—Mrs. E. BATTY, a devoted Wesleyan Sunday-school worker, of Bishop Auckland.—Mr. WM. PORTER, of Leicester; he held many offices in the Wesleyan Church.—Rev. JOHN HUGILL; he entered the Wesleyan ministry in 1842, and contributed much to the consolidation of Methodism in the rural districts.—Mr. CHRISTOPHER MOODY, of Leeds, a devoted Methodist, aged seventy-nine.—At the age of seventy-two, Mrs. RACHEL BACKHOUSE, of Pilmore Hall, near Darlington, for many years a prominent member of the Society of Friends.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

IT is almost superfluous for us to commend to our readers the consecutive expositions of Scripture from the pen of Rev. F. B. Meyer, which appeared as OUR DAILY HOMILY, in their book form. The third neat volume, containing the daily portions on the Psalms and Canticles, is now ready, and can be had from our publishers, price 1s. 6d.

A very fruitful time for buttonholing men is between breakfast and dinner on Sunday morning. They get up late for breakfast, and about ten or eleven numbers of them hang about the streets, listless, helpless, vague, and vacant ; but sober. At one o'clock the drink-traps are set, and in many the poisonous alcohol does its work. Between eleven and one on the first day of the week is not a close time but emphatically open time for the fishers of men.

Mr. Leonard Weaver has taken advantage of this fact, and on Sunday mornings he has welcomed a thousand men in the great tent at Tottenham, and not a few have stepped out of the losing army and joined the conquering ranks of Jesus, the Lord of hosts.

Is it not time for the Churches to move out of the ruts and do the King's business for eternity with the courage, enterprise, and ingenuity which successful merchants display in the doomed traffic, over which there will soon be weeping and wailing, for in one hour so great riches is come to nought ?

It is one of our settled convictions that the study of prophecy is not intended to make us prophets beyond the express statements of Scripture. While, therefore, we have not closed our columns against the expression of opinion, we feel called upon to say that there does not seem to us any sufficient Scripture warrant for fixing the dates of coming events, as in the specification which is advertised on page 7 of our present issue.

The establishment, at the instance of Lord Kitchener, of a great institution in the Soudan for teaching boys secular knowledge, and giving men a technical training, must have the sympathy of all Christian Englishmen. At Edinburgh, Lord Kitchener is reported to have said :—

> Our first task will be to civilise the inhabitants of those vast districts in the Valley of the Nile which it has fallen to our lot to be responsible for administering...We wish to prevent as far as possible the introduction with trade of those pernicious adjuncts, the liquor traffic and dishonest dealing with natives, which too frequently in new countries accompany it.

It may seem strange at first sight that a college bearing Gordon's name should have no place for religion, but, considering the work to be done, the auspices under which it will be conducted, and the mixture of tribes that will be represented under its roof, the decision to leave the teaching of religion to other agencies is a wise one. We are confident that the C.M.S. alone, to say nothing of other missionary organisations, will strain every nerve to meet, in an adequate way, the great opportunity ; and thus Christianity, as a voluntary force working for the good of men in things temporal and spiritual, will be self-revealed and self-vindicated. It needs no worldly support from those who do not love it. The best memorial it can rear to Gordon's memory is to win the sons of the desert for Christ, as Gordon won the lads of Woolwich.

Canon Eyton, in objecting to the obligatory use of the Athanasian Creed, has used some words relative to the forming of that creed which have an application to the forming of all creeds. He said :—

> The Holy Spirit has taught the Church a deepened reverence since the days when this hymn was composed, and to recite it is to do violence to his most illuminating inspirations. Because we believe so intensely in the Trinity of Persons and Unity of God, because we see in the one the inspiration of our social life and in the other the fountain of all real adoration, we resent the attempt of an ever-defining age to obscure the eternal truth by describing it in the language of the philosophy of a single period.
> "The language of the philosophy of a single period"—it is in adopting and standing by this once lucid form, but lucid no longer, that we get wrong. The language of the Bible, which has a fitness for every age, is the only adequate and safe language in which to shape and express our beliefs. It is a language that is always living.

In a sermon lately preached on "The Living Departed" Canon Newbolt said that "the Church does not pray for the dead," by which he means the unbelieving and unholy dead. "Men, if they are to have a participation in the prayers of the faithful after death, must have done something here to earn it by their lives." The Church prays for those who have departed in God's faith and fear, because they are not dead, but alive. It reads very strangely to anyone who is more accustomed to the language of the Gospels and Epistles than to that of so-called "Catholic Manuals of Devotion" that there are new trials which await them beyond death—not the trial of probation, but in some ways the fiercer trial of acceptance.

> Excellence there, before the beauty of the heavenly Exemplar, is a more difficult thing than excellence here before the blackness and horror of a possible degradation. And therefore we pray for them. We know nothing at all of the posts they fill, the work they are doing, the rest which they enjoy, the discipline which they are undergoing. We merely fill up the void with our prayers ; we keep up the same pressure which we kept here while they worked, and so we say, Grant them rest.

How different the very cast of thought here from our Saviour's words, "To-day shalt thou be with me in Paradise" or from St. Paul's words, "At home with the Lord."

There has been time for the Ritualists to express their opinion on the action of the bishops, and so far as they have done so the promise of obedience and of a cessation of hostilities is not very bright. The Guardian counsels forbearance on the part of the Evangelicals, and advises them to make up their minds to live side by side with the High Church ; to which the Evangelicals will no doubt reply in due time that they did not originate the trouble, nor do they perpetuate it. It is like the fable of the wolf and the lamb. The Church Times thinks that the bishops have weakly yielded to popular clamour ; but, it asks, What of that ? They have not issued a joint pronouncement on the new policy, and "the six points on which we have always insisted, and shall always insist, are left practically intact." It also charges the bishops with going against things they have tolerated. The Church Review calls for "No surrender, and no compromise" with regard to vestments, lights, incense, the mixed chalice, unleavened bread, processional crosses, and the like.

The American Outlook recently published an excellent editorial, addressed "To the Clergy," deprecating the growing custom among many preachers of turning aside from spiritual instruction as such, and dealing with the public issues of the day from an ethical and religious point of view. Two valid reasons are given why this should be avoided. First, it is very few preachers who possess the necessary expert knowledge to deal with the tangled affairs of the world ; and, secondly, if they forsake their proper spiritual function of illuminating and inspiring the individual life, there is no one else in the community to take up this work. Further, current issues can be adequately brought in as illustrations of the great principles of the Gospel, and this can be done in such a way as at once to arrest attention and help to drive home the great central truths of revelation. It is all a question of emphasis, of putting first things first, and of enforcing eternal truth at the point of the practical and living issues of life.

The American Peace Commissioners, now sitting in Paris, have incidentally taught a sound lesson to those who are tempted to relax their ordinary religious habits when away from home. In Paris the great day for racing is the Sunday, and on a recent occassion, as President Faure was advised to keep away from attending certain races for prudential reasons, he sent the Commisioners invitations to occupy his box. They declined. The American Christian Advocate, commenting on this act of moral courage, says :—

> The Americans declined to go to the races on the Sunday, for which we thank them fervently...All honour to such representative Americans abroad... Their refusal to violate the Sabbath has its great weight and enduring moral.

Here is a lesson which many travelling Englishmen greatly need. The laxity of some religious people in their conduct when abroad is by no means creditable to themselves or honouring to their religion.

Business men please note. In a Boston hotel sixty gentlemen dined together recently. One of their number had just returned from a visit to a distant country, where missions are in successful operation. He spoke of the amazing progress of the Gospel during the last few years. Other brief addresses on the same topic followed. The meeting was designed to show these men what a glorious thing it is for a man who is making money to-day to see the world-wide opportunities for his benevolence. The end was this:

> The enthusiasm there generated crystallised in a few days into a definite and handsome pledge to the American Board of Foreign Missions.

Never were there so many encouragements as now for men of business to see the glory there is in being "co-workers with God." Missions pay in every respect.

The need for a Peace Conference is being demonstrated more vividly than ever. A few months ago Russia's "forward policy" in the navy was promptly met by the Government of this country by a large increase in the naval programme. Just now news comes to hand that the German standing army is to be increased by 40,000 men, involving an additional annual expenditure of eight million marks, and that the American army is to be raised to 100,000, in view of the new colonial policy of the United States. It is evident that nothing short of a clear and rigid international understanding can possibly stem this terrible waste of human energy and treasure. Here is a call upon ministers and churches during the coming season of "peace and goodwill," to revive the drooping cause of peace in this country, which has recently suffered greatly through the glamour of our military triumphs and the deep distrust of foreign nations which seems to animate our leading statesmen of all political parties.

Meanwhile the peace sentiment in Russia has won one of its first victories in a way which proves the sincerity of the Czar's personal attitude on the question. The "Spirit Wrestlers" or Dukhobortsi of that country, which is a sect opposed to all war, have appealed for release from the duties of conscription, and have been so far met that they are allowed to leave the country without hindrance, and to emigrate. Count Serge Tolstoi, a son of the great writer, is promoting the emigration of a large party of these people to Canada. Russia's loss of some of her noblest-spirited citizens will here be Britain's gain. This significant act on the part of the Czar marks another step in loss of prestige which has fallen on M. Pobedonostzeff, the Procurator and arch-persecutor of the Holy Synod, during the present reign. It would seem, indeed, that a new era of progress is about slowly to dawn on Russia under the present régime. The Czar has shown a strong personal leaning towards the side of mercy and liberty.

In the Revue des Deux Mondes—the leading French literary magazine—on American Catholicism, an attempt is made to give renewed currency to the notion that in the "freest democracy in the world" Roman Christianity is rapidly becoming dominant. The article well illustrates the "fallacy of figures." It is a bare fact that whereas in 1773 the United States had only 40,000 Roman Catholic citizens it has now, nominally, 10,000,000. This looks at first sight "providential and miraculous." A little examination of the fact, however, puts a different complexion upon it. The increase is due (1) to the annexation of the Catholic State of Louisiana and of some Mexican territories; and (2) to the rapid immigration of enormous numbers of Catholics from Europe. So greatly do these two facts alter the case that if there had not been a perpetual leakage from Catholicism in the States, instead of to it, the present number of Catholics in that country ought to be twenty instead of ten millions. The alarm, thus, should be felt by Catholics, and not by Protestants.

The International Anti-Anarchist Council, which is sitting in Rome, seems actuated, if report speaks truly, by a reactionary spirit in its treatment of this awful problem. Its deliberations appear to be directed to stamping out the evil rather than to the removal of its causes. These are, clearly, the absence of religious faith and principle among the lowest classes, and the terrible social and political pressure which weighs them down in Continental countries. The negative effects of priestcraft and the positive evils of militarism are the two fountain-heads of the evil thing. Enlightenment, and widening liberty, and earnest evangelisation are the real remedies for this cult of hatred between man and man. All the great Anarchical crimes of the last ten years have been committed by men brought up in oppressed Catholic countries. In the free air of Protestantism, and amid the stimulating institutions of liberty-loving countries, there is no organised anarchism; it ceases its machinations because its motive-power vanishes

Rev. B. Senior's experiences in going to see publicans in their houses in Bradford, for the purpose of holding conversation with them on spiritual themes, agree very closely with those of other workers who have gone to other publicans in the same spirit and for the same object. He never received a word of abuse from either publican or customer. He went when he thought the houses would be quiet, and his purpose was just to try and represent Jesus to the landlords and landladies, and try to prove himself a friend to them. We agree with him in thinking that publicans are often too coolly treated by temperance reformers. Mr. Senior's closing words were peculiarly solemn:

> He had more hope in the conversion of the publicans of Bradford than in the conversion of the many proud Pharisees who were in the Church and who despised the publicans.

For some time prize drawings or lotteries have occupied considerable attention at Northampton. So much so, that the whole question has been brought before the Home Office. They have been usually arranged for charitable objects, but, of course, this has nothing whatever to do with the legal aspect of the question. Advertised extensively, thousands of tickets have been disposed of. Public men, even town councillors and magistrates, have been known to preside at the drawings. We cannot understand how the practice has been allowed to continue for so long a time. That it has sometimes been connected with philanthropic and religious purposes only calls forth more emphatic condemnation.

It is said that very "strong pressure has been brought to bear upon the Chief Constable by headquarters." There should be no reluctance on the part of the community to discountenance the pernicious custom forthwith, and respect the majesty of the law. A grave responsibility rests upon those who in any way appear to approve of it.

The Hospital devotes a good article to the physique and diet of schoolboys. It would be well if half the same attention were given to providing them with healthy mental food in their reading. Parents are often sadly lacking in the duty of supervising the kind of books their sons devour, and the character of the periodicals which they take. Anyone travelling in trains who keeps his eyes open cannot but note the number of trashy papers and cheap novelettes that are read by the average schoolboy returning home from school. In these days of cheap and wholesome literature there is no excuse for failing to direct the attention of the young to the splendidly interesting and helpful books that keep pouring out of the press, which, if once the habit were formed, would purify their taste and lift them into a pure mental and spiritual atmosphere. There is no better antidote to poisonous books than a healthy taste for good books. Many lads and girls go astray not from vicious tendency but from lack of helpful direction.

A South African missionary gave some startling figures to an English audience recently as to the warm and self-sacrificing interest taken by his converts in the extension of missionary work. His own native congregation, he said, consisted of 500 members, and these 500 between them collected £80 a year for foreign missions alone; and yet the wages of these poor people amounted to no more than one shilling per man a day. Here is surely a splendid object-lesson to Christians at home. The extreme difficulty of collecting subscriptions for missionary and other supremely deserving causes would soon vanish if (1) every professing Christian were to have a share in the work; (2) their gifts were carefully calculated in proportion to their income; and (3) they quickened their interest in the work by reading missionary literature, so that they might assure themselves of the way their money is spent, and the splendid openings that continually clamour for more workers. Ignorance and apathy and self-absorption are the great hindrances.

The serious nature of the plague in India is not easily realised by us at home; but it might be seen if we were to take some solitary instance of its ravages. Bangalore, for instance, a city of 120,000 inhabitants, will be depopulated in five months from the present time at the present death-rate. We hope and believe that the authorities will successfully deal with the scourge, but in the meantime the losses are terrible, and the people are fleeing for their lives. The hindrance of the plague to Christian work is very great. Schools that had 600 scholars have only 100, or perhaps as few as forty; and even were the calamity now to cease it will be years before the lost ground can be recovered. Our sympathy should be with our brethren in their great trouble, and our prayers should be for it to be overruled for the spread of the Gospel and for the good of the whole country.

Madagascar is a possession which thus far has brought the French invaders neither honour nor profit. Although the invasion was to a certain extent successful it was at the cost of a serious loss of soldiers; somewhere about 7000, we believe, perished between the coast and the capital. No money has been made, but a great deal lost, because a restrictive policy was adopted which drove capital away and locked up the resources of the country. And now comes the bubonic plague in a very virulent form, on the top of a generally bad state of health. The conquerors would have done wisely to retain all the English missionaries and the native Christians, but having acted largely on a policy of persecution they will have to face the consequences. They are said to be learning wisdom, and to be employing the Hovas whom they first of all sought to exterminate, but meanwhile irreparable injury has been done.

A Golden Opportunity.

LONDON, with its teeming multitudes of eternity-bound men and women, presents to every Christian heart a problem hard to solve, viz.: How to reach the thousands of non-church-goers, who seem to be drifting further and further from even the form of religious life. These are not only found in the East End, but in the more respectable districts of this great city, where during the past few years miles of houses have been erected and filled with people of every class, most of whom are settling down to an irreligious life. For it is a lamentable fact that only the few enter church, chapel, or mission-hall; the many do not. It is to be feared that unless God in his grace shall send a widespread Revival, that shall first awaken his believing people, and then arrest the attention of these unreached masses, indifference will lead on to heartless infidelity and all its baneful attendants.

Such a Revival is possible. Yea! in the hearts of many of God's servants there is a conviction that it is at hand, for already there are indications of increased interest and blessing in the Gospel. As one sharing these impressions, I would like to say to every evangelist and Christian worker that there is a golden opportunity of special work, which will soon have passed and gone for ever. As far as London is concerned, my observations are based upon the experience of the past three months' effort with the great American tent at Dalston and Tottenham. There is no need to add more as to the tremendous need existing in every part of this great city. Some may imagine that these districts are well provided with churches and other meeting places, but that is not the case. For example, Tottenham has a population of 100,000, and all the churches and mission-halls could not seat 15,000 at any one time. We must also face the sad fact, that whilst all these organisations are doing more or less for the salvation of the people, they fail to attract the masses about whom we are most concerned, and none are more willing to own this than godly pastors and church workers.

With these things freely admitted, I would like to ask the prayerful consideration of all as to whether there should not be at once a united effort made to reach every district of London in the year 1899 on the lines of the tent, which has proved such a great success, where we have demonstrated three things:—

(1) That the masses can be reached in such buildings, where rich and poor, without reserve, can come to a simple earnest service.
(2) That the Gospel clearly and definitely preached is the power of God to salvation to every condition of people.
(3) That the work, apart from initiative expenses, might be made practically self-supporting.

But the urgency of the work thrills my soul. There is now in crowded thoroughfares suitable land that may be used, which in another year or two will be built upon. Next year from ten to twenty movable tents, with seating capacity from 1500 to 3000 each, might be placed round London, and in them from 30,000 to 50,000 people may hear the message of salvation week by week. Could not a committee of representative men be at once formed to arrange and carry out details, and a sub-committee be formed in every district of London to act in unison with the central committee? £3000 will be sufficient to buy ten such tents. This amount such a committee would soon receive for such a work.

Then, could not prayer unions be started in every part of the city, where few or many may come together weekly to pray definitely for a Revival? The well-proved evangelists may also be brought together, and a plan of operations be arranged. Such a scheme carried out in dependence upon the Holy Spirit of God must succeed, and bring to the great city a revival which will send its vibrations throughout the land.

Religion and Business.

THE DIFFICULTIES OF CHRISTIAN MEN IN COMMERCIAL LIFE.

By Pastor F. E. MARSH, Sunderland.

DIFFICULTIES should never daunt our determination to resist the wrong, nor make us refrain from doing the right. Anything worth accomplishing is sure to be more or less hard to carry out.

It was my sorrowful duty and privilege recently to visit a mother whose son had died from typhoid fever. He was a bright Christian lad of twenty years. As I was coming away the mother showed me the following lines which he had written in his note-book:—

I am but one,
But I am one;
I cannot do everything,
But I can do something;
What I can do,
I ought to do;
What I ought to do,
God helping me, I will do.

The last two lines should govern the actions of every Christian in the commercial world. I will give by way of illustration three incidents related to me by Christian young men quite recently.

A young fellow, by dint of hard work and careful study, had risen to the important post of captain of a steamer. He made several successful voyages, when, through no carelessness of his own, the ship met with an accident, and had to be laid up in consequence. It was an old vessel, and in any case needed extensive repairs. As captain of the boat, the young man had to prepare a statement for the underwriters as to the amount needed to repair the damage. The owners suggested that in making out the statement he might include the other needed repairs.

"But," he remarked, "these are not the result of the accident." He was reminded that such things were often done, but nobly refused to be a party to such lying and misrepresentation. What was the result? The situation was made so uncomfortable that he had to leave the employment of the company. There was one thing he did not lose, and that was a good conscience.

A grocer's assistant, employed by a cash grocer and provision dealer, came to me and asked my advice. He said, "We have often to sell one article at two prices. For instance, a person comes in and wants to taste the 1s. 1d. butter. I am asked if there is not something a little better. The butter sold at 1s. 2d. is the same. The customer does not know this, and fancies the 1s. 2d. is better, and so takes it. Advantage is taken of the purchaser's ignorance, and she pays a penny more than she ought. If I were to tell her the butters are one and the same, I should lose my situation. What would you advise me to do?"

"Tell your master," I replied, "that as a Christian man you cannot take advantage of a customer's ignorance, and you will not sell the same article for two prices."

"I must lose my place," he replied.

"Better that than forfeit the blessing of a clear conscience."

The next case was that of a young fellow who was employed by a wholesale firm as clerk. A certain article is sold at a given price, which is less than the article cost. How is the loss supplied? Traders cannot live by losses. The traveller who obtains the order instructs the clerk to charge for so much more than is sent, so that the firm may not lose. The young clerk is instructed to make out the invoice accordingly.

Now he is in a dilemma. He knows he is doing wrong, and comes and asks me what he shall do. I unhesitatingly say, "Refuse to make out the account. You will very likely be reported to the head of the firm, and then give your reason for refusing to make out the statement." The young fellow did as I suggested, with the following result. The head of the firm did not know what was going on, and when he found the young Christian refused to make out a false statement, he commended his action, and said such transactions were not to be carried on in the name of the firm again. Better to lose the order than to rob the customer. These incidents suggest

SOME IMPORTANT CONSIDERATIONS.

Before the counter. Customers, in their desire to obtain bargains, often suggest to those from whom they buy, a system of cheating, by their beating down methods. The employé knows that his situation will not be open long, if he does not obtain orders, or allows the customer to leave the shop without purchasing. In five cases out of ten the purchaser is to blame for the short weight given, the inferior article sold, the misrepresentation made, the lie told, and the advantage which is taken.

Behind the counter. There are certain broad principles which should actuate master and man. Under no circumstances should a lie be told. Advantage should never be taken of a customer's ignorance. There should never be two prices for one article sold under the same conditions. Misrepresentation should not for one moment be countenanced. Goods sold should be according to sample. A fixed and honest percentage should always be obtained, for the business man should be honest to himself as well as to others. In a word, consistent and righteous action should ever be the rule.

WHAT WILL BE THE CONSEQUENCE

if these principles are acted upon? Those who are not Christians will believe in our Christianity. An unconverted man said to a young banker, as he noted his consistent life, "I did not believe in the conversion of the apostle Paul, but I believe it now since I have seen you."

Ruskin says, "The soldier must die rather than forsake the ranks; the pastor starve rather than preach with flattering tongue; the physician risk the deadliest disease rather than flee from the plague; the lawyer sacrifice brief and fee rather than countenance injustice; and the merchant and manufacturer suffer bankruptcy rather than adulterate their provisions, or provide for the public inadequate or destructive material." And may we not add: The employé should starve rather than tell a lie, for it is better to be wronged than to do wrong.

Y.W.C.A. and Missions.—The missionary evening of the Highgate-road Branch of the Y.W.C.A. was held last Thursday. The sums contributed this year amounted to £147 11s. 1d., £90 of which will go for foreign missions, and the rest for the maintenance of the home and institute. Messrs. Saviolege and Lorraine, at present on furlough, gave an account of their work among one of the hill tribes in Northern India.

The Seven Sayings of the Cross.*

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

(Concluded.)

IV. "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?"

IT would be between eleven o'clock and noon that these incidents took place; but from noon till three in the afternoon a pall of darkness hung over the cross and city. We know not how it came, but it appears to have silenced all the uproar which had surged around the cross, and to have filled the minds of all with awe. Men might have gazed rudely on his dying agony; Nature refused to behold it. Men had stripped Him, but an unseen hand drew drapery about Him. For three hours it lasted, and was a befitting emblem of the darkness that enveloped his soul. Of course, the Father had not forsaken Him; but God, as the Judge of all the earth, must turn away from Him when made sin for us, though as Father He never loved Him more tenderly.

Do you wonder that He felt thus, and question how such a forsaking had been possible at such an hour? There is but one explanation. This was not a normal human experience. Only once in the history of the race has all iniquity been laid on one head; only once has the curse of the sin of the world been borne by one heart; only once has it been possible, in drinking the cup of death, to taste death for every man. "He who knew no sin was made sin for us." "He was wounded for our transgressions, bruised for our iniquities." On no other hypothesis than that Jesus was the Lamb of God, bearing away the sin of the world, can you account for the darkness of that mid-day midnight which obscured his soul. I cannot tell what transpired; I have no philosophy of the Atonement to offer; I only believe that the whole nature of God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto Himself; and that, in virtue of what was done there, we may apply for forgiveness to

THE FAITHFULNESS AND JUSTICE OF GOD.

V. "I thirst."—During the hours of spiritual anguish, our Lord was largely oblivious of his physical needs; now, as they passed away, they began to assert themselves. Inflammation, spreading from hands and feet, had resulted in a fever of thirst. He had refused the medicated drink offered at the beginning of his sufferings, because He had no desire to avoid one throb of anguish which lay in his path; but there was no reason why He should not drink of the sour wine which stood hard by the cross, now that He had drunk the cup which the Father had placed to his lips.

As He looked through the long line of predictions that bore on his passion, He could see that they had all been fulfilled save one; and, that this Scripture might be fulfilled, He said, "I thirst." Some, who stood near the cross, and, in the growing light, began to regain their confidence, tried to make ridicule of this plaintive ejaculation; but one who noticed his pale and parched lips was touched with pity; he lifted a bunch of hyssop to the mouth of the Sufferer, and elevating a sponge dipped in vinegar fulfilled thus unwittingly the ancient prediction, "They gave me also gall for my meat, and in my thirst they gave me vinegar to drink."

VI. "It is finished."—As we compare the Gospels, we find that these words were spoken with a loud voice. It was, in fact, the shout of a conqueror. Finished the long list of prophecies, which closed, like gates, behind Him. Finished the types and shadows of the Jewish ritual. Finished the work which the Father had given Him to do. Finished the matchless beauty of a perfect life. Finished the work of man's redemption. Through the eternal Spirit, He had offered Himself without spot to God; and by that one sacrifice for sin, once for all and for ever, He had perfected them that are being sanctified. He had done all that was required to be done to reconcile the world unto God, and

TO MAKE AN END OF SIN.

Finished! Let the words roll in volumes of melody through all the spheres! There is nothing now left for man to do but enter on the results of Christ's finished work. As the Creator finished on the evening of the sixth day all the work which He had made, so did the Redeemer cease on the sixth day from the work of Atonement; and, lo! it was very good.

VII. "Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit."—The words were quoted from the Book of Psalms, which He so dearly loved. He only prefixed the name of Father; for the cloud which had extorted the cry, My God, my God, had broken, and under a blue heaven of conscious fellowship He exchanged it for Father.

If the words, "It is finished," be taken as our Lord's farewell to the world He was leaving, these words are surely his greeting to that on whose confines He was standing. It seems as though the spirit of Christ were poising itself before it departed to the Father, and it saw before no dismal abyss, no gulf of darkness, no footless chaos, but hands, even the hands of the Father, and to these He committed Himself.

The first martyr, who died after Christ, passed away with these same words upon his lips, with a significant alteration, "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit." We may use them as they have been used by countless thousands in all ages; and we know Him whom we have believed, and are persuaded that He is able to keep that which we have committed unto Him.

And when Jesus had said these words, He bowed his head upon his breast, and breathed out his spirit. No one took his life from Him, He laid it down of Himself; He had authority to lay it down.

So ended that marvellous scene. The expectation of all the ages was more than realised. If it be true that on that day a tidal wave of immense volume swept around the world, and rose high up in all rivers and estuaries, this may be taken as an emblem of the much more abounding grace, which on that day rose high above the mighty obstacles of human sin, and is destined to lift the entire universe nearer God. For by it God will reconcile all things to Himself, in heaven and on earth.

THREE ITEMS REMAIN TO BE NOTICED.

At the moment that Jesus died there was a great earthquake, which made the earth tremble and the rocks rend, so that the ancient graves were opened, preparatory to the rising of the bodies of the saints on the Resurrection morning, following the Lord from the power of Death. And when the centurion, and they that were with him, watching Jesus, charged to see the sentence executed, saw the earthquake and the things that were done, they feared exceedingly, saying, "Truly this was the Son of God."

The veil of the Temple, also, was rent in twain from the top to the bottom, at the moment that as the Great High Priest Jesus was entering the Temple not made with hands, with the blood of his propitiation. Is it to be wondered at that afterwards many priests, who had been in close contiguity to that marvellous type, became obedient to the faith?

Finally, from the pierced side of Christ came out blood and water, as John solemnly attests. "He knoweth that he saith true." This was a symptom that there had been heart-rupture, and that the Lord had literally died of a broken heart. But it was also a symbol of "the double cure" which Jesus has effected. Blood to atone; water to cleanse.

The Salvation Army at Exeter Hall.

ON Monday and Tuesday of last week General Booth conducted Two Days of Salvation in Exeter Hall. The morning attendances were large, while at the afternoon and evening meetings the great hall was packed.

The General's addresses, on the subject of "Conquering Religion," were characterised by fervency and force, and attended by those pungent sallies and up-to-date comments on affairs which are among the chief attractions of a Salvationist demonstration at Exeter Hall.

"I want," said the General, summing up his objects, "to speak to everyone's heart. I want to get through your ears, and through your prejudices, and through your miserable excuses, and through your self-justification to your hearts. God Almighty Himself must help us, but of that help we can be assured. Nobody here need have a single doubt as to that. Jehovah is not only able, but willing, to save, and to save to the uttermost.

"In the next place, if we are to have what I want and what God wants, I shall have to do my share, and I am quite up to it so far as willingness is concerned. I came here with the full purpose, without any reservation in my soul, to do the utmost in my power, to do what I can to make these meetings profitable to my soul, a blessing to the Salvation Army, and the promotion of the happiness of those who come to this building, and profitable to the wide world."

At the last gathering the General spoke on "the harvest is past, the summer is ended, and we are not saved," and—as was the case in each of the meetings—a large number of people went to the penitent form.

On Tuesday afternoon the General alluded to the growth of better feeling between England and America. He pleaded for a similar relationship between France and England, and introduced a resolution, pledging the meeting to pray "that God may so direct and prosper the conference on disarmament convened by the Czar, that it may lead to immediate and permanently blessed results to every nation."

African Institute, Colwyn Bay.

THIS work was commenced about twelve years ago by a returned missionary from the Congo. Owing to the climatic conditions, resulting in the numerous deaths of white missionaries, he aimed at qualifying Christian natives, during a residence in England, to carry the Gospel to the tribes of the interior.

Little did he think that the scheme which was intended for the Congo only would spread so as to serve all along the West Coast, and, indeed, the South and East as well. There are students now in the Institute representing 3000 miles of the West Coast, not to name one from Kaffir-land, and applications from centres on the East. These represent about eight languages, but the meeting-ground is English, in which the education is given.

Numerous committees of native gentlemen have been formed all along the coast with the view of developing the interest and methods of the institution. The funds of the Institute are suffering just now from the coal strike and other causes.

Albion Hill Home, Brighton.—This useful institution has for nearly forty-four years carried on the work of rescuing young women. Since the foundation of the institution 2245 young women have been admitted, 1069 of whom have been sent out to service, and there has also been much encouragement in reference to the after-life of those who have passed out into situations. Letters are constantly received from ladies who have taken girls from the Home into their service, bearing testimony to the permanent reformation of their character and conduct. Many of the letters are most affecting in their expression of love and gratitude for benefit derived from residence in the Home. How greatly this Home is valued is shown by the numerous applications for admission, and also by the great demand for servants from it. The Home's industries last year contributed rather more than half the income. To carry on the work with efficiency a large income is necessary, and in view of a recent falling off in subscriptions the committee ask for increased support. Communications may be addressed to the secretary, Rev. R. C. McDonald, Home Villa, Queen's Park, Brighton.

Genesis xlix.

"By faith Jacob when he was a-dying... worshipped."

Old experience may attain
To something of prophetic strain.

But there is something more than old experience here. This holy man speaks as he is moved by the Holy Ghost. He is on the main current of inspiration, and his prophecies do not come by his own will, but he speaks from God, "being moved by the Holy Ghost."

Of whom would the Holy Spirit bear witness, save of Him whom He desires to glorify? He is here as the Lion of the tribe of Judah, the root and offspring of David. It is his hand that is upon the neck of his enemies, and to Him that men bow down. Shiloh, the Peace-Giver, is appropriate in its deepest meaning to Him only who is our Peace, and has made peace, unto Whom the obedience of the people shall be. The words spoken of Joseph are too pregnant of meaning to be confined to the ruler of Egypt. Jesus is this fruitful bough, whose branches run over the wall of Judaism; grieved by the archers, his bow abides in strength; He is alike Shepherd and Rock.

There is hardly a possible need of the soul which is not met by one of these aspects of Christ. To the weak He is strong; to the restless, Shiloh; to the barren, the source of fruitfulness; to the persecuted, a Rock of Salvation. Two conditions only are necessary for the appropriation of his fulness. First, that we should wait for his salvation, and, second, that like Him, we should be separate from our brethren.

MONDAY, December 12.

God's meanings in life! "God meant it for good." The same event may bear two constructions: on the part of man it may mean evil, on God's part only good. The first is obvious, anyone can see the evil intention, the malicious, spiteful purpose; but the eye of faith looks deep down into apparent evil and cries, God means it for good.

Here is a faith to live and die by! To dare to pass beyond the brethren, and the pit, from Shimei and his cursing, from Judas, and the cup, and believe that God means only good. Joseph had to wait to the end of life apparently before he realised this; but we with the teaching of the Bible beside us, with the experience of the centuries to aid us, have no need to wait till we can see by faith. We know and are sure, first, that nothing happens by chance; secondly, that nothing happens outside God's permissive will; and third, that whatever He permits or appoints is meant for good, and will inevitably produce it.

Joseph was satisfied because his life had been so marvellously used for saving "much people alive." Every time he looked upon the teeming multitudes of Egypt, enjoying life and well-being out of the abundance which he had provided, he felt that for such harvests there was no need to grudge the pain of falling into the ground to die. Such results were more than commensurate to the cost. And in the review of life I suppose the one thing which will compensate us for what we have ourselves suffered will be the sense of having been corn givers.

Exodus i.

"Come, let us deal wisely," cries the enemy, and he adopted a policy of consummate sagacity—the male children cut off, the people deprived of opportunities of self-improvement, strange leaders substituted as taskmasters, everything done to destroy national independence and sap self-help.

But Pharaoh and his counsellors had to learn that they were leagued not against a subject nation but against Jehovah Himself; and Israel might have adopted Asaph's words of after years—

They have consulted together with one consent;
Against Thee do they make a covenant.

Whilst they were cutting off Israel on the one hand, God was increasing his people greatly on the other, making them stronger than their adversaries.

It is very wonderful to notice in our lives the agents which God uses to defeat the purposes of our foes. Of all the people in Egypt these two women would have seemed the unlikeliest! How should they be able to resist the proud decree of the greatest king monarch of the earth? Yet so it was. God has agents where we least expect. Shiphrah and Puah are specimens of thousands more who in their humble capacity fear and serve God, minister to his people when they are in sore straits, and are the means of checkmating the designs of the enemy. God, who makes of soft sand a strong bar to the sea, can restrain the raging billows by the humblest barriers.

You may be as obscure and weak as these two, but if you fear God He will condescend to use you, giving you a name in his book of life, rewarding you by making you the spiritual progenitor of households, and securing you immunity from the strong hand of the oppressor.

WEDNESDAY, December 14.

Exodus ii.

Everything the world could do to divert Moses from simple faith in God was done. The treasures of Egypt and the pleasures of sin, the might of eloquence and supremacy in arms, the friendship of the great and the prospects of increasing influence as one of the reigning house; but amid all his heart beat true. Looking towards Goshen, where his people dwelt, he felt that a light shone there before which that of Egypt's palace paled. The promises which had gone before on them, assured their future, and some glimmering anticipation of the coming Christ appears also to have been present to his mind. He esteemed the reproach of Christ greater riches. It cost him, however, all that life seemed worth to espouse their cause.

There was, however, much to learn. By strength can no man prevail. The battle is not to the strong, nor the race to the swift. The doughty champion of Israel's wrongs must be taught that God does not want our strength, but our yielded weakness; that He will not join his glory to another, nor his praise to human might; that the salvation of his people from first to last is due to his outstretched hand and mighty arm, which only need the frailest possible human life beneath which to conceal themselves. Hence the failure of Moses when he essayed to emancipate his people by the strength of his strong fist.

There was yet a third lesson to learn. Like Gideon's army, he was still too strong for God. We are told significantly "he looked this way and that way," as though to indicate his dependence on human methods, and reliance on maxims that operate amongst men. All such thoughts must be dismissed, and in the sublime solitude of a shepherd's life, he must learn to deal with God, and God only.

THURSDAY, December 15.

Exodus iii.

Centuries after this, One, reared as a carpenter in a village home, said to the Jews: "Before Abraham was, I AM." The fire that shone in this lowly wilderness bush, common shrub of the desert, was not, as has been so often supposed, a symbol of pain, but of the unchangeableness of the Lord Jesus, of whom the psalmist says:—

The heavens shall perish and wax old as a garment,
But Thou art the same, and thy years shall not fail.

He loves us because He will. "He set his love upon us," when we had no thought of Him, and were cast out to our loathing. "He first loved us." There was nothing attractive nor beautiful to induce his affection, and, as He looked down the ages, much to dissuade Him. We were not oaks, or vines, or apple-trees of the woods, only common desert shrubs; but of his own sweet will He settled down upon us enwrapping us with the sheen and warmth of a fathomless affection.

His love is unchanging.—We must always conjugate it in the Indicative Mood and Present Tense. Never, I was; never, I will be; always, I am. As He did not begin to love us because of what He found in us, so his love is maintained though we bring no fuel to feed its fire, and, indeed, as in the case of the water with which Elijah drenched the altar, did so much to reduce and slacken it. Never dare to think there are fluctuations in the love of Christ, or that it is affected by the more or less of your emotions.

His love comes down to save.—"I have seen ...I have heard...I am come down." It would have been impossible for our Saviour Christ to have dwelt apart from this world which He had created, and into which sin had entered by his permission; and there is a sense in which He is always coming down, however low we have fallen, and extreme our degradation. Add to I AM whatever you need. Christ will do for us all we can trust Him to do.

FRIDAY, December 16.

Exodus iv.

Whilst this scene was transacting in the heart of the desert, Aaron had already started to seek his brother. "Behold, he cometh forth to meet thee." And in the meanwhile Moses was in sore need of companionship. He was in doubt as to his own ability. He was sure to do doubly better, as we all find it, if a companion went with him. God knows this, and had selected the one whom Moses would have chosen. As with the double visions of Ananias and Saul of Tarsus, of Peter and Cornelius, so Moses saw Aaron on his way, and probably Aaron beheld Moses in need. When the Mont Cenis tunnel was bored, men began on each side of the Alps and met in the middle. So do paths of men and women who start from the ends of the earth, meet in the mountain of God. The Lord says to our Aarons, Go into the wilderness to meet Moses.

The man for whom God is preparing a great destiny must not confer with flesh and blood. Zipporah may accost Moses as a bridegroom of blood, but he has no alternative but to acquiesce in the demands of God's angel. We must not confer with flesh and blood. He that loveth father or mother, wife or child, more than God, is not worthy. The knife of circumcision must deliver us from reproach and leave us free to do our God-sent errand.

SATURDAY, December 17.

Exodus v.

Always return unto the Lord. This is what Moses did. "And Moses returned unto the Lord, and said, Lord, wherefore hast Thou evil intreated this people, and why is it Thou hast sent me?" It is always best to be perfectly natural with God. Never hide your chagrin at his dealing, your disappointment in your heart. Never allow yourself to nurse a secret misunderstanding, it will work as an ill-leaven. Even though you speak rashly with your mouth and misjudge your heavenly Father, it is better to say your hot, strong words in his ear than hide them. Spoken out, they will elicit his tender pity, for He knoweth our frame, He remembereth that we are dust. Restrained, they will cake over the heart, and make it callous and indifferent. Humble yourself under the mighty hand of God: return to Him and say, "Why is it that Thou hast sent me, Thou hast not delivered Thy people at all?"

Our first efforts to do a great work almost invariably meet with strenuous opposition and disaster. We find apparently more harm than good accruing, and we wish we had not put our hands to the enterprise which has broken in on the peace of our shepherd life, and threatens to involve us in a sea of troubles. "Let us back," we cry. This is a salutary experience. It is necessary to show ourselves and others how weak we are so far as our own resources are considered. And the Lord draws near to us, lying broken and disheartened at his feet, saying, "Now shalt thou see what I will do to Pharaoh; for by a strong hand shall he let them go, and by a strong hand shall he drive them out of his land."

SCOTLAND.

Rev. John McNeill in Skye.

THE evangelist is now busy in the far north-west of his native land. From a specially contributed and appreciative sketch in The Northern Weekly, we extract the following :—

The average Highlander, however radical he may be in politics, is thoroughly conservative in religious matters. He has seen or heard of the great work and influence of the "Fathers" in the North, and any deviation from their modus operandi is an innovation, and he shrugs his shoulders and stands aloof. His fear of changes in forms of worship is not to be ridiculed. In the Church of England he sees the effect of ill-advised changes—that once prominently Protestant Church fast becoming a seed-plot of Romanism. The Highlander is not a hymn-hater but he fears their introduction into the services of the sanctuary may be the thin end of the wedge to be followed by instrumental music, and thereafter a more ornate ritual. The Celts' fear may be groundless ; I believe it is. Ritualism and Evangelicalism are plants that do not thrive in a common soil. Thank God, the Free Church is thoroughly Evangelical, and John McNeill is saturated with the true Calvinistic theology. He has been to the University of Sinai, and from thence was led to the Divinity Hall of Calvary, and that, as I heard one of our "Fathers" often say, was the curriculum essential to one who would become a winner of souls.

John McNeill began his mission in Stornoway by preaching in the Gaelic Free Church. I could not be present, but I went to hear him preach in the English Free in the evening. There was a large attendance. I rejoiced to see so many young men present. The Old Testament reading was Isaiah xxxv. During the reading of the chapter and of the Psalm following, the cxxvi., a running commentary was made. "Be strong, fear not," very simple, nothing very clever, or brilliant, or witty in that, but it was what was needed. "God will come." Oh ! for an hour of God ! "Sorrow and sighing shall flee away." God speed their flight, they have been a long time here. In the Psalm, "Then filled with laughter was our mouth, etc." Do I read aright ?

SHOCKINGLY IRREVERENT TO LAUGH

or smile in God's house. Should it not read, "then groaned aloud did we," and the nearer God came the louder groanèd we ?

The sermon was on the restoring of sight to the man born blind. Alternately an earnest appeal, a happy hit, or a humorous aside flashed out. Graphically he described an imaginary conversation between Bartimeus and the subject of the text. The one had his blindness removed in a flash, the other underwent a process which took some time. On comparing notes, the one would doubt the other's cure because his recovery of sight was not on parallel lines with his own. One could easily go ahead of the preacher and know he was aiming an arrow at those who doubt the genuineness of sudden conversion. Many such telling hits were given and illustrated often by some appropriate story.

He preached again in the English Free Church on Friday evening ; subject, "Healing of the man with the withered hand"—a powerful sermon which evidently made a great impression. The peculiarities of Highland belief and character did not receive so much attention as on Thursday night. The sermon was none the worse. To hear of our irregularities and peculiarities night after night becomes rather tiresome. No doubt we are thrawn, stiff-necked, hyper-Calvinistic, etc., etc., and if that is our bane the antidote consists in the pressing home of the old, old story. We can be led ; it takes a lot to drive us. And yet that very reiteration may so impress on us a sense of our failings that we may "tak a thocht and mend."

On Sabbath the evangelist had a busy day. The mission proper commenced on Monday night in the Gaelic Free Church, with an attendance of some 800. The singing was led by the joint choirs of both Free Churches, and, of course, use and wont were adhered to—standing at prayer, and sitting at singing. The singing, perhaps owing to the vast air space, lacked the swelling sound of the praise characteristic of the meetings in the sister church. Another drawback was the intense cold. There is no heating apparatus, and, verily, fire in the preaching is required to keep the people warm. On Monday night one forgot these discomforts in listening to Mr. McNeill's rendering and application of the story of Bartimeus, or to give his own title to his subject, "The Power of Earnestness." The heads were—1st, "Be in earnest" ; 2nd, "Be more in earnest" ; 3rd, "Be more in earnest still" ; and lastly, "You will get what you want." The preacher in impassioned tones referred to several things which kept people back, and specially to strong drink, as being the great hindrance with many people. One did not require to be an open drunkard. He knew of nothing which so made on Sabbath as the sucking at the whiskey bottle (moderate drinking) during the week. This telling bit of temperance preaching is much needed in Stornoway, where drunkenness is more rampant than for many years. There was, of course, in the sermon the inevitable "dig" at our supposed proneness to shelter ourselves under what is called the doctrine of utter inability, and our readiness to suspect the genuineness of any sudden conversions.

Mr. McNeill's prayers were models of what prayers should be. That eminent evangelist, Duncan Matheson, used to tell a story of someone praying in a style we are familiar with in the Highlands, viz., preaching or lecturing prayers. An old woman, who sat next the worthy man, getting tired of his lecture, pulled his sleeve, and in a loud whisper said : "Seek something o' Him, man ; seek something o' Him." John McNeill's prayers are seeking prayers. The meetings continued throughout the week. The preacher is anxious that God's people should continue in prayer that a blessing might come down.

Free Church Missions.

THE annual missionary meeting of the Glasgow Free Presbytery was held last week in St. Andrew's Hall. Lord Overtoun was in the chair and gave a brief opening address.

Rev. Alex. Dewar, Livingstonia, said Africa was just now claiming the attention of all nations, especially of Great Britain. He wished to tell what God was doing in Livingstonia. So far as the Free Church was concerned it had answered the prayer of Livingtone, that the open sore of slavery in Africa should be healed. There were signs everywhere of advancing civilisation in that country. Instead of people living in Livingstonia in terror in swamps, there were large villages, and the people were in comparative peace and happiness along the great lake. They heard the Gospel gladly, and Sabbath after Sabbath 1000 would attend a forenoon and afternoon service, and 2000 at a special service. But there was a clandestine Arab slavery in British Central Africa, although wherever there was a white man, the Arab slaver kept a wide berth. It was hoped that in five years there would be railways. Speaking of the mental capacity of the natives, he said the people eagerly

DESIRED INSTRUCTION FOR THEIR CHILDREN.

Dr. Macphail, Santalia, spoke of the work and results of Santal missions among the Highlanders of Bengal. As to the religion of the Santal, he had no idea of God. He had only an idea of evil spirits, and when the crops failed he attributed it to their ill-will. To propitiate them the Santals sacrificed their fowls, sheep, goats, cows, and buffalo, and within the memory of our missionaries it was not unusual to make human sacrifices. A God of love would be to them a contradiction of terms. Still, Santalia was a hopeful field ; the people were brave, honest, and loving. The work of translating the Bible was one of the most important tasks of the missionary, and happily the Bible was the book with which the Santals were most familiar ; in many homes it was the only book they had ever seen.

Mr. Robinson Souttar, M.P., spoke of mission work in India as he was familiar with it. He believed we were far too hard upon the missionaries. We did not mete out the same measure of justice as we did to labourers at home. There were 40,000 preachers in these islands, and a vast army of Christian workers ; yet these islands had not been converted. There were some of the finest workers in Glasgow, but it had not yet been won to Christ. If more fruit were wanted, more missionaries should be sent. Addresses were also delivered by Revs. John Douglas, Nagpore, and John C. Gibson, Swatow.

Mr. Quarrier's Homes.

THE twenty-seventh annual meeting of the Orphan Homes of Scotland was recently held in the large hall of the Christian Institute, Bothwell-street, Glasgow. There was a large attendance of ladies and gentlemen, and there was also present a band of children from the Bridge-of-Weir Homes. Lord Overtoun, who presided, said if ever there was a band of hope in the world he thought it was Mr. Quarrier's bairns, for the whole institution and its surroundings, and the faces of the bairns too, were bright with hope. He did not suppose there was any field of work that was more hopeful or more encouraging, or that bore a greater amount of good fruit as work amongst the children, and work amongst such children as Mr. Quarrier had taken by the hand to lead homeward and heavenward. When he tried to imagine the number of children rescued during all these years, many might envy Mr. Quarrier the happiness of his lot in being the means of carrying out such a noble enterprise. He thought the existence of the Orphan Homes at Bridge-of-Weir was a proof of the love and the power of God. He did not see how, looking at these homes, any infidel, atheist, or unbeliever could hold up his head. The work had received blessing in the past, and more was to follow in the future. They would in faith hold up Mr. Quarrier's hands and encourage him in this great work which God had given him to do.

Mr. Bryden gave in his financial reports, which showed that for the Orphan Homes the balance in bank was £87 2s. 8d. Rev. Dr. Wells said they were all delighted to see Mr. Quarrier in much better health, and that the friends had so generously supported this work. It was, indeed, a monument of Christian faith, but faith needed fervour and a real, generous, fruitful humanity. That was seen at the Bridge-of-Weir Homes. It rejoiced their hearts to find that beautiful city of refuge, that colony of mercy spreading out upon every hand. Sir Thomas Glen-Coats expressed sympathy with what had been said by Lord Overtoun as to the helpfulness and

GRANDNESS OF THE WORK.

Mr. Wm. Quarrier said that though it had also been a year of some trouble, it had been a year of blessing among the young. That work had been too long neglected. In India, China, and Africa the missionaries were teaching the young to become one day missionaries and teachers themselves. So he hoped there would be a similar outcome of the Orphan Homes. The sum of £15,000 was required for bread and butter, £3290 for buildings, and £6266 for the consumptive hospital, making a total of £24,709. Every penny was needed, and he wondered that he had got all he required. He could not control the purse strings of his friends, but giver and worker had co-operated with such beautiful harmony as to show that God took care of his poor. Two hundred and eighty-six new children had been received into the Homes, being the smallest number for fifteen or sixteen years. At any rate he had not room for more. His heart would have been sad to turn away any fatherless child. Last year there were received 409, being 123 less than this year, but they had more children in the Homes than last year by about 200. The question might be asked what he was going to do now that the Ontario Government had passed a law prohibiting any British subject from entering that province unless under certain restraints ? He had been asked why he did not take a licence. It was because the children would be marked and could be sent back to this country. They had stood still, therefore, in sending children to Canada for the first time in twenty-seven years. There were 5000 of their children in Canada, and this year there were forty-five marriages.

GOD HAD MADE NO MISTAKE

in creating Canada as a home for the surplus population of this island. Through the instrumentality of the children, the Gospel would spread. He had been asked what he was going to do now. Well, he did not know. He had sent out many more servants, but this was a slow process, as many of the children in the homes were two and three years old, and so they had to be kept a long time. But when trained and sent out they could not fail to be a blessing wherever they went. Of all the children sent out in the twenty-seven years, not one had become chargeable to any authority in Canada

He hoped they would carry the day, not only in Canada, but in the matter of rates. The Renfrewshire County Council professed to be sympathetic; but now they demanded rates for the Homes. Already they amounted to £600. The balance in the books of the Homes would be swallowed if these rates had to be paid. If he took Government grants he might get £1000 a year. But he would not accept them; he would rather trust the Lord. The case had been taken to avizandum; but if he were defeated, he would carry the case to the House of Lords, where, generally, there was fairer play got than in this country.

How did the money come for the Homes? It came at the right time. The day before an Ayrshire farmer sent £50. Did ever one hear of a farmer sending £50 to such a work? An old coastguardman who had hardly enough to live upon used to send a few shillings. He had laid past £100 and sent it all. Then a poor woman rich in faith used to give money, and said the day before that she had been urging a rich bachelor to subscribe. She had given a copy of the report and prayed God his heart would be touched. He got letters with 5s. and 1s. 9d. in them, and also gone home. A man had said he could not use all his income, and wished to build a second hospital at the cost of £9000. As to the consumptive hospital, medical men had well said that good food, exercise in the fresh air, and antiseptic medicine were the best curative agents. Some of the consumptive ladies admitted had increased three, two, and one stone in weight, and were active on their feet. Of course, some consumptives were beyond cure; but others with one or both lungs affected were not without hope. He needed £35,000 for the consumptive buildings, and £10,000 for the extra homes. Dr. Wells had just told him that a lady had bequeathed £2000. If he trained up his girls as servants he needed more room. He hoped that friends, in making out their wills, would not forget the consumptives and orphans.

Mr. Cameron Corbett, M.P., also spoke.

Christian Work in Glasgow.

THE handsome pile of buildings in Bothwell-street, comprising the Christian Institute, the Bible Training Institute, and the Y.M.C.A. Club, is now fully occupied, and is the admiration of all who pass along that busy thoroughfare. The United Evangelistic Association has taken up its headquarters in the eastern wing of the building, and all its appointments are most complete and handsome. The daily noon prayer meeting has been transferred from the Christian Institute to the large hall of this building; since the removal new features have been introduced into the conduct of the meeting, and on several days of the week the hall has been completely filled. Tuesdays are devoted to addresses to business men by prominent clergymen and laymen, and these have been peculiarly successful. On Wednesdays the students of the Bible Training Institute, guided by Mr. John Anderson, conduct the meeting, and again there is much interest and a large attendance. Thursday is devoted to addresses on the deepening of spiritual life, and each Friday is set apart for home and foreign mission work. The Christian Endeavour Society has charge of Saturday, and the young people gather in large numbers and seem much interested.

The work of the Bible Training Institute has been most successful since the new session started in September. Eighty students are now in residence, and they are receiving a complete training, with the Bible as their text-book. In addition to the classes held in the forenoon, the students are being trained in vocal and instrumental music; and after their studies in the afternoon, are set free for evangelistic work in connection with the churches and mission halls throughout the city. The work at Bethany Hall, Tent Hall, and Mizpah Hall has been most encouraging, and large audiences have gathered night after night to hear the preaching of the Gospel.

The Y.M.C.A. club, which was opened about a year ago, has met with most gratifying results, and has fulfilled the fullest expectations of those who devised the scheme. There is accommodation for over 200 young men, and during the past few months 180 have been constantly in residence. While there are no restrictions placed upon the residents, there is a distinct Christian tone in the house, family worship being conducted morning and evening. Many ministers, missionaries, and Christian friends from the country have been finding the club a convenient place of residence during short sojourns in the city.

The work of the Young Men's Christian Association has been carried on with much vigour and enthusiasm. The annual meeting of the Association has just been held, and the audience filled St. Andrew's Halls. The report presented shows that the Association now numbers 8208 young men. In connection with the Association there are 231 fellowship meetings, having an average attendance of over 5000 members. One interesting feature of the work is that no fewer than 161 young men connected with the Association are preparing for the ministry or the mission field. The Association maintains a missionary in China, and helps in keeping other missionaries in different parts of the field. In addition to the open-air and evangelistic meetings, the members conduct services in ten large lodging-houses in the city every Sabbath afternoon.

The new building on the south side of the river, which cost £9500, is doing a large work for God in that district of the city. The new premises in Govan are to be declared open on Dec. 10. They have been erected at a cost of £7500.

During the week of prayer for young men meetings were held three times daily, and an earnest spirit of prayer was manifested in those who attended. During that week the members also canvassed the whole of greater Glasgow, visiting every house in the city, and circulated 75,000 booklets specially prepared for this visitation. The leading article in it was written by Dr. Stalker, and testimonies as to the good to be derived from the Y.M.C.A. were given by the Lord Provost, Lord Inverclyde, Lord Overtoun, and many laymen and ministers in the city.

The directors of the Association have arranged to hold a Missionary Loan Exhibition from March 5 to 14, 1899. The whole suite of St. Andrew's Halls has been taken for these ten days, and it is expected that a to the Christians in and around Glasgow, which is sure to stimulate missionary zeal, and create an interest in the Lord's work abroad such as has not hitherto existed. More than thirty of the leading missionary societies have indicated their willingness to co-operate in this scheme. The directors are raising a sufficient sum of money to pay all the expenses in connection with the exhibition, and thus set free the whole proceeds, which it is expected will be very considerable, to be divided into two equal parts, one half to help the funds of the Y.M.C.A., and the other half to be divided among the missionary societies helping to run the exhibition. Should any of the readers of The Christian have curios which they would be willing to lend for exhibition, they might kindly communicate with Mr. W. M. Oatts, 70, Bothwell-street, Glasgow.

Glasgow Foundry Boys.

THE annual conversazione of the workers and friends connected with the Glasgow Foundry Boys' Religious Society lately took place in the City Hall. There were about 3000 present. The chair was occupied by ex-Bailie Chisholm, who said that the young of Glasgow outside of Church influence was the field in which they had to work. If they only recognised the importance of the work and the possibilities of its incalculable results, he believed they would be more fervid still. They had discouraging work. They had the sowing and reaping going on side by side, and there was therefore not one of their eighty branches which ought to be dissatisfied with merely sowing. The highest part of the work was not the chairman's or platform speaker's, but he or she who took the care of say a dozen or a score of boys.

Rev. Hugh Black, on speaking of the qualifications necessary for a good teacher, contended that a man ought to be learned himself before he taught. He should speak out of experience and out of the knowledge of his own heart, and needs of his own heart, and the needs of other men. There was no other force for the redemption of our modern life, for the solution of our modern problems and modern dangers, and for the sins of the high and of the low, and for the sickness unto death for the whole body politic, but the force that broke from Calvary.

The Lord Provost presented badges to youths who had distinguished themselves in life-saving exercises. Mr. Cameron Corbett afterwards addressed the meeting.

The Y.W.C.A. in Scotland.

THE Young Women's Christian Association in Scotland now numbers 348 branches. Its adaptability to communities large and small, to rural districts and scattered populations, has been recognised and has commended it to Christian workers anxious for the furtherance of the highest interests of the young women. Though the formation of Church Guilds, Christian Endeavour Societies, and similar agencies has affected the numerical increase of the Y.W.C.A., they have not affected its consolidation, which has of late years been marked.

The Scotch Division under the British National Council has for its president Miss Hay, and for honorary secretary Miss Brown Douglas, and a large number of ladies representing the whole of Scotland form the Divisional Council, which meets in Edinburgh monthly. The central Scotch office is 122, George-street, Edinburgh. Over each county a lady is selected to superintend and develop the work in her county, and of these district referees there are twenty-two.

Many but not all the branches have buildings, either owned by themselves, rented for Y.W.C.A. purposes, or the joint property of the Y.M. and the Y.W.C.A. The Edinburgh Institute includes a hall named the Gartshore Hall, in recognition of the devoted labours of Miss Murray Gartshore for so many years as honorary secretary of the Association. Glasgow has two handsome institutes, both free of any debt, and both containing good halls, boarding-houses, and other accommodation. A fine institute was a few months ago presented to Dumbarton Y.W.C.A. by Lord and Lady Overtoun, who also generously gave a holiday home for the West of Scotland in commemoration of Her Majesty's Diamond Jubilee. In addition to this home, which is at Kirn, Argyleshire, the Association possesses one for the East of Scotland at Leven, Fifeshire. In Dundee the active local workers are rapidly adding to their present excellent premises, and Aberdeen, Arbroath, Grantown-on-Spey, etc., are well supplied.

There is remarked over the Association at present, with much thankfulness, a spirit of prayerfulness which and in many quarters also an increased interest in Bible study. Much of the latter may be traced to the work of the Home Bible Study department, to which Mrs. Armitstead, of Castle Huntly, devotes so much time and strength, with the result that from being merely a simple examination paper of easy questions suited to beginners and meant for isolated country branches, there is now a graduated series of papers, numbering—this year—four, and founded upon such subjects as "The Epistles to the Corinthians," "Church History of the Second Century," "First Book of Samuel," and "The Early Life of our Lord." Each paper contains forty questions, and each student must make an attempt to answer all of these. Prizes are given by Mrs. Armitstead, and in some cases locally, for these papers. In this way thorough and systematic Bible study is encouraged.

County conferences have been much blessed, and such have been lately held at Perth, Dumbarton, Glasgow, and in Ayrshire, while the holding of the British National Conference this year in Edinburgh gave a decided impetus to the work in Scotland. Foreign missions have been all along helped by the Y.W.C.A., and now the foreign work of the Association itself is becoming better known, and is laying hold of the interest of members. Societies may be multiplied and do useful work, but no other organisation can take the place of the Y.W.C.A., or make its existence unnecessary.

J. R. Oatts.

Blind in Scotland.—Forty-one years ago the first society in Scotland for teaching the blind to read was founded at Edinburgh. The Society, beginning with twelve persons, has developed into ten societies, with upwards of 3000 blind persons under their care. The work has reached a point that calls forth gratitude to God. The extension of the work has been most rapid and remarkable. Very many having been led to the Saviour through the Society's agents and instrumentality.

The Revival of 1859.

THE following account of its origin at the Conference on Revivals was given in the great tent at Tottenham by Mr. J. G. McVicker :—

Let me say a few words about the revival in Ireland in the year 1859, during the progress of which I myself found peace with God.

For the encouragement of sisters in their work for the Lord let me say at the outset that the first seed out of which that work grew was sown by the hand of a woman. Mrs. Colville, of Gateshead, laboured in and around Ballymena, co. Antrim, about the year 1857, for six months, visiting cottages and talking with the people about the personal knowledge of salvation.

She told me herself how trying those months were; few sympathised with her, and she saw little fruit from her work. But God gave her one soul at least for Christ, who might well have been called Gad—for "a troop cometh."

A young man named James M'Quilkin, an unconverted church member, heard of her visiting among the people. He was a strong Calvinist, and he dreaded lest Mrs. C. should be spreading what he regarded as false doctrine among the people. At a tea-table where he met her he asked her, "Are you a Calvinist, Mrs. C.?" "I would not wish," she answered, "to be more or less of a Calvinist than our Lord and his apostles. But I do not care to talk on mere points of doctrine. I would rather speak of the experience of salvation in the soul." She added: "If one were to tell me what he knows of the state of his heart with God I think I could tell him whether he knows the Lord Jesus savingly." This at once closed James's mouth. He felt that his heart was not right, and he dreaded exposing its true state if he spoke further.

As God so ordered it, a lady present began to unbosom herself to Mrs. C.; and had the Holy Spirit been revealing the state of James's heart, he himself told me that it could not have been more exactly described than in the words this lady used. "I waited," he said, "with breathless expectation to hear what Mrs. C. would answer. After a brief pause she said solemnly, 'My dear, you have never known the Lord Jesus.' I knew that she spoke what was true of me. I felt as if the ground were about to open beneath me and

LET ME SINK INTO HELL.

As soon as I could, I left the company. For two weeks I had no peace day or night. At the end of that time I found it by trusting the Lord Jesus."

Christ "could not be hid." As soon as this young man received Him as his Saviour he began to gather what was called "prayer meetings," and to speak of Him to others. This was in 1857.

His first convert was one who still lives, whom I have known intimately for nearly forty years, Jeremiah Meneely. He had been for some time anxious about his soul; had begun family worship and attendance at a weekly prayer meeting, and had even become a communicant at the Lord's Supper. But he had no power over sin; he had no peace. When he heard his friend M'Q. speak of the knowledge of pardon he felt in his heart that James had got possession of something that he himself still lacked, and he determined that he never would rest till he obtained it.

For a time his efforts were vain. But one day, in his room alone, he came on that verse in John vi.: "Him that cometh unto Me I will in no wise cast out." Kneeling down, with his finger on the verse, and his eyes up to the Lord, he said, "Lord, I have come to family worship, and the prayer meeting, and the sacrament, and I am unsaved yet. Now I come past them all: I come to Thyself, and here is thy word binding Thee not to cast me out." He saw that the Lord had left Himself no way of escape. And there and then the matter was settled by the Holy Spirit through faith in his heart, and settled for ever.

These two began to pray together, and they found two other young men, already believers, though feeble ones, to join them in prayer.

This is another point of great importance to be noticed in regard to that revival—the place that prayer had in originating and sustaining it. Night after night these four gathered for prayer; and as others were converted the numbers at the prayer-meetings grew. What some of them had heard of Mr. George Müller's experience of God's answering prayer, greatly encouraged them. Their great petition was, "Lord, pour out thy Holy Spirit on this district and country." When told by some brethren that their prayer was a mistake, that the Holy Spirit had been poured out, they comforted themselves with the thought that God knew what they meant, and He did, and granted it; for the work spread more and more—at first quietly, then in a way that drew universal attention—till the fire spread over the whole of Ulster and far beyond it.

I would like to call attention to another of the secret causes of the blessing granted in that work: the faith in God that marked the workers. I never met anyone who seemed to have it so deeply settled in his heart as a principle, that the way to honour God and to please Him was to expect great things from Him, as James M'Quilkin. He delighted to speak of the great things God was about to do, and spoke of them as if he saw them done.

I think I ought also to say that the previous religious teaching which the people had received much helped the progress and stability of the work. The great mass of them were entirely devoid of spiritual life; but they had been trained to value the Scriptures and taught a sound theology. The wood was laid ready to burn and the breath of God kindled it.

I might add, in conclusion, that those whom God uses in his work must be content to let Him have all the glory. When the Evangelical Alliance met in Belfast in the year 1859, and nothing was being spoken of but the wonderful revival then going on, I sat beside the sister with whose quiet labours it all originated, and her name was not once even referred to. She got no honour. And she was content to have it so. She did not "receive honour from men" but "sought the honour that cometh from God only."

Oxford Notes.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

LAST week Mr. Arrowsmith, of the Children's Special Service Mission, gave an earnest address to undergraduates on "A 'Varsity Man's Influence with Boys." Many of the men are engaged during the "Long" in the work of the mission.

Rev. Barclay Buxton, from Maksuye, Japan, has visited Oxford. At one meeting he gave a very helpful account of work in Japan, illustrating the power of the Gospel over individual hearts, both of rich and poor, and of the devotion of native Christians.

The needs of Sierra Leone and of "The Great Lone Land" were pleaded last week, the former by Rev. E. H. Elwin, a missionary in Africa, and the latter by Rev. J. Lofthouse, from Fort Churchill, on Hudson Bay. Mr. Lofthouse had a cheering story to tell of Crees and Chipewyans knowing, loving, and living the truth.

On Thursday evening a reception took place at the invitation of Viscountess Dillon in the Y.M.C.A. hall. A large number of friends assembled, and the winter's work is now in full swing. A monthly devotional meeting has been started to emphasise the spiritual character of the society's work.

"Own" Missionaries.—The encouragement of natives to engage in Gospel work is a first principle of progress with many missionaries. The co-operation of friends at home in the effort of maintaining native workers is a pressing need. An esteemed correspondent, who has done something to organise assistance on these lines for more than one important field, recommends the formation of bands of a hundred or more Christians who will undertake, at stated times, to pray for the work, and to give so much per week, month, or year towards the support of "our own native evangelist." Auxiliary efforts on this plan have worked well in several instances. Particulars may be had from Mr. N. Northey, "Elim," The Greenway, Hillingdon, Middlesex.

Bethesda Town Mission (Portsmouth).—It has been determined to restore the building in Little Southsea-street, known as "Our Lads' Own." For some time it has been in an insanitary and unsafe condition; and, considering its age (over 100 years), this is not to be wondered at. It will practically have to be rebuilt; this, with certain fittings, will cost £150. God has indeed blessed the work in the past. It was begun in 1873, and consists of Sunday school, Bible classes, recreation and instruction evenings for youths and boys of the rough class, a girls' evening having been lately added. It is hoped to extend the work in the future, so that the building may be used still more frequently. A portion of the needed outlay has yet to be raised. Communications may be addressed to the superintendent of the mission, Commander Key, 67, Victoria-road, N., Southsea.

Protestant Notes.

A PENNY tract on the Lutheran doctrine of consubstantiation has been written by Rev. Dr. Wright, and is published by the Protestant Reformation Society. He maintains that the Lutheran doctrine is thoroughly Protestant in its denial of any sacrifice being repeated in the memorial supper, and it is far from being identical with the ritualistic tenets of the present day.

Dr. Horton has fluttered many journalistic dovecotes by his assertion that Romish emissaries exercise an influence on the daily press far out of proportion to the numbers of that communion. He has been questioned on the subject, but substantially sticks to his guns. The British Weekly asserts that Dr. Horton is right in the main; the writer says:—

Very few editors have the smallest conception of the influence and power of Nonconformity, and they are rather reluctant to recognise it, or to believe that one-half of the English public are interested in its doings. Dr. Horton has done excellent service by calling attention to the matter, and he may be assured that no one who knows the inner world of journalism really disagrees with him.

Dr. Robertson, of Venice, contrasting in a recent article the methods of the Papacy at home and from home, draws a strong impeachment of Romish teaching in Italy as encouraging falsehood in speech and life. He warns people not to be deceived by the specious appearance of the Papal Churches in Great Britain, and says:—

In Italy the Papal Church exists only to make war by any and every weapon in its power on the country. The priests in Italy are drawn from the lowest of the low. So discredited is the priesthood that no respectable father of a family would give his son to it. Some years ago a newspaper published the names of the sons of beggars and criminals who were being bought to make priests of. There are many parishes for which priests cannot be got. Priests are rarely received into society. Confession is felt to be so demoralising and so degrading that few persons now go to it.

The committee of the National Council of Evangelical Free Churches propose a "Cromwell Celebration" in April, when the three hundredth anniversary of the great Protector's birthday occurs, with a Cromwell exhibition and a great demonstration in London. The committee also urge vigilance in watching the introduction of Romanist and sacerdotal teaching into the elementary schools.

The winter season of lectures by the Protestant Institute of Scotland was lately inaugurated by Rev. C. A. Salmond, of Edinburgh. The lecturer said the only alternative to established sacerdotalism appears to be a disestablished church.

A writer who is quoted in The Bulwark for December, describes Rome's evil influence on South American society in matters of purity of life, political unrest, and the growth of atheism. The correspondent adds:—

Only a few days ago I listened to an influential Brazilian declare that the Church of Rome is the curse of the country, and that, as he loved his native land, he would do his very best, by the distribution of Bibles and tracts, to introduce the religion of the Protestants into the country to save the people from wholesale destruction.

An American correspondent of the same paper makes the following statement:—

Should the Philippines come permanently under our flag there should be no such mistake in reference to them as that into which we fell with the freedmen. Here lies one of the dangers from the powers of Romanism, both at home and abroad. Now that the Philippines, as well as Cuba and Porto Rico, seem certain to pass under our control, Roman Catholic officials are striving, with their accustomed energy, to prevent Protestant missionaries from going to these islands. Romanism sees its opportunity of acquiring millions of an accession to its supporters under an American flag. It will be the champion of "manhood suffrage," whilst putting forth every possible effort to keep the millions entering into the currents of our national life under the same religious system that has been a curse to them in the past,

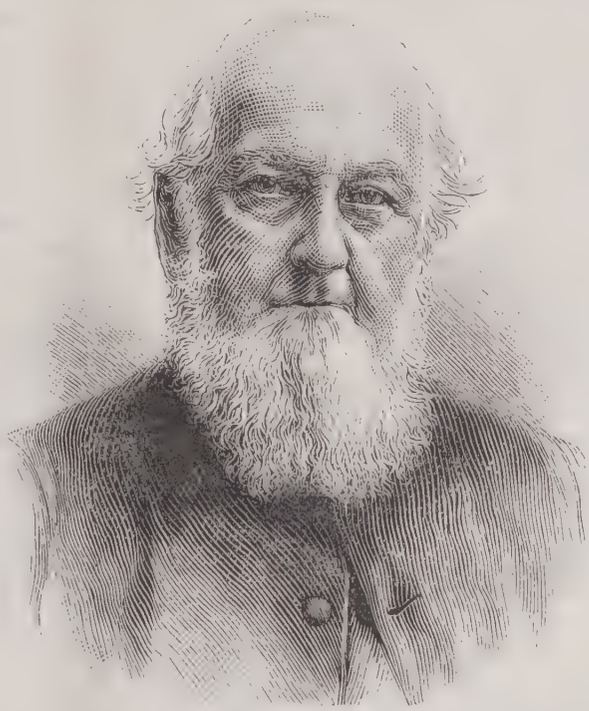
The fact that in a recent utterance at Bristol Mr. A. J. Balfour, leader of the House of Commons, devoted a good part of his speech to the Ritualistic crisis in the Established Church shows the grave view of the situation taken in high political quarters. Mr. Balfour looks to the bishops to repress the lawlessness which he admits to exist in some quarters. We scarcely feel, however, from the tenor of his utterances, that he has gauged the issues at stake, from the Protestant point of view.

City Workwomen. — Ladies are needed to hold dinner and tea-hour services in City work-rooms, also one to reside with hon. secretary.—Address, c.o. Hall-Keeper, 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

Among the Indians.

THE LATE REV. JOHN CHAPMAN.

THE subject of this sketch, who was born at Ware, was converted early in life. The commencement of his pilgrimage as made peculiarly bright with the fact that is mother was brought to the Lord Jesus bout the same time. It was the old thing ver again with both of them. They themelves had found Christ, and they must needs eek to bring others to Him; thus their home as thrown open for the preaching of the ospel, and, in fact, became "a little sanuary" for those among their neighbours ho feared the Lord and loved to think upon is name.



Mr. Chapman began to work systematically r his Divine Master at Brighton about the ear 1840, afterwards going to Derby, where e formed a lifelong friendship with the late ishop Anderson. It was through the ersuasion of this worthy man of God that e offered himself for missionary work in ast, but almost unknown, "Rupert's Land." Ie was ordained on December 23, 849, and was destined to go through any after-days of danger and hardhip. At one time he was at death's oor with fever, while on a visit to a ew missionary settlement. He was ving in the vestry of a little church hich he was building when the fever eized him. There he lay for three ays and nights without food or drink, uring which time no human being ame near him. Twice his home was urnt, being on one occasion struck y lightning, on another taking fire the night. In the latter case it was s though he and his dear ones had een placed between two deaths, exosure to the wintry cold threatening o be as dangerous as remaining in the urning house; indeed, for his own art, he got most severe frost-bites in is attempts to subdue the flames, one and being frozen while the other was urnt.

One of his most trying experiences as in connection with the flood at he Red River, so graphically described y Bishop Anderson in his "Notes," ublished by Messrs. Hatchard in 1873. Mr. Chapman was very fond of the dians and got on well with them. Many incidents, partly amusing, hough somewhat alarming, occurred in is experience. Once, for example, a g brave entered his house and deanded rum. He refused it. The other ointed significantly at his tomahawk, and eclared his intention of having rum or a calp. Mr. Chapman, in return, pointed at is own somewhat bald pate, and asked the truder how he was going to handle it. his caused a laugh; but seeing that the llow was likely to proceed to extremities, e took him by the shoulders and gave him he same kind of dismissal as a blackguard England would have got under similar circumstances, the man going off completely owed.

He gave his land for the Indians to settle on. He visited their sick, preached the ospel to them, befriended them in their stress. No uncommon thing was it for him visit all night, after a hard day's work, nd he could often have been seen in early orning running miles down the frozen Red ver and visiting their tents in order, and nouncing the place where he was going to old a meeting in the evening. Many conversions followed his labours, and some grateful letters still remain which he received from his children in the faith. He has been often heard to say that some of the happiest deathbeds he had ever experienced were among the North American Indians.

The greatest trial of all to both Mr. Chapman and his wife was the loss of their two daughters, who died at the Red River; and this, more than anything else, influenced them to return to England, from which they had been absent for eighteen years, having had, as the old gentleman would sometimes say, a fair taste of frost, fever, fire, and flood.

After taking the curacy of Christ Church, Burton-on-Trent, Mr. Chapman accepted the vicarage of Calton, in Derbyshire, and subsequently that of Longnor, near Buxton, making numbers of friends wherever he went. He eventually settled down with his only son, Rev. D. M. B. Chapman, of St. Mark's, Preston, and few are they who have been privileged to spend an evening at that vicarage who have not brought away some pleasant recollection of "grandfather," as he was generally called. The St. Mark's people all learnt to love him; and when his body was removed from the vicarage for burial six hundred friends, in spite of pouring rain, followed it to its resting-place.

He was one of the pioneer workers of that country where everything is now so vastly different, in company with Archdeacons Cochran, Hunter, and Cowley, who are also in the presence of the King. These men, whose names are comparatively unknown, did much rough work and endured many severe trials and hardships of which those who have entered into their labours have, perhaps, but little conception.

A Medical Mission to the Maoris.—The New Zealand secretary of the C.M.S. writes:—"I am glad to say that at last one of the native masters of the Te Aute College and some of the elder scholars are reading for the medical preliminary, with a view to a proper medical mission for the Maoris. Had medical missionaries been at work here, for the past ten years even, the native doctors and healers of various kinds would not have succeeded in obtaining the hold they have now acquired, even over professing Christians."

Workwomen in France.

A FRENCH journal, La Fronde, written and edited by women in the interest of women, bitterly complains of the injustice with regard to the remuneration of the work of women as compared with that of men. The reproach is addressed as much to the Government as it is to the private exploiters of women's labour.

Referring to the work in the Navy, the journal says:—At Toulon about 300 working women are employed in the work-rooms of Pyrotechnics of Legoubren. They are subjected to the same rules as the men; they begin and finish their daily work at the same hour, give the same important services, and are exposed to the same dangers; but as to privileges and benefits there is no equality whatever. The woman begins with 1·50fr. per day, and never exceeds 2·45fr. The man begins with 2·50fr., and may rise to 4·50fr.

In case of illness the man is entitled to the half of his wages, and to be admitted as free patient to the Naval Hospital. The woman enjoys no such privilege. Her pay is withheld from the moment of her being taken ill, and if she did not take the precaution of becoming a member of a society of mutual help, she is left without any help.

Women employed at the hospitals as laundresses, ironers, mattress-makers, etc., are dealt with in the same unjust way, receiving less pay than men for (in many instances) much better work, and no hope of a future pension, to which they were entitled in former years.

The wives of sailors and workers in the Arsenal are not better off. In certain cases, such as illness, the husband may receive a pension after fifteen years' service, the wife has no right to it after his death. To entitle her to a pension her husband must have been twenty-five years in the service, paying into the pension fund. One year or even one month short of this time deprives the poor widow of all benefit; no matter how hard she struggled during the previous twenty-four years to enable her husband to pay the deductions from his salary, she is left in poverty, sometimes with a large family.

Woman can only expect justice where God is honoured and where Christian teaching underlies the principles of society. Respect for and justice towards women go parallel with the progress of Christianity. In our own country there is still much to be desired, not only in "showing all honour to the weaker vessel," but in bare justice, in simple human kindness, in relief from the deceiver and the oppressor. J. Anthony Froude attributed the amelioration of English manners to the Revival in the last century.

W. M.

Mexico.—Mr. Eglon Harris, of Orizaba, in a recent letter tells of another soul won for Christ through his monthly paper, El Sembrador. This young convert, a lady of Oaxaca, writes to him:—"Never before had I thought of such love. Until now all my hope and all my refuge has been 'the Virgin of the Soledad,' and the priests who gave me absolution after confession and penance. I thought I should be made worthy of glory by obeying the Roman Church. I had never heard that the blood of our Lord Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin. To-day it is all my delight, for I have come to see myself as the most vile sinner. Please to think of me as your sister in Christ." Communications regarding Mr. Harris's work may be addressed to Mr. John Mercer, "Harburg," Fallowfield, Manchester.

United Free Churchmen.

THE great meeting in the City Temple last Thursday evening was truly described as a unique event in modern religious history. It was gratifying to note the lofty tone that pervaded the speeches. The gathering was really a Protestant rally, and a counterblast to the priestly and superstitious sacerdotalism of the hour, but there was no spirit of antagonism to the Established Church as a Christian community. We may fairly hope and expect that the enthusiasm generated by the addresses will not evaporate in merely negative protest against the wrong, but will find fruition in the revived spiritual life of all the Churches represented, and in widely enlarged effort for the evangelization of our land.

Dr. Clifford presided over a densely crowded assembly, and his opening address was all that could be desired from the Evangelical point of view. Such a memorable gathering, he said, registered a forward march in the development of the most important religious movement of the closing years of this century. They represented the convictions and purposes of nearly two millions of Free Church members, and were training more than three millions of children in their Sunday schools. The speaker commented in glowing terms on the real spiritual heart-unity that now exists among the free churches of the country, and on the intensely Evangelical character of their federation. From first to last

THIS IS SUPREMELY A SPIRITUAL MOVEMENT.

"We stand for the Bible as against the Mass; for the Christianity of the New Testament against the corrupted and distorted Christianity of priests and clerics. We are the legatees of the Reformation, and are constrained to do battle with the Popery of Roman Catholicism on the one hand, and with the infinitely more subtle and dangerous Popery of the Anglican Church on the other."

Dr. Clifford claimed that far from thinking that the State should have nothing to do with religion, they thought Parliament was not sufficiently religious in the deepest sense of that word. It has not yet found a way of restoring the criminal, of helping the weak and the poor, of doing justice between man and man, in recovering the fallen and compassing the salvation of those who are ready to perish. The concluding words were full of faith and hope, and determination.

Eleven speeches followed. Dr. Joseph Parker expressed the conviction that the Church of England would eventually disestablish itself. "When it has warmed the viper of illicit Popery into life and energy, the viper will strike the Establishment dead." As Englishmen we must not allow sacraments, or priests, or ceremonies to come between the Divine Saviour and the human soul.

As president of the Primitive Methodist Conference, Rev. John Smith hailed the proposed Cromwell celebration. He asserted that in East Anglia the ritualistic clergy are striving to take away the open Bible from the people. Rev. W. Hutton, Moderator of the English Presbyterian Church, recalled the persecutions of Covenanting days in Scotland and of the Smithfield fires, and thanked God for the advances we have made; such a movement as this is a timely and significant answer to

THE CHALLENGE OF MODERN SACERDOTALISM.

Rev. E. D. Cornish, president of the U.M. Free Churches, urged a more emphatic witness to the spiritual in their church life. Mr. R. Lee, as representing the Independent Methodist Communion, hinted at the presence of the sacerdotal spirit even among the free churches in the denial of the rights of "laymen" to officiate at the Lord's Supper. He testified very warmly to the results of a recent mission by Gipsy Smith at Wigan.

Rev. D. Heath, president of the Methodist New Connexion Conference, contended that New Testament puritanism is the only saving salt of any church. He deemed it downright blasphemy for any ecclesiastic to adopt the title of "My Lord Bishop" or a "right reverend father in God." Rev. S. Vincent, president of the Baptist Union, urged that they should follow the example of Christ in looking at and meeting the hard facts of human life. The wonderful unity expressed by the gathering seemed to show that the airs of Pentecost were blowing about them. In this crisis they ought to make such a protest as will reach past Parliament to the foot of the throne itself.

Most applauded of all was the speech of Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, president of the Wesleyan Conference, who thanked God that he had lived to see this day. Replying to questions sometimes asked as to what the F.C. Federation had done, he said they had been organising their forces for the last five years; before another five years were over the devil and his servants would find out what they were doing. He when they would not have to criticise their Episcopal brethren. As soon as these are freed from State fetters and take Christ as the Head of the Church they will be welcomed into the Free Church Federation. Such is the unity as to essential truths now prevalent among the Free Churches that they have been able to prepare a new Catechism without a dissentient voice in the Council; it will be published next month. Speaking of the social work to be done, Mr. Hughes said that if any of their young brethren wanted to wet their spears, the first body of Dervishes they might attack were the liquor-sellers. He eloquently pleaded for Sunday closing that would give them a sober Sunday in England as well as in other parts of the kingdom. Mr. Hughes paid a tribute of admiration to Sir Wm. Harcourt for his action in the ritualistic controversy, and declared his conviction that any political party that sought to set up a Roman Catholic or other sectarian University at this time of day would be smashed into a thousand atoms.

The succeeding speeches by representatives of the Congregational Union, the Bible Christians, and the Society of Friends seemed rather an anti-climax after such strong remarks, but Mr. Rowland's plea for the prevention of overlapping in the villages was a most valuable one.

St. Giles' Christian Mission.

THE twenty-second annual meeting in connection with Mr. Wheatley's well-known work on behalf of friendless juvenile offenders and discharged prisoners was held on Thursday last with conspicuous success, Mr. W. R. McConnell, Q.C., chairman of the London County Sessions, presiding.

The mission hall in Little Wild-street, Drury-lane, was filled with an audience prompt to recognise the value of the mission's accomplishments. Brightly decorated as the building was with Gospel texts and appealing aphorisms in red and blue, the most taking sight was yet to be found in the serried ranks of snowy-capped and aproned servant girls, and close-packed squads of cheery and intelligent lads, who, by dint of honest industry, had earned the commendation of their employers and the right to a special prize.

Mr. F. A. Bevan, the treasurer, said the work at the prison gates, morning by morning, was carried on with undiminished vigour. Last year 20,593 free breakfasts were supplied to discharged prisoners immediately upon their release, and during the twenty-one years they had been engaged in the prison-gate work they had provided to male and female discharged prisoners. Every year about 6000 ex-prisoners were assisted with tools and clothing, with a view to leading them to lead honest lives. Efforts were made every morning at the prison gates to induce discharged prisoners to sign the pledge, and up to the present time 77,000 had voluntarily done so. At the five boys' homes they annually received about 500 friendless juvenile offenders. In connection with the evangelistic and general mission work, services for adults and children were constantly being held. At the home for destitute women some 500 applicants were annually attended to, and large numbers of the suffering wives and children of prisoners were annually assisted.

Mr. W. R. McConnell expressed the pleasure it gave him to award prizes instead of punishments, and urged the young people to continue in their good courses. "Do your duty as if your employer's eye were always on you; with determination and thoroughness. Never shirk or dodge your work. It is not given to everyone to achieve golden success; but, depend upon it, industry and integrity go very far towards attaining it. 'To thine own self be true'; as by the practise of the sound advice given you by your friends in the mission you have done well, so by perseverance in the same paths you shall find that the future has grand things in store. Moreover, do not forget but in all your strivings endeavour so to live and so to die that you shall hear from the great Judge of all, 'Well done, good and faithful servant.'"

Mr. Wheatley, disclaiming all personal credit, said they must be helpers one of another, and live for the rescue of the perishing. In a few pointed sentences he thanked employers who had given practical aid in providing work, and the judges, magistrates, and police, who had been so thoughtfully helpful; and recognised the good work done by other societies. The work originated in simple preaching of the Gospel to the poor, and the Gospel is still its backbone. It is not enough to put new garments on people; there must be a change of heart. The work, which is entirely dependent on voluntary contributions, includes the relief of the deserving poor, who are visited in their own homes; the assistance of the better class of discharged prisoners—only those desiring to do rightly being aided, so that no unrepentant rascal is allowed to sponge upon the money of the philanthropic; the saving of juvenile offenders from a life of crime:—they are taken into one of the five boys' homes, sheltered from evil influences, found employment, clothed and fed, and saved from "prison taint"; the assistance of prisoners' wives and children, who are left not infrequently, quite homeless and foodless; and the training of unfortunate and destitute women for domestic service.

Alderman T. V. Strong referred to the difficulty of reclaiming old offenders, as illustrated by two cases recently under his notice, one a woman who, under forty years of age, was under sentence for the fortieth time at one gaol alone, and another just over forty, who was there for the fifty-second time. While not relaxing effort on behalf of these hardened ones, he rejoiced that so strenuous an effort—whose excellence was evidenced by the bright faces around him—was made to rescue the young.

Mr. Loveland-Loveland, Q.C., testified both to the wide usefulness of the work, and the continued great need. He wished he wherewith to finance it, and trusted it would meet with all the support it needed. Offences against the person by young revolver-carrying lads were frequently before him, and the St. Giles's Mission was their chief hope for the reclamation of such characters.

Mrs. McConnell gracefully distributed the prizes, the procession of recipients filing past forming a spectacle which aroused the enthusiasm of the platform, especially when Mr. Wheatley announced that the chief prize winner, a young man who had for years enjoyed a good character, was about to take unto himself a wife.

Mr. Lane, Q.C., and other magistrates added their commendations, and amongst the donations announced was one of £50 from Dr. Anderson, Chief Commissioner of Police. Funds are very urgently needed for the purchase of premises for an orphanage for prisoners' children, and a convalescent home for the sick poor, and especially and urgently for the maintenance of the work among youthful ex-prisoners.

Seamen's Christian Friend Society.—In our report of the address of Rev. G. J. Hill at the recent Home Missions Convention, it was stated that this Society has "homes, rests, and institutes in nearly forty ports." Mr. Hill informs us that whereas this number of ports are visited and missioned by the agents of the society, there are only about one-fourth as many buildings.

How to Conduct Prayer Meetings.

By D. L. MOODY.

THE following notes of an address given in Edinburgh about twenty-four years ago will be found equally valuable now:—

1. Get the people close together.—Do not let hem be scattered over a large place as if they were fraid of coming near the leader, or of touching one nother. If we want to make a fire burn we lay he sticks close together; they warm and kindle up ne another.

2. Let the meeting-place be well ventilated.—'eople often fall asleep, not under what is said to iem, but from want of fresh air. Let the place be ell lighted and comfortably warm.

3. Have some good singing.—I do not object to ie Psalms, nor to the favourite hymns we all so ve, such as "Rock of Ages," etc., but do not let s have these always. Freshness and variety are ttractive. There is no one I like to see so well as ay wife, but I like to see other people besides. A ood new hymn is often of great use; even a new ymn-book once and again. Plenty of good sing- ng enlivens the services, and makes young people ke to come again.

4. When we have special meetings, let us have PECIAL prayer.—We meet for that object; let us eep to that object. If a lot of commercial men ad a meeting to discuss insurance, and one began talk about temperance, he would be at once alled to order. That was not what they met for. f a Bill were before Parliament, and a man rose to peak, do you think he would be suffered to ramble bout any Bill whatever which had been discussed uring the last sixteen hundred years? No; he ust speak to the matter before the House, or else t down. So if men meet to pray for the revival f God's work in Scotland or elsewhere, let them tick to the point, and not scatter over all manner f subjects.

5. Let requests be received for special cases.—A nother's for her family, a brother's for his sisters, nd so on; and thanksgivings too. If a father ives thanks for the conversion of a son, does it ot stir up another father to ask prayer for his? nd why not let the lad tell his own experience? Ve have more than one instance of this in cripture. It would not hurt Presbyterians had ney a little more of this kind of thing—something f the freedom of their Methodist brethren.

6. Let the minister or leader presiding do little ore than give the key-note to the service.—Do not t him kill it with a long address. Let him say hat he has to say, and get out of the way, that here may be room for others to follow.

7. It is well to give out the NEXT subject at the revious meeting.—It gives members time to think nd read about it—to talk about it in their families r elsewhere. In this way many will have a word o say, and you may get no lack of friends to take art, if it be only to give an idea, to read a promise, nd to say how it has been blessed to them. But ll must be short. If one brother prays for fifteen inutes, and another brother for fifteen more, there ill be time for little besides. Let the briefest ord be encouraged and said at once, without fear f it being counted an interruption.

8. Do not scold the people who have come because he rest have not come; though if you could get the bsentees by themselves, by all means give it to iem. But if we find that people do not come, it is ften the worthy minister's fault. If he gives a ry, wearisome talk, those who come once will not ome again. Make it interesting, and those who ome once will come back. If there were stiffness nd formality here, you would soon cease coming. must be taken out of the meeting, or it will nother it. There is generally plenty of talent to eep the meeting going. Here in Edinburgh we have more of it round us every day than we can use. But it is not always talent that does best: I have never felt my heart more full in this place than under the few words which our coloured brother (one of the Jubilee Singers) spoke to us the other day.

9. If we are discouraged, do not let any one know it.—Let others pray. If we are not in heart to pray, let us leave it to others. If we are gloomy, our gloom will be contagious. Let us keep it to ourselves.

10. Do not have more than two prayers consecutively.—If there be more, or many, we get wearied; let us vary with a hymn, then an incident, or a word upon a text. So we shall keep moving right along all the time. Many have musical talent; let them train and use it for Christ. What blessed help we have had from the Jubilee Singers, who not long ago were all slaves, and are now singing so sweetly of Jesus, and trying to lift up their race. Many Christians have talents to sing as sweetly as they, if they would only cultivate them so as to use them for Christ.

11. Do not let us have a formal address.—A brother begins, "Now I am going to address you," and then perhaps a long preamble. We get frightened at the beginning, and tired before the end. Let men condense, say what they have to say, and make way for others.

12. Have the meeting short.—If men are tired they will not come back again. Better send them away hungry. If the interest continues for an hour, keep it up for an hour; if for half an hour, it is then time to stop. Keep your hand upon its pulse, and make good use of every minute; and do not let us think it less interesting because we do not take part in it. There was an old deacon in our country, very prosy, who used to tire the people. When asked how the meeting had got on, he would say, "Oh, a splendid meeting." None but himself felt it so; but then he had spoken.

13. Avoid discussion.—If a man brings in a controverted question, do not allow it. Do not reprove him on the spot, but take him privately and advise him.

14. If we cannot get members to take part, go and speak to them about it in private.—"Can't we make the meeting more interesting? Couldn't you say a word?" "No, no, I have never been accustomed to it." "Well, you'll never begin any sooner. Mightn't you try?"

15. Be sure and throw the meeting open half the time.—Let anyone speak and pray, who has a word or a petition. If I go with a burden laid upon my heart, which I wish to be removed, if one or two take all the time, I have no opportunity. The Spirit has been working, and is not the Spirit grieved? His working is hindered.

16. Be punctual.—If I advertise a meeting for twelve o'clock, let me keep to the hour. If I do not begin till ten minutes past, I break my promise. Is it honest for Christian men to do so? And close punctually. Business men count upon that.

17. Lastly. Seek to make sure that in going to the meeting you are going to it in the Spirit.—There are times when one cannot feel this, but since I began so to work, I can say that I never went to such a meeting in the Spirit and came away disappointed.

West Green Hall, Tottenham.—In view of the growing interest evinced in the work at West Green, Mr. Wheatley, founder and pastor, recently explained that the aims of himself and the committee were to gather a congregation from those who were attending no place of worship. In that respect the work had been much blessed. Philanthropic work is a special feature of the efforts made. "We aim at doing all the good we can in respect to both the temporal and spiritual needs of those with whom we come in contact. We 'preach the Word,' to the end that souls may be saved and helped heavenward, and would, as far as possible, help the helpless, the poor and needy, the sick and afflicted, and the widow and the fatherless—and we are not working in vain. The third annual report is just out and gives particulars of the work."

Shankill Mission, Belfast.

THE beautiful hall in the Shankill Mission-buildings, Belfast (a report of the opening of which appeared in our last), is a glorified tent, and an exemplification of the great value of tent-work as an evangelistic agency. Rev. Henry Montgomery is one of those ministers of Jesus Christ who has escaped the deadly régime of How-not-to-do-it.

When John the Baptist sent his disciples to ask Jesus, "Art Thou He that should come, or do we look for another?" the Master's crowning credential was, "To the poor the Gospel is preached.' The credential of some of his present-day repre sentatives would rather be, "The Gospel is preached to the middle and upper middle classes."

Mr. Montgomery visited Shankill-road one disengaged Sabbath evening, and was appalled by the congested condition of the streets in comparison with the half-empty churches. He set to work among the neglected people, and, as in the case of his Lord, they were very attentive for to hear him.

My visit to Belfast was on the opening days, when the buildings were on show; but a telegram informs me that last Sunday, when they had settled down to work amongst the population of the neighbourhood, they had a splendid start, the great hall crowded.

I think it is certain that had this fine hall been built without the antecedent tent the effect would have been different. Into the latter the people were not afraid to come in their working clothes, and the women with their shawls over their heads. Gradually they came to know Mr. Montgomery and his helpers, and to regard them as their friends. Now they feel at home in the hall because their friends are there.

As Jonathan inspired his armour-bearer with his own enthusiasm, so Mr. Montgomery has drawn not a few around him who say, like Jonathan's companion, "Do all that is in thy heart; turn thee: behold I am with thee according to thy heart." Not least among these are Mr. Wm. J. W. Roome, M.S.A., the architect, and Mr. McLaughlin, the builder. The former was, I believe, a young man in the Regent-street Polytechnic, notable for his Christian zeal. He has written a graphic sketch of the work, illuminated with pictures and poetry. It is called "Brighter Belfast," and may be obtained for 6d. (1s. cloth) of Messrs. Wm. Strain and Sons, Great Victoria-street, Belfast. The builder, Mr. McLaughlin, has dealt very liberally in his account. He himself is evidently a man of prayer and good works.

Another helper in this holy war is Mr. Thompson, who has contributed £1000, with more to follow.

Mr. D. J. Findlay, of Glasgow, who had more than once come over, like Jonathan to David in the wood, to strengthen his brother's hands in God, said that every chair in the building had been consecrated by prayer.

Thus, when a man devotes himself to the service of God, independently of ordinary ruts, the Master of assemblies sends him helpers from expected and unexpected quarters.

I might say much more. In answer to prayer, God will raise up many more such men, and answer the cry, "O Lord, revive thy work." R. C. M.

To my Larger Congregation.

THROUGH these pages, from which I have so often had the opportunity of speaking to you, I now ask your prayers, as I fare forth, in Christ's name, to the great Empire of India.

Conventions have been arranged for me in thirteen great missionary centres, and I hope to have opportunities of meeting with many of God's honoured and beloved servants of all denominations.

Great expectations are being cherished that our Father will greatly use and bless this visit; but I am persuaded that this can only be the case, in answer to the united and prevalent prayer of his people.

This is what I greatly desire. There is a marvellous opportunity on the one hand, and infinite resources on the other. Oh, pray that all grace may abound towards me, and that I may have all sufficiency in all things, and abound to every good work. F. B. Meyer.

THE CHILDREN'S CHRISTMAS CRUSADE, DECEMBER, 1898.

AN URGENT APPEAL.

HOW sad are many children's lives, and how impossible it is for our helpers to assist the needs of these little ones, and to devise special ways of giving them a real Christmas. Cannot we share this burden with them? We may be very busy ourselves, but are there not many children whom we know, living in sheltersd nurseries in the atmosphere of love, whom we might ask to help to pour gladness into the hearts of their little brothers and sisters who are living in our very midst, and who will otherwise receive no special treat this Christmas?

Last year our recruits and many other children helped to lighten the lives of hundreds of boys and girls by their gifts and loving letters. This year we hope to do the same in different parts of England.

One friend writes: "Many of our children are very poor and badly clad, and a present such as you suggest would be a real godsend. Christmas will come with a new meaning to them this year."

Another says: "My population is now over 20,000, and is still increasing. Last winter, owing to the coal strike, the cries of the children for bread, when there was not a morsel in the house, nor any money to buy with, were pitiful to hear."

Others write: "Our people are all very poor, and many live in cellars; sometimes three families in one house." "An unexpected gift of clothing, with something good to eat, will likely make a glad Christmas for the children." "We have 10,000 souls to tend; many of the fathers and mothers are injured in the coal-mines, and their families are consequently very poor."

Many children in our homes will be receiving new and costly presents. Will you not ask them to join our Crusade of Love this Christmas by sparing some of their old treasures for the little ones who are still held captives within the citadels of sin in our great cities, and amongst whom the soldiers of the Cross are toiling so bravely? Warm clothing, and toys, new and old, will be most thankfully received by us. Names and addresses of those to whom hampers may be sent, or of individual children to whom a letter and a Christmas card or gift would give untold delight, may be had from the hon. secretary, C.P.A. Recruits, Falcon Court, Fleet-street, E.C., to whom all communications should be addressed.

Our Christmas number of "On Service"* contains a full and interesting account of the Christmas Crusade.

The Recruits now have three representatives of their own in the home mission field, but we feel sure that there are many more children who would help us if they knew of the crying and urgent need for help which comes to us from the 112 parishes on our list still awaiting aid!

Tom's Sixpence and What He Did With It.

I WONDER if boys and girls always listen to the sermon when they go to church or chapel? Tom Anderson did not because he was only eight years old, but one Sunday morning a preacher came who told some interesting stories, and Tom listened to them all.

The first was about a poor old Scotch woman who always lived on porridge and never had any meat to eat. One day someone gave her sixpence, and, at first, she thought she would spend it at the butcher's, but then she remembered that she had often wished that she could give some money to the missionaries, and so she put the sixpence in a missionary-box instead.

As Tom listened to that story he thought it very strange indeed. He opened his eyes wide at the idea of anybody living upon porridge; they had it for breakfast in the winter, and he did not like it. Just fancy eating nothing else and being willing to give up buying meat when it was possible.

"What a good old woman she must be," he said to himself, "and how fond of missionaries. I wonder why?"

Another story soon made Tom understand. It was about a little Chinese baby-girl, whom nobody wanted except her mother, and she was afraid to keep her. Tom had never heard before that in China little girls are often killed because no one likes them. But the mother of this little one did not want her to die, and at last she remembered that the English lady missionaries were good to everybody, and so she took the baby and put it on the doorstep of their house. And then Tom heard that the baby had been taken care of, and was now a clever woman doctor, trying to cure some of the many diseases that the Chinese women suffer from. That story came just before the collection, and as it was announced, Tom thought:—

"Well, if I had a sixpence, I should like to give it too."

And then a strange thing happened. A lady sitting next Tom gave him one and whispered:

"You can give it to the collection or not, just as you like."

How pleased Tom was and how he smiled, but after all, it did not seem to be quite as easy to give it to the missionaries now that he really had a sixpence of his own. He turned it over and over in his hands as he watched the bag passing slowly from pew to pew. People had often given him money for collections before, but they had never told him that he could keep it if he liked. How many things he could buy for sixpence! Penknives, balls, tops! Tom's eyes shone as he thought of the big toy-shop he looked into on his way to school, and he longed to be able to go in and buy one of the lovely things he had seen so often. How he wished he need not give it all away; if only it had been in six pennies he might have given one.

The bag was coming very near now. Tom put the hand with the sixpence in it very deep down into his pocket, and meant to keep it there. He stared straight in front of him, not feeling very happy; but suddenly, just as the bag was passing, out came the sixpence, and dropped into it with a delightful little chink.

And what was it made Tom give it after all? Just this—he caught sight of his little sister at that moment, and she reminded him that in some places there were only missionaries to look after dear little girls like Nellie. That was the way Tom first began to give money to the missionaries. I wonder if he went on, and if you are giving money to them too.

Personal.

I have received several papers this week without any names on them. Will all remember to head their papers with name, address, and age.

Many thanks to the kind sender of a box of cuffs, cards, and lavender bags.

CHARLES AND NETTIE HUSSEY.—Am glad you are joining the Searcher, but please send in separate papers.

MAUDE N. GRAY.—In No. 149 you never gave the circumstances as asked.

T. J. GROOMBRIDGE.—I received the photo, with which I am very pleased. I quite thought I had acknowledged the receipt of it. I am getting quite a nice collection of photos of my "nephews" and "nieces."

Several of my "nephews" and "nieces" regret that they will be "too old" to enter for the next Prize Competition. The limit of age for this is 18 years, but anyone joining the weekly Searcher before they are eighteen may, if eligible, enter for the Quarterly Prize Competition up to the age of 20. Of course, AGE WILL BE TAKEN INTO CONSIDERATION when examining the papers.

MARIE MEEK.—Very glad to welcome you as one of my "nieces," and hope you will always enjoy the Searcher as much as you have this week. Please head your paper with your name, address, and age.

H. Wright (Redhill).—In order to avoid confusion, give your Christian name, as there are several belonging to the Searcher with your surname.

Edith M. Whiting.—I hope you are much better, and able to get up now.

J. W. and Janet Thomson.—Again your answers have reached me too late for correction. Papers must reach me at latest by first post Thursday?

W. H. Williamson.—You need only answer the question set for those under thirteen, as your birthday comes during the quarter, but if eligible for the Quarterly Competition, you will have to answer the question for your actual age.

Florrie Dance.—Your paper must reach here at latest by first post Thursday, otherwise your paper cannot be corrected. I will see about your getting The Christian earlier.

I received my certificate last week. I expected a certificate like the one I had before, but great was my surprise and joy when I found it was a different kind. I am very pleased with the prizes and certificates I have already received, and, persevering with the Bible Searchers this quarter, I hope to once more enter for the Prize Competition. W. A. (13 years).

"Keep Watch."

"Surely I come quickly; even so, come, Lord Jesus."—Rev. xxii. 20.

Keep watch for the Master,
The day draweth near,
Soon, soon in his glory
My Lord will appear.
Soon, soon thou shalt hear Him
All lovingly say,
"Rise up, my belovèd,
And come thou away."

Keep watch for the Master,
Glad, glad will it be,
That day when He cometh,
And calleth for thee!
Joy, joy to be ready,
Found doing his will;
Found watching and waiting,
And serving Him still.

Keep watch for the Master
Keep watch for the King.
Tasks many and varied
Thy swift days may bring.
Sweet, sweet is his service,
But 'mid its delight
Keep watch for his coming
By day and by night.

Keep watch for the Master,
While treading his ways,
Live but for his glory,
Seek nought but his praise.
Care only to hasten
His kingdom of grace,
Until, "the veil lifted,"*
Thou seest his face.

God's Exchange.

CAST away all your worldly pelf and worldly considerations, such as the favour of friends, the fear of men, sensual affection, respect of persons, honour, praise, shame, rebuke, wealth, poverty, with the love of your own selves; and in comparison with that heavenly treasure ye look for, let all these be denied and utterly refused of you, so that in no condition they do abate your zeal or quench your love towards God. In this case make no account of them, but rather repute them as vile, in comparison of everlasting life. Loses that man anything which of his carnal father and mother is forsaken, when therefore he is received of God the Father to be his child and heir in Christ? Heavenly for earthly; for mortality, immortality; for transitory things, permanent; is great gain to a Christian conscience.—Robert Smith (Martyr).

* Bishop Benson, then of Truro, said in his book, "At his appearing" did not intimate from the Greek "coming from a distance," but as of a veil lifting. This remark gave her the thought.

The Y.M.C.A.

The annual meeting of the Leicester Association was held on Nov. 28 in the County Assembly Rooms. The Mayor entertained a large number of guests. Alderman Sawday, president of the Association, gave a brief statement of the present position of the work, and addresses were delivered by Mr. J. K. Starley and Mr. Lewis Barber.

The annual meeting of the Sevenoaks Association was held on Nov. 30, when a large audience assembled in the Club Hall. Addresses were given by the Vicar of Tonbridge, Rev. C. G. Baskerville, and Mr. W. Hind Smith. Contributions were announced freeing the Association from debt and providing a good balance wherewith to begin the fourth year's work.

We may fittingly in this column draw attention to the book for young men and young women, just issued by Messrs. Passmore and Alabaster, entitled A Good Start. It contains characteristic passages from the writings and addresses of the late C. H. Spurgeon bearing on the needs and responsibilities of youthful life, and is well suited for a gift-book to earnest-minded young people. Sir George Williams contributes a preface. The price is 3s. 6d.

A series of farewell meetings were arranged from Dec. 1 at various metropolitan centres, to take leave of Mr. Oliver H. McCowen, of Tralee, who is leaving for Burmah, to take up Christian work for young men in that country as the representative of the home Associations. On Thursday evening Sir George Williams presided over a meeting at Exeter Hall, when addresses were delivered by various friends; and on Friday afternoon the National Council bade farewell to Mr. McCowen, an appropriate valedictory address being delivered by Rev. H. E. Fox, of the C.M.S. On Saturday afternoon Mr. McCowen addressed the members of Rev. F. B. Meyer's Bible-class at Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A.; on Sunday afternoon he was at Oxford Y.M.C.A.; on Monday evening at Stratford Rooms, Paddington; and on Tuesday evening last at Croydon.

The winter half-yearly meetings of the National Council were held at Exeter Hall on Friday last, and were attended by nearly one hundred representatives from England, Ireland, and Wales. The travelling secretaries presented brief reports of their work for the past six months, and foreshadowed their prospective undertakings for the early months of the new year. In the past twelve months the centres of Association work in the English union—omitting Scotland—have increased from 1,139 to 1,152, while the membership has risen from 75,836 to 80,609. Building schemes are now in progress at Newcastle-on-Tyne, Bedford, Birkenhead (junior department), Cardiff, Leicester, Blackburn, Woolwich, and Dorchester. After discussion, it was agreed that the Associations should encourage the formation of classes, the giving of lectures, and the distribution of suitable literature, setting forth the Protestant principles which are being undermined by the growth of the Ritualistic movement.

Temperance Notes.

On Guard gives the strength of the Indian Army Temperance Association as 20,496, distributed in 189 branches.

During the last licensing year about 220,000 licences for the sale of drink in Great Britain and Ireland were issued.

In objecting to music halls being licensed to sell alcoholic liquors, Mr. John Burns recently said that as much as 15 to 22 per cent. profit had been made at the Grand Music Hall, Clapham, without the aid of intoxicating drink.

The Sirdar, in his Edinburgh speech, said, with reference to the administration of the Soudan, "We wish to prevent, as far as we can, the introduction with trade of those pernicious adjuncts, the liquor traffic and dishonest dealing with natives, which too frequently in new countries accompany it."

Bishop Browne, formerly Bishop of Stepney, in presiding at his Bristol Diocesan Branch of the C.E.T.S., said that his experience in the East End of London, so different from that of Cambridge, enabled him freely to assert that he had changed his earlier opinions. He now maintained and preached that it was well to bring up everyone as total abstainers, and he said that from the knowledge gained in the East End.

A Gospel temperance mission has been conducted by Mrs. J. K. Barney (of Rhode Island, U.S.A.), now on her third visit to England, under the auspices of the B.W.T.A., at Highgate. The audiences gathered have been largely representative of the religious life of the locality, and the influence of the mission cannot fail to be widespread, deep, and lasting. Mrs. Barney's addresses were spiritual in tone, Biblical illustration and lesson largely pervading them.

INTERNATIONAL S.S. LESSONS.

December 11.

The Captivity of Judah.—Jer. lii. 1-11.

Golden Text.—"Ye shall seek Me and find Me, when ye shall search for Me with all your heart."—Jer. xxix. 13.

The First Captivity.

THIS took place (see last lesson), during the reign of Jehoiakim, by Nebuchadnezzar and his army. Do not suppose that all the people of the nation were taken captive. Only the best, like Daniel and his friends, were carried off to Babylon at this time.

Then followed a few years of quiet, during the remnant of Jehoiakim's reign.

The Second Captivity.

This occurred during the reign of Jehoiachin, the son of Jehoiakim. During his short reign he rebelled against Nebuchadnezzar, which brought the latter to Palestine with an army once more. He carried away the treasures of the Temple and 10,000 of the people; among these were the prophet Ezekiel, the great-grandfather of Mordecai (see Esther ii. 5, 6) and King Jehoiakim himself.

Second Period of Quiet (1-3).

This was during the reign of Zedekiah. He was weak and foolish; and in his folly tried to rise in rebellion against Babylon. Had he been a righteous man he might have succeeded. An heroic thing done by a bad man often leads to ruin, while the same deed done at God's command is crowned with prosperity.

The Third Captivity (4-7).

Once more Nebuchadnezzar came down and besieged Jerusalem. This siege lasted eighteen months. The teacher should describe some of the horrors of an ancient siege. Famine, disease, death, stared them in the face hour by hour. Mothers murdered their children to obtain food (6). At last the people fled from the city and it was destroyed.

Note three points of the siege:—

1. The heroism of the people; they would suffer for eighteen months rather than give in.

2. There was just a flicker of repentance. But from Jer. xxxiv. we learn how short-lived was this feeling.

3. Jeremiah's faith. In the midst of the siege he bought the land on which the enemy was encamped, thus showing his faith in the message he delivered.

Fate of Zedekiah (8-11).

The enemy overtook him in flight, carried him away to Riblah, where they subjected him to a trial and three terrible punishments.

(1) To see his own sons killed.

(2) To put out his eyes.

(3) Bound him with chains, and carried him into Babylon.

The practice of putting out the eyes of prisoners was a common custom. Compare the blinding of Samson and King John's attempt to blind Prince Arthur.

God's Patience.

The Almighty delayed the final punishment as long as possible that the people might have every chance of repentance. "He willeth not the death of the sinner, but rather that he should turn from his wickedness and live."

Bad Men are God's Swords.

He used Nebuchadnezzar to punish the wickedness of Judah. No man can escape God's service. We are all tools, willing or unwilling, in the hands of Almightiness.

We Fill our Cup.

God's mercy is never at an end, but we fill up our cup of iniquity until it runs over. He never ceases to speak, but we become so deaf that it is impossible to hear his loudest thunder crash. He never disappears but we become blind. "Seek ye the Lord while He may be found; call ye upon Him, etc."

His Kingdom knows No End.

A remnant was left after the last captivity, as a stump out of which new shoots might grow. Symbol of his spiritual kingdom. Men may persecute and disbelieve, but that kingdom grows—goes on conquering and to conquer until—

At the name of Jesus
Every knee shall bow.

[1366]

THE EVANGELISTIC FIELD.

Mrs. Baeyertz at Chester.

A MOST encouraging 16-days' mission has been conducted at Queen-street Congregational Church, Chester, by this Jewish Christian lady evangelist. Queen-street is one of the oldest and most historic Nonconformist churches in the city. It claims to have had a noble number of distinguished ministers, and to have enjoyed at one time the ministry of the great Evangelical commentator, Matthew Henry. Richard Knill laboured here half a century ago with remarkable success.

It is difficult to gauge the true magnitude and influence of this mission. All the addresses were characterised by calm, argumentative, deliberate and definite teaching. While the appeals were mainly to the intellect, to the conscience, to common sense, and to the will, they were so winged with tender, pathetic and striking illustrations, largely drawn from the treasury of personal experience, that they never failed to thrill the emotions and arouse all that is best in the human breast.

The appeal to God's own people was prominent throughout. This, backed by a marvellous marshalling of appropriate texts, lit up by a genuine Jewish genius, reproved, corrected, instructed and inspired all along the line. A passage from the Acts, in which Paul's preaching is described, suits well this mission: "And three Sabbath days reasoned with them out of the Scriptures, opening and alleging that Christ must needs have suffered, and risen again from the dead; and that this Jesus whom I preach unto you is Christ"—the result being much the same with Mrs. Baeyertz as with Paul, "And some of them believed, and consorted with Paul and Silas; and of the devout Greeks a great multitude, and of the chief women not a few" (Acts xvii. 24).

We had as many as 319 persons into the inquiry room, who after having been instructed with the open Bible in hand, filled up the converts' cards. Most of these came from forty-eight different places of worship of all denominations, and of no denomination, with which they will be identified. Almost every place within and around the city has been touched. About half the number of those who filled cards wished to be identified with Queen-street. Amongst these are many of our P.S.A. men and P.M.E. women, whom we had been praying for and expecting for some time.

A very gratifying feature of the mission is that a large proportion of the converts are men. Many more of the P.S.A. men are likely to come out for Christ in the coming weeks. "The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad."

Chester. D. Wynne Evans, Pastor.

Evangelists' Movements.

Rev. D. M. Cameron has conducted a fourteen days' mission in the U.P. Church, Moyness, with much acceptance.

An Evangelistic Mission has been conducted under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A., Falkirk, by Mr. and Miss Powers, of Hull. Some have professed conversion

Mr. D. M. Bayne, of the Evangelisation Society, has been conducting a mission in the Congregational Church, Hamilton. There has been evident signs of blessing and encouragement.

Mr. George Back, of the Open-air Mission, lately spent sixteen days in evangelising work at the Mission Hall, Barry Dock, and there have been manifest fruits of his self-denying labours.

Mr. Moody states, in the December number of Record of Christian Work, that during recent weeks he has preached in the great penitentiaries of Albany (N.Y.) and Joliet (Ill.), and has seen how evidently God's blessing rests on this prison work.

A nine days' united mission has been held at the Village Hall, Potter's Bar, by Arthur Davis; great blessing has followed. Letter after letter has been received from those who testify to salvation received while sitting on their seats without being personally dealt with. D.

Mr. Henry Varley has been having very encouraging meetings in New York. The business men's prayer meeting at the lower end of Broadway has been crowded daily. A series of addresses by the evangelist on "The Resurrection" have been helpful and inspiring to those who attended. Gatherings held at Dr. A. B. Simpson's hall have been fruitful in their influence among Christians.

A ten days' mission, organised by the Lancaster Free Church Council, was concluded on Thursday last. The missioners included ministers from London, Stafford, and other places, eight special preachers conducting services each evening, twice on the last two Sundays, and also Bible-readings during the afternoons. This was the first united mission in connection with the Free Churches in Lancaster.

Mr. F. Wycliffe Pascoe, of the Evangelisation Society, has conducted a fifteen days' mission in connection with the Baptist Church, Newbury, with very gracious results. Preceded by a full week's special prayer, the mission was marked by many tokens of the Divine presence and blessing. Many disciples were much quickened and new disciples made. Mr. Pascoe is quite young at this branch of Christian work, but is evidently called of God to it.

G. J. K.

A fifteen days' mission has been conducted by Mr. Chas. Galletly, of the Evangelisation Society, in the Public Hall, Stevenage. Bible readings were held every afternoon at the South End Mission Room. The week-night services have been well attended throughout. Large numbers have stayed to the after-meetings, and many are rejoicing having found the Saviour. The work is to be continued by weekly Bible classes for inquirers and believers and Sunday evening evangelistic services.

Messrs. Bewley and Frank Weaver have held a ten days' mission in Darlington, under the auspices of the Wesleyan Methodist Forward Movement Committee. On Sundays the Central Hall, Drill Hall, and the largest Methodist church have been occupied; while during the week the Mission Hall has been fairly attended, the weather being inclement and fatal to large audiences. Mr. Bewley Weaver speaks with the strong force of a deep soul conviction. His sermons are full of quotations from the Old and New Testaments. Now he is pleading with pathetic tenderness, now telling a thrilling story, now picturing in living characters of fire the judgment seat, the great white throne, and the day of doom, while the audience is hushed into stillness. Mr. Frank Weaver sings the Gospel with much effect. G. T.

The two evangelists had a splendid start last Sunday in a mission they are now conducting in Shankill, Belfast. The great hall, recently opened by Mr. Montgomery, was crowded.

EVANGELISTS' ENGAGEMENTS.

Mr. A. T. Jones.—Duckpool-road Baptist Church, Newport, Mon., during December.
The Evangelistic Mission.—Preachers during December:—Kilburn Hall, Kilburn Gate—Sundays at 7, Mr. W. Monro Collings, of Gosport. Malden Hall, Haverstock Hill—Sundays at 7, Thursday at 8, Mr. James Sprunt.
Mr. W. Luff, Thurs., 8th, Railway Mission, West Brompton; Fri., 9th, Welcome Home, Canning Town; [Sun., 11th, Hawridge; Tues., 13th, Malden Hall (children); Wed., 14th, Conference Hall, Stratford (Bible class), 9.30; Thurs., 15th, Cromer-street, King's Cross.
Church Parochial Mission Society.—The following missions, among others, have been arranged for December. It is hoped they will be made a subject of prayer by the readers:—Rev. W. Hay Aitken, till Dec. 11, St. George's, Newcastle-under-Lyme, Staffs; Rev. W. Bryan-Brown, Dec. 4, Borstal Convict Prison; Dec. 10-19, Sacriston, Durham; Dec. 25, St. Thomas's, Southborough, Tunbridge Wells; Rev. J. P. Cushing, Dec. 3-12, Ballynahinch, co. Down; Rev. E. Bacheler Russell, Dec. 3-13, Christ Church, Great Malvern; Rev. James Stephens, Dec. 4-19, Siddall, Halifax.

Dean Farrar on Temperance.

THE first of the lectures instituted in memory of Dr. Lees and Mr. J. H. Raper was delivered on Wednesday last week in the Church House, Westminster, by Dean Farrar. The chair was occupied by the Archbishop of Canterbury. Mr. John Kempster, hon. secretary to the trustees, stated that the fund of £1500 which had been raised in memory of Dr. Lees and Mr. Raper by 900 friends had been invested in an annuity for twenty years, to provide for the delivery of the Lees and Raper memorial lecture, as a means of continuing their temperance teaching.

Dr. Farrar spoke for over an hour and a half, reviewing the denunciations of strong drink from those in the records of ancient Egypt to the fiery words of Augustine and Thomas Aquinas, and from the Fathers down to the present day.

The Aldersgate Mid-day.

ON Monday last Mr. R. C. Morgan dwelt on the fulness of resource possessed by the converted soul—"all things are yours"—and the need of teaching to awaken slack believers to the greatness of their privileges. The speaker incidentally emphasised his belief that a widespread revival was imminent. Mention was made, among the testimonies given, of an ingathering of prodigals and "submerged" at the Victoria Home for Men; by Pastor Cameron, of blessing in missions in Nairnshire; and by Mr. Charles Cook of a number of conversions on Sunday night at the Metropolitan Theatre. Mr. Jai Bai, who, with Mr. Isu Charan, is in England on behalf of work in the unmissioned districts of India, added some interesting reminiscences of revival among the heathen.

Correction.

NATIONAL SUCCESS AND CHRISTIANITY.

Sir,—Perhaps you will allow me to point out a slight inaccuracy in your issue of November 24.

It was not Cardinal Vaughan who took part in the interesting discussion in The Spectator on the above subject. The letters you refer to were written, not by the Cardinal, but by the Cardinal's youngest brother, the Right Rev. Mgr. John S. Vaughan. The Cardinal's Christian name is Herbert.—Yours truly, Nemo.

Requests for Prayer.

For blessing on a mission, now in progress, at Saltcoats, conducted by Rev. J. Lyall, of Chicago.

For a mission to children and adults by Mr. F. A. Glover, at Bolham, Blackdown Hills, commencing December 8.

For an ingathering of souls at a mission to be held at Salem Congregational Church, Pump Pail, Croydon, Dec. 11—21.

For a Christian worker undergoing a serious operation, that he may be restored to the great work that has grown up around him.

For a mission to children at the Fox and Knot Mission, Aldersgate, E.C., to be conducted by Mr. C. Dudley Smith, commencing Dec. 11.

"He Knoweth."

"He knoweth"—
As God all knowing—yet as man!
And knowing this, tried heart, fret not
Nor be sad;
Each step, in sunshine or in shade,
His eye foresees, his hand directs,
So be glad.

"He reigneth"—
Whatever is—all life's details,
Designed or else permitted are,
By his will;
Each circumstance, however small,
His purpose veils, who marks thy "way,"
So be still.

"He ruleth"—
Yea, so overrules that all things
Made obedient, work together
His behest:
Love's purpose wrought, thy trials cease,
The gold refined the furnace leaves,
So just rest.

"He sitteth"—
Blest word, with twofold meaning fraught,
His work for thee is done—in thee
Still goes on;
His peace, his power, both thine; until
The "way" made perfect, end in heaven,
Then the crown.

W. Wetton Cox.

[Can be had, printed on neat letter cards, 8s. 3d per 100 at the Moravian Mission House, 7, New-court, Lincoln's-inn, W.C.]

Peace Sunday will be observed as usual on "the Sunday before Christmas Day," December 18. Invitations have been sent from the Peace Society's Office, 47, New Broad-street, to all ministers in charge throughout the kingdom, and already a very large number of cordial responses have been received. The recent progress of the Peace Cause and the circumstance of the hour should make this a special occasion. There is reason for much thanksgiving, and a particular need of prayer and preaching on the subject.

Hospital Steamships.

DEAR SIR,—Some time ago there was a good deal of attention turned towards Arctic travel and perils, owing to Dr. Fridjof Nansen's wonderful voyage. I wrote you a brief account of the labours of our young medical missionaries on the bleak and ice-bound coast of Labrador, how with dogs and sledges and on snow racquets they every winter cover many hundreds of miles over frozen bays and snow-capped headlands. These perilous exploits and prolonged exposures are cheerfully welcomed without the romance attaching to a Polar expedition, or the glamour cast by the idea of planting a nation's standard furthest north. The object is to plant the banner of Christ's Kingdom in the hearts of men whose life is one of the very hardest on earth, and who are cut off from the simplest privileges that have followed in the wake of the Gospel elsewhere.

It has involved many times sleeping in bags in the snow on the open ground. It has involved sharing the humble lodgings and often starvation rations of the poorest of the poor, so much so that the doctor has been asked more than once for his very dog food for the children whom he has been visiting. But it has been successful under God's good hand, and none have been the worse for it—indeed, they always write what a delightful life it is. Sweet bracing air, such glorious exercise, such grateful hearts, that we are bound to believe that it is so. God help them to plant the standard of Christ's love for the bodies and souls of men so firmly in his people's hearts that eternity may reveal a kingdom won as the reward of their labours.

Lately I have noticed considerable public attention has been turned to the possibilities of hospital steamships. During the Spanish-American war I saw it mentioned that the s.s. Solace was the first hospital steamer ever floated. Certainly it amply demonstrated the glorious opportunities such a Christ-like service offers when men are tearing one another to pieces with SHOT AND SHELL AND COLD STEEL.

During the time of the punitive expedition that this country sent to avenge the massacre at Benin a hospital steamer was employed off the coast, and proved a haven of refuge indeed to the unfortunate victims of the malarial and tropical microbes of the Niger territory. May God reward those who put it into the hearts of the authorities to send them, and God will reward such skilled women as Miss Clara Barton and others, who fearlessly went, as Miss Nightingale did before them, to work for the bodies of others.

I am not posted well enough in the modern history of steam hospital vessels to dispute any claim to priority. Alas! the servants of the King are too often only in the wake of those whose hearts are actuated merely by philanthropic motives for the bodies and human lives of their fellows. How nobly men have given of their time and money in adapting the best of modern methods for relieving pain and suffering—nay, we have only just seen a fresh example of a doctor giving his life for no higher purpose. I mean Dr. Müller. But far worse than this, wherever the god of this world has servants, have they not as a rule devoted more time, more ingenuity and more money to the advancement of his kingdom?

I roam among the toilers of the deep, the many thousands of whom form the backbone of this mighty nation. Furnishing us with a vast harvest of the sea, a very nation's food, forming a great naval reserve some 40,000 strong for the maintenance of our God-given maritime supremacy, on which our open Bible depends; surely they deserve our gratitude and our earnest Christian service. How is it, then, the Devil's agents have been first in the field? How is it all the best positions are always held in almost all our seaport towns by flaring public-houses, with their adjuncts of the crimp-house and the brothel? Why is it that houses for intoxicating liquors are nearly fifty to one for every place where temperance, innocent enjoyments, and the Master's presence can be expected? Just because there is their greatest danger and the Devil's chance. Freed suddenly from restraint, pockets full of deferred pay, frequently in a place where no one knows them or cares about them, they fall an easy victim, and many a sailor has saved his poor body from the seas to lose body and soul in the hells that crowd our seaports.

I have ineffaceably impressed on my mind a dark rainy winter night. I was walking down a public street in a seaport town. Suddenly a public-house door swung open—a young powerful fisherman reeled out into the night. Once he was a loving husband and father—a respectable citizen—a loyal subject. A thin and tattered woman stood on the pavement and addressed him. It was only a few loving words, a despairing appeal to "Come home, Jack, won't you?" With a furious oath he flung a handful of sovereigns in her face—struck her and sent her reeling into the muddy street, and then lurched off swearing. Is it not time there were more centres for aggressive work for our Saviour in such ports as Grimsby, Milford, Shields; yes, and in Ymuiden, Ostend, and those other ports across the water which our fishermen frequent to sell their hard-earned catch, and where, alas, we have heard more than once,

"ONLY A DRUNKEN ENGLISHMAN."

God help theMission to Deep Sea Fishermen to do again in these places the work they have done and are doing in Gorleston.

Thank God hospital steamships have been sent to sea. Still more let us thank Him that steam mission hospital ships have been sent, and I believe that first this time, and not second, to those sent for other objects. On the starboard bow is "Preach the Word," on the port bow is "Heal the Sick," and engraved deeply in brass on the wheel which guides the ship is the only qualification that our Saviour ever gave as necessary to successful work. Four years ago the steam hospital vessel Sir Donald went her first cruise amongst the British fishermen of North America. She carried a qualified surgeon missionary; the best part of the ship amidships, where least motion could be felt, was devoted to the hospital work. Nor could it be said, as has been often thrown against missionary enterprise, it was Gospel in the bow and whisky in the after hold. No alcohol has been allowed aboard her, though of cold water she has plenty. True, she was small, old, and ill-adapted to the work, but she bore a message of love which reached many hearts, and if one never believed in "means" before, when one saw men and women come days' journeys in boats (or in winter over the ice) to seek healing for their poor bodies, who would never have made such an effort for their souls' welfare, one could not but rejoice at our Master's first commission to the twelve.

To-day we rejoice in a new steel Hospital Mission steamer on the stocks. She is to be launched next spring, and will sail at once as a message from loving Christian hearts in this country to her oldest colony across the sea. In a boat of just this size England sent John Cabot to seek new worlds four hundred years ago. To-day we are sending our Christian message to those who followed his footsteps. In Labrador to-day, now frozen in with its mighty barriers of ice and snow, a little hospital is proclaiming this message. A devoted Christian lady, a trained nurse, is there cut off from civilisation and the world outside until next June, to follow in the footsteps of her Divine Master. Surely, the gentle, loving treatment, the hushed voice, the subdued tread, the quiet room, all speak of the Saviour's love to those who otherwise must endure sickness and suffering; yes, and death itself, unaided. Thank God for the medical missions of the world! May He graciously multiply them also, for there is no wonder that his blessing is added and his salvation manifested as a direct result thereof!—Yours faithfully,

WILFRED T. GRENFELL, Superintendent.
Royal National Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen.

Clonmel Soldiers' Home.—The ninth annual report says:—"We have been visited by Christian men stationed in Cahir, Templemore, and Tipperary. Our Sunday evening meetings have been well sustained, and our weekly Bible-readings have also been continued. One interesting feature of the temperance meetings is that the members and friends occasionally supply the programme for the evening. The home is not only a shelter for soldiers, where they can spend a pleasant and profitable evening away from the temptations of barrack life and the town, but supplies the place of a mission-hall to civilians. Visitation of barracks and hospital is continued by the workers, and has been a means of blessing." Communications should be addressed to the hon. superintendent and treasurer of the work, Mr. Edward Beale, Queen-street, Clonmel.

OBITUARY.

REV. S. HOLLINGSWORTH, D.D.

THE Irish Methodist Church has sustained a serious loss in the death of Dr. Samuel Hollingsworth, Principal of Wesley College, Dublin. He entered the ministry in 1870, and for several years continued to take the deepest interest in the education of the young, and succeeded in establishing many large and prosperous day schools. In 1891 he was elected Principal of Wesley College, and up to his death continued to hold that position with credit to himself and advantage to the church with which he was connected. He cleared off a heavy building debt of about £8000, and doubled the number of the boarders, while his pupils won not a few of the highest university distinctions. His tact and wisdom were prominent characteristics, and made him to be greatly beloved and trusted by those who knew him. He has died in his fifty-fifth year.

PRINCIPAL MICHAEL JONES.

On Friday, at Bod Iwan, Bala, died Rev. Michael D. Jones, the former Principal of Bala Independent College, at the age of seventy-six. He studied at Carmarthen and Highbury Colleges, and on the completion of his course left this country for America, and in 1848 was ordained in Cincinnati. In 1854, on his father's death, he was chosen to succeed him as Principal of the Independent College at Bala. This appointment he held until the college was amalgamated with another college under the title of the Bala-Bangor College. Principal Jones advocated the establishment of a Welsh colony in Patagonia, and succeeded in enlisting a band of 153 fellow nationalists, who set sail and landed at the mouth of the Chebut river on July 28, 1865. The colonists endured severe distress for several years, and but for the friendliness of an Indian tribe would probably have been starved out. The settlement is now comparatively successful, though whether it has really attained or promoted the objects of its founder is a matter of some doubt.

Personalia.

Mr. Ephraim Venn is leaving Reading. His address after December 18 will be 2, Greystone, Yeovil.

Major Whittle, we regret to learn, is still very weak as a result of the malarial fever contracted when working among the U.S. troops in the South. He is now resting at Clifton Springs.

Lord and Lady Aberdeen, accompanied by Lord Haddo and Lady Marjorie Gordon, arrived at Haddo House, Aberdeenshire, on Saturday evening, after five years' absence in Canada, and received an enthusiastic welcome from their tenantry and neighbours.

Mr. James Wharton's address in the United States is care of Rev. F. P. Woodbury, D.D., Congregational Rooms, Fourth Avenue and Twenty-second Streets, New York. Mr. Wharton asks that friends will pray for abundant blessing on his work among the freedmen of the Southern States.

Fermanagh Hospital.

ON behalf of this institution Lady Brooke (of Colebrooke, Brookeborough, co. Fermanagh) is making a special effort in order that many necessary improvements and additions may be made. For over seventy years nothing has been done for the benefit of the Infirmary. It is in a sad state from want of spare room, beds, and appliances of all kinds.

The greatest sympathy (Lady Brooke says) has been shown in County Fermanagh among all classes and creeds to raise the necessary fends; they have contributed in a most liberal and generous way, and as far as their means could allow, but the sum collected is quite inadequate.

A friend, who prefers to remain known only as "Irish-American," writes to her ladyship: "If you will try to raise £1000, I will be one of twenty to give £50, or, if you prefer, I will be one of ten to give £100 each; or, if you undertake to raise both amounts, I will subscribe to either or both subscriptions."

Lady Brooke asks for immediate assistance in order to secure these generous offers.

THE BOOK WORLD.

A BATCH OF BIOGRAPHIES.

THERE are many books that ought never to have been written; there are many more that ought never to have been printed and published. But there is always room for good biographies of good people. In the lives of his servants, imperfect though they must be, God is working his sovereign will and fulfilling his purposes of mercy to the world, revealed in providence and in the person of his Son Jesus Christ. Therefore we endorse the dictum of Dr. Whyte, of Edinburgh, that biographies are books to be read and studied, even if many other departments of literature are left severely alone. Need we quote the hackneyed lines of the poet:—

> Lives of good men all remind us
> We can make our lives sublime.

Six biographies, just issued, are before us, all of them worthy of a careful perusal. Somewhat curiously, three of them record the life histories of men and three those of women. Three of the friends written of have passed over to the ranks of the great majority; three are still with us, and capable of doing good work for the common Master. We may notice first those whose earthly service is ended. Under a somewhat unusual title* we have a truly excellent sketch of the life work of the late Harriet E. H. Urmston, wife of Col. Urmston, himself now also deceased. The material for the book, edited by Mr. Everard, was prepared by the loving hand and heart of the husband, and reveals a life of rare beauty and devotion to Christ's cause, both abroad and at home. To be a whole-hearted witness for Christ and a successful winner of souls in Indian military and civil society is no holiday task. Mrs. Urmston was a bright and shining light in these difficult surroundings, and has left a memory that is at once fruitful and blessed. Young English ladies who may possibly spend the best years of their life in India should prepare themselves by a study of this life, which is told with all due modesty and reserve. The editor devotes a short closing chapter to Col. Urmston, who only survived his wife about a year.

More remarkable still was the career of that modern Quaker apostle of the nineteenth century, Isaac Sharp,† whose life, as the author well remarks, was "in some of its phases unique." Mrs. Budge has made free use of the diaries and letters of the famous traveller, and the reader is able to follow intelligently Mr. Sharp's footsteps all over the world as a messenger of the home churches and a succourer of many. From Norway and Iceland, in the frozen north, to Australia, in the sunny south, he went carrying Christian counsel and cheer to lonely workers. Such a mission is indeed much more unique than it ought to be in all the churches, and the custom of the Friends deserves to be more widely imitated in this respect. Mr. Sharp's missionary journeys were prolonged till he was almost ninety years of age. His wife died after four years of wedded happiness, and so the husband was left unfettered for foreign travel and service. The blessing that his journeys brought to many fellow-workers will reach a still wider circle we trust through this simple record of them.

Mr. J. Deane Hilton's monograph on a famous temperance orator and reformer‡ is a highly appreciative and skilful piece of work, worthy of its subject. Mr. Raper had very manifest and unusual gifts as an advocate of total abstinence and as a political diplomatist. The splendid service he achieved in this great struggle for the uplifting of our social life, and the special characteristics of his work, are here ably depicted within small compass, and the little book ought to become popular in temperance ranks.

Coming now to the three living workers, we may appropriately begin with that greatly-tried saint, Miss Bella Cooke, for forty years a prisoner on a couch of pain, the first instalment of whose life-story, called "Rifted Clouds," has been a channel of comfort and help to many. This continuation of the wondrous narrative§ is not a whit behind its predecessor in tender, pathetic interest or practical outcome. Though the path of our sister may and must be a weary one, with growing age and feebleness, the Divine consolations and the sympathy of many friends have thrown around it a rich halo of heavenly influence. No one can read these chapters, telling of human suffering and patient resignation, mixed with numberless acts of priceless service to the poor and needy, without feeling that trial and suffering may be God's ministers equally with health and prosperity. It is one of the most sublime triumphs of the Christian faith that it can enable its possessor to rise superior to suffering, and glorify God in the furnace of deep, life-long affliction.

The same remark may be made in a modified degree with reference to the Life Record* just issued by Miss Sarah Robinson, the soldiers' friend. It is in autobiographical form, and has therefore all the directness and charm of a personal narrative. Miss Robinson has used to good purpose the greater leisure of recent years, and has furnished us with an artless, vivid, and unconventional story of a life that has been singularly fruitful in manifest results. Those who know something of our sister's noble work for soldiers (and who does not?) will be glad to make the more detailed acquaintance with that work which this goodly and finely printed volume supplies. Like her American sister, Bella Cooke, Miss Robinson has long been a child of sore suffering, though not confined to a sick room; but her brave spirit and her zeal for the welfare of her red-coated friends, through God's gracious help, carried her over difficulties in the pioneering stages of the work that would have daunted many with the best physical equipment. We can promise the reader that they will not find a dull page in this book, but very much that will elicit thankfulness to God and arouse admiration for our devoted sister's persistent faith and courage. Strangely enough, the exigencies of the work at the Portsmouth homes have required Miss Robinson, now that her life record is out of hand, to return once more to an active oversight of it. We hope God will spare her to see years of service yet in this important field of Christian effort, and enable her to add another full chapter to a life that seems already to have reaped the harvest of three or four.

Last, but certainly not least, either in point of bulk, price, or interest, is Dr. Newman Hall's "Autobiography",† which tells at first hand the story of his long and busy life. Candour compels the criticism that some parts of the book are overloaded with details which are not of public interest or importance, but most readers will overlook this in view of the vivid glimpses we get into contemporary life through the author's association with many persons of note in society. We note with genuine thankfulness Dr. Hall's strong and consistent adhesion to the great foundation doctrines of the faith, and his evangelistic zeal has always been phenomenal. The story of the author's labours in fostering good relations between this country and America and in other good public movements is exceptionally interesting at the present stage of our international history. We trust a popular and cheaper edition of this life record will in due time be issued.

In the December issue of The Sunday at Home, Rev. H. J. Piggott, of Rome, sketches the life and work of the late Luigi Capellini. Another attractive paper is "A Sunday at Kerepundu" (New Guinea), by Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson.

The double Christmas number of Bubbles will take light and joy into many a household. The special section is entitled "Icicles"; and the entire number contains thirty-two coloured pictures. Besides the usual sketches there are serial stories, also a pretty presentation plate. (1s. Office: 158, Aldersgate-street, E.C.)

The Fireside Christmas number (6d.) is a repository of good reading; and the same may be said of the "Home Words" special part, which contains a tale of the sea, by Sydney Watson, entitled The Christmas Derelict. (1d.) Rev. P. B. Power writes the "Day of Days" Christmas number, The Golden Lock, and other stories. (1d.)

The new volume of the "Present Day Preachers" series is by Dean Lefroy, and it bears the striking title, The Immortality of Memory; and other Sermons. (3s. 6d. Horace Marshall & Son.) The title is furnished by a long discourse, in two parts, on the word "Remember," as found in Luke xvi. 25. A solemn theme is dealt with in a very instructive manner. The other sermons are practical and expository; under the former head come "The Moral Aspect of Athletic Sports" and "The Ethics of Gambling"; under the latter the Incarnation and Atonement of Christ are dealt with in different aspects, and there are three sermons on "The Preaching of Christ to the Imprisoned Spirits" (1 Peter iii. 18-20). Those who have heard the dean's impassioned eloquence will recall his accents as they peruse these pages, in which difficult subjects are boldly dealt with, but ever in a way consistent with sound Evangelical principles and doctrines.

Messrs. Jarrold, Warwick-lane, issue a new and improved edition of a book which has proved very popular for Sunday afternoons for children in the past, entitled What Little Hands Can Do, by Mrs. M. C. Owen. It contains a number of Bible stories for young people.

To the Popular Biblical Library series of handbooks (3s. 6d. Service & Paton) Professor W. F. Adeney has added Women of the New Testament. The book is marked by profound scholasticism, and although on many of the points touched there must be variety of view and judgment, a great amount of information is supplied in convenient form.

In a little volume entitled Pithy Points for Scripture Studies, James Sprunt seeks to help Bible readers, especially such as are desirous of searching on their own account. Those who open the Scriptures to others in the form of "Bible Readings" will find here many suggestive outlines and skeletons. (George Stoneman.)

Archdeacon Madden is well known for his striking sermons and addresses to men; and such as engage in like work will thank him for issuing a volume of Addresses to All Sorts and Conditions of Men. (3s. 6d. Elliot Stock.) Compared with what is general, these deliverances are rather short; but they are exceptionally vigorous in style and thoughtful in substance. Here are useful words on the temptations incidental to manhood, and stirring and practical counsels for life and godliness.

Mr. J. W. Bishop, who says he is "no scholar, no preacher, no popular speaker, no public man in any sense whatever," has written a volume of addresses on the Church seasons, with the title, The Christian Year in its Relation to the Christian Life. (5s. Elliot Stock.) After telling us what he is not, the author proceeds in his preface to say that he is "simply a private individual who loves the quiet paths, and wishes to use the leisure and quietude which has fallen to his lot in the service of truth which is the service of God and man." The meditations are plain and practical, never showy but often singularly suggestive.

Miss Edith M. E. Baring-Gould has written a deeply interesting book with the title, With One Accord; or, the Prayer Book in the Mission Field (2s. Church Missionary House). Under certain great expressions from the Book of Common Prayer she groups facts on foreign lands and their inhabitants, the progress of the Gospel, and the life of men and women who from the midst of heathenism have professed the Christian name. Here we are told in the most readable manner how converts in many climes worship and work, and how missionaries live and labour. Much information on the use of the Bible and Prayer Book is woven into the narrative, and one is enabled easily to realise the customs and practices of the people of various countries. There are nearly a hundred illustrations, and Principal Chavasse, of Wycliffe Hall, Oxford, writes an introduction.

The Book of Common Prayer is differently esteemed by people of varied temperaments and trainings; but intelligent acquaintance with its composition and contents should by no means depend upon the fact of its being regularly used or systematically neglected in religious life and devotions. This being so, there cannot but be a widespread interest in such a work as The Teacher's Prayer Book, in which the Book of Common Prayer is accompanied by introductions, analyses, and notes, as well as a commentary on the Psalter. This explanatory and expository matter is from the pen of Bishop Barry; and the work has been revised and enlarged for the present sixteenth edition. Bound up with this very instructive book is a Glossary of Important Words and Phrases found in the Prayer Book, compiled by Rev. A. L. Mayhew. (3s. 6d. Eyre & Spottiswoode.)

The Christmas double number of The Lady (6d. 39, Bedford-street, W.C.) is strong in fashion plates of the superior sort.

Messrs. Cassell & Co. are reissuing their Concise Cyclopædia in penny weekly parts; monthly parts, 6d. It is a marvellous compendium of things it is desirable to know.

Last week's issue of The Lady's Pictorial (6d.) is of very attractive and varied interest, especially in the illustrations. A cycling page gives interesting echoes of the recent shows.

In The Way to the Cross, Rev. Albert Swift, of the Metropolitan Federation of Epworth Leagues, New York, gives welcome hints for helping seeking souls. The booklet is a supplement to "Revival Method," recently noticed. (1d. Morgan & Scott.)

The Churchman's "Acrostic" Bible-Searching Almanack for 1899, with Table of Lessons, by B. J. M. M., may be obtained from Miss Monck Mason, Cheriton-road, Folkestone. (1d. each; postage, ½d. for three copies.) The daily texts in this almanack are all taken from the portions of Scripture appointed for the Sunday services.

The late Rev. H. C. Leonard, M.A., of Clifton, was occupied for several years in the editing of Sacred Songs of the World: Translated from 120 Languages, of which the Right Hon. Professor F. Max Müller has accepted the dedication. It is proposed to publish the book, if sufficient support is forthcoming, as not the least worthy memorial of one whose fine scholarship and endearing qualities commanded the respect and affection of all who knew him. AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Church of England.

THE Church Mission in Carlisle and district has been very encouraging.

Mr. S. Whitbread, late M.P. for Bedford, is rebuilding Cardington Church, near Bedford, at his own cost.

The resignation of the Bishop of Bangor, owing to permanent physical infirmity, is officially announced.

The Bishop of Durham gave the presidential address at the Christian Social Union annual meeting at Birmingham last week.

Professor Ryle, son of the Bishop of Liverpool, and the Archdeacon of Huddersfield will succeed the Bishops of Calcutta and Southampton as chaplains-in-ordinary to the Queen.

The Bishop of Stepney stated the other day that in Bethnal Green he had found that of 100 men eighty went to no place of worship at all, and out of 1000 boys 900 were in the same position.

A High Church clergyman, Father Hopkins, of Alton, recently stated in lecturing at Cambridge, that "we have now, in connection with the English Church, more convents and sisterhoods than when Henry VIII. commenced the dissolution of the monasteries."

The Earl of Kimberley has, with a number of other Norfolk gentlemen, addressed a memorial to the Bishop of Norwich to the effect that it is desirable to strengthen as far as possible the hands of the bishops in their efforts to check the "unsound teaching and illegal practices" of some of the clergy of the Church of England.

The Dean of Rochester presided at a largely attended meeting in the Cathedral Close, Rochester, last week, in support of the social work of the Church Army, which he commended to the support of all interested in the destitute, the criminal, and the outcast classes, and especially to the support of all Church people. Speeches supporting the prison and social work of the society were made by Archdeacon Cheetham, the chaplain of Wormwood Scrubbs Prison, and others.

The troubles at St. Clement's, Belfast, continue. Armed with the authority of the Select Vestry, a builder and his staff applied last week to the incumbent for the keys of the church to enable them to remove several crosses and other emblems to which exception had been taken. The incumbent refused to grant the request, whereupon the contractor and his men broke open the church door, and, under a threat of legal action, proceeded to demolish the crosses and remove the altar-cloth, flower vases, and the falls on the pulpit and desk.

Congregational.

Sir W. H. Wills, M.P., has promised, conditionally, the sum of £5000 towards the Congregational Church extension movement.

Some correspondents of the Independent propose the initiation of a Twentieth Century Fund for Congregational church extension purposes.

Dr. R. Storrs, in preaching his fifty-second anniversary sermon in the Church of the Pilgrims, Brooklyn, said he felt strong and vigorous, and was fully determined to go on with his work.

The directors of the London Missionary Society took farewell last week of Revs. J. Smith, W. W. Stephenson, and W. Robinson, returning to India; of Rev. W. J. Edmonds, formerly of Madagascar, appointed to labour at Quilon; of Rev. J. I. Macnair, appointed to the Telugu Mission; and of Rev. Robert Howieson, appointed to Hankey, South Africa.

Rev. T. W. Holmes, speaking at Sheffield, said, "The religious vagrant, the man who knows the inside of every church and chapel in the city where he lives, who knows the voice of every famous, eccentric, or remarkable preacher in every denomination, holds himself sedulously aloof from workers in all the churches, who have no greater legal obligation than he has to bear responsibilities that involve the devotion of time, of mind, of heart, and money."

Baptist.

Rev. T. Spurgeon Page, a nephew of the late C. H. Spurgeon, has been accepted for service in British Central Africa in connection with the Nyassa Industrial Mission.

Mr. W. Graham Scroggie, of the Pastors' College, has accepted the pastorate of the Leytonstone-road Mission, and hopes to commence his ministry in January.

On Tuesday, November 29, Rev. J. G. Greenhough, of Leicester, preached at Wellington-street Chapel, Stockton-on-Tees, on "Power from on High"; and in the evening delivered a lecture on "The Evangelical Revival of the Eighteenth Century."

Rev. Thomas Spurgeon, presiding at the annual meeting in connection with the Pastors' College, referred to the important work done by the college in the preparation of young men for the ministry, and said he had no sort of anxiety concerning its future. It was reported that altogether 975 students had been educated at the college, of whom 671 are now pastors, missionaries, or evangelists in the Baptist denomination.

Methodist.

Rev. H. P. Hughes has conducted special services at Leeds—where over £3000 was promised towards the Century Fund—and a District Convention at Bradford.

Rev. C. E. Walters, of the West London Mission, reports that at Somers Town branch, where men evangelists had failed, the sisters are doing excellent work.

After being closed for over twenty years, Stokeham Wesleyan Chapel, Retford Circuit, has been reopened by Rev. Thos. Cook, who has just concluded a successful mission in the town.

An old Unitarian chapel in Prescot was last year purchased by the Wesleyan trustees. It has been converted into a mission hall, to be used for social and religious purposes, and has just been formally opened.

The Bible Christians have just lost the first minister on their list of preachers by the death, in the eighty-second year of his age and the sixty-first of his ministry, of Rev. John Brown, who in 1855 was elected President of the Conference.

At the last meeting of the London Wesleyan Mission Committee Rev. Peter Thompson said, of the East London Mission, he had never more reason to be grateful for the success of the work at the different branches. Their position at the East End was never stronger, and even their [illegible] were at peace with them.

A "cloak-room" for babies is the latest novelty in American churches. Rev. Dr. Willey, of the Nostrand-avenue Methodist Episcopal Church, Brooklyn, is the originator of the scheme. A large room has been fitted up with hammocks and cribs, perambulators, and toys. Here a volunteer committee of young women assemble every morning, and here the mothers, who would otherwise be kept at home, leave their babies while they themselves attend the regular church service.

Presbyterian.

Rev. J. H. Barrows, D.D., of Chicago, has been invited to become president of Oberlin College.

The English Presbyterian Foreign Mission Committee reports that more new missionaries are required.

Dr. Alex. Whyte has presided at the reopening, after being closed for three and a-half years, of East Free Church, Rutherglen.

Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., has presented every English Presbyterian minister with a copy of "The Secret History of the Oxford Movement."

At the anniversary services of the Morningside Free Church, Edinburgh (Rev. C. A. Salmond), the forenoon collection amounted to £800.

The select committee has decided to recommend the Madison-avenue Church, New York, to give a call to Rev. Dr. Pentecost, now minister of Yonkers.

Rev. A. Aldridge, B.A., formerly a curate in the Church of England and lately in charge of a preaching station in Sheffield, has accepted a call to Ellesmere Church, Sheffield.

Miss Slessor, who has been so successful in mission work in West Africa, has returned to her field of labours after a short furlough. Mr. Brown and Miss McIntosh, from Edinburgh, have also sailed for mission work at Old Calabar.

Salvation Army.

General Booth is visiting France and Switzerland.

Java is to have a War Cry, printed in the Malay language.

A prospector who has recently returned from the Klondyke says that the Army officers there are much appreciated.

Commander Booth-Tucker has opened a shelter at Syracuse, making the forty-second institution of this character now in operation in the United States.

The work among natives in South Africa is progressing. A farmer in Swaziland has given land for another settlement, supplied material for buildings, promised labour, and presented three heifers for the use of the officers.

At Nagercoil, South India, the Army has a large dispensary, standing within its own grounds, with accommodation for in-patients and appliances for all kinds of surgical operations. The officer in charge is a qualified medical man.

Fallen Asleep.

Mr. JOHN PARRY, of Talybryn, Breconshire, one of the most generous supporters of the Calvinistic Methodists.—At the age of ninety-two, Mr. J. H. BOWMAN, J.P., a prominent Wesleyan of Darlington, and a liberal contributor to Connexional funds.—Rev. J. PRESTON, vicar of Geraldine, Canterbury, New Zealand.—Rev. J. RICHARDS, M.A., rector of Tansor, Northants, aged eighty-four.—Rev. F. W. C. RIGBY, incumbent of St. George's, Great Yarmouth.—Rev. HENRY WALKER, M.A., formerly vicar of Ludham, aged seventy-eight.—At the age of fifty, MARY ELIZA JOY HAWEIS, wife of Rev. H. R. Haweis.—At the vicarage, Hayton, Retford, Rev. W. MEE, for fifty-three years vicar of the parish.—Rev. W. M. SMITH HUNTER, for forty-four years minister of St. Martin's Parish Church, Perth.—At Dalkeith, Major MACLEOD, a well-known member of the General Assembly of the Free Church.—On Dec. 4, at Liverpool, aged twenty-eight years, JAMES GORDON, only son of Mr. Samuel Smith M.P.

London City Mission.—The committee are in sore need of financial aid. Stock to the extent of £10,000 has been sold to repay a loan which had fallen due.

Innocence is sometimes spoken of as the opportunity for temptation. That is only when it is ignorant. Innocence that knows its own preciousness is one of the best safeguards of the soul against sin. Not to have fallen under the solicitation of evil in any direction is a shield against that particular form of wrongdoing. Honour that has never been tarnished is a preservative against meanness; purity that has never fallen is a barrier against all temptation to impure living; an unbroken habit of truth-telling is a "buckler" against lying and prevarication. Young people should be impressed with the fact that it is the first step that counts in the downward progress in sin.

A petition has been handed to the Russian Government by Count Leo Tolstoi, praying for permission to form immediately relief committees to deal with the distress caused by the famine. The Tzar has contributed half a million roubles to the Red Cross Society for the purpose.

British subjects in Austria have presented the Emperor Francis Joseph with a congratulatory address on the occasion of the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of His Majesty's accession. The stricken Emperor has the sympathy of the world in the "quiet mourning" in which he is said to be spending this trying period.

Rev. Dugald Cameron Boyd, formerly minister of Portsoy Free Church, died on Saturday night from an affection of the heart. He was ordained minister of the Free Church in Bombay, where he remained for fourteen years. Coming home in 1877, he acted as assistant for a year to Dr. Laidlaw in Free West Church, Aberdeen, and was then ordained to the charge of the Free Church in Portsoy. In 1895 he was appointed secretary of the Anglo-Indian Evangelisation Society, which post he held till the spring of this year, resigning his office on account of ill-health.

Soldiers' Home, Gosport.—The third battalion of the West India Regiment has lately been at Gosport for a week, waiting for a ship to St. Helena. It was quite a novel sight to see the Soldiers' Home crowded with these dusky-faced soldiers, in their picturesque red and white uniform and turbans. Several of them found their way to the Home, and came to the soldiers' Bible-class and tea, joining heartily in the hymn-singing, and attending evening service with the Marines and Riflemen. We invited sixty to a tea, after which Colonel Seton Churchill and Rev. C. Tanner spoke. This home is supported by voluntary contributions.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THE special offer of books for children and young people (see page 2) is being largely taken up by Sunday-school teachers and others for prizes and Christmas gifts, and the books are eminently suitable for such purposes.

The success of the "Special Offers" made by our publishers has been such that a new parcel has been arranged of WORKS ON ROMANISM, amounting in value to 21s., and this will be sent, together with some copies of THE CHRISTIAN, for 9s. (see page 47). We hope, of course, that the careful distribution of the copies of THE CHRISTIAN will lead to the securing of new readers and subscribers; but apart from this, nothing will be more helpful to an intelligent appreciation and advocacy of Protestantism than the study of such works as are contained in the parcel. It is an opportunity which many will gladly seize of obtaining and circulating books of this character.

Ever since the publication of Rev. F. B. Meyer's Expositions on John i.-xii., "The Life and Light of Men," there have been demands for studies covering the remainder of the book which has so appropriately been styled "The Golden Gospel." At length this demand has been met by the publication of a companion volume, entitled LOVE TO THE UTTERMOST: Expositions of John xiii.-xxi. (Morgan & Scott. Cloth, 2s. 6d.; presentation edition, 3s. 6d.) The International Sunday-school Lesson for the first six months of next year relates to the Gospel of John, and teachers desiring books of suggestion at once pertinent and spiritual should not overlook these lucid and timely expositions.

A most useful and instructive volume, beautifully illustrated, has just been published:—ACROSS INDIA AT THE DAWN OF THE 20TH CENTURY. By Miss Lucy Guinness (Religious Tract Society). Primarily, it is a sketch of a three months' visit to some of the principal cities of the Indian Empire, and as such is full of vigour and interest. But it has a more far-reaching motive than a merely pleasant recital of a traveller's experiences; as a handbook of facts and figures from a missionary standpoint it is unique and invaluable. Miss Guinness has a happy style of writing, but never has she done better work than this. It is forceful, bright, and entertaining; yet, withal, solemn in the earnestness of its purpose and the pathos of its appeal. It will repay careful reading, and is one of the best Christmas gift-books we have seen.

Dr. G. Adam Smith has shown praiseworthy industry in the preparation of his eagerly expected biography of the late Professor Drummond, which is published by Messrs. Hodder and Stoughton this week. Judging from a casual inspection of the book, Dr. Smith has succeeded in vividly depicting the life-work of a remarkably attractive personality. The long chapter given to an able and impartial account of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's first mission in Great Britain and Ireland (1873-5), and of Professor Drummond's remarkable share in that movement, is to us exceptionally interesting. We hope in an early issue to give a lengthened review of the biography.

Many will follow M. Fr. Coillard with deep sympathy and interest now that he returns to his sphere of mission work on the Upper Zambesi. There are few chapters of missionary history more remarkable than that of the work of the Paris Society of Evangelical Missions in South Africa; and the story of the planting of the Gospel in Barotsiland, as set forth by M. Coillard in his wonderful book, "On the Threshold of Central Africa" (15s., Hodder & Stoughton), deserves many readers. We have been pleased to note the formation of "Zambesias," or local auxiliaries, in behalf of the Mission. Many have been established on the Continent, and we trust there will be numbers in England, in order to a diffusion of information regarding the work, and to organise support by prayer and financial contributions. All particulars may be secured from Miss Mackintosh, 4, Wetherby-gardens, South Kensington.

As Christmas approaches it is well that householders should make up their minds, if they have not already done so, not to give intoxicants to postmen or to anyone who comes as a messenger. Indeed, there is something tragic in multiplying temptations at a time which celebrates the advent of the Son of God to save men from their sins. Many of the guardians of our large workhouses are displaying commendable zeal and resolution in stopping the supply of drink which made a Christmas orgie possible. Bradford, Leeds, Liverpool, Manchester, and Sheffield Unions refuse to give their inmates intoxicants at Christmas. This change in practice indicates a great change in public sentiment, and should tend to bring about some vital alteration in our drink laws.

Was there ever a time when it was more necessary than now to obey the injunction "to come out and be separate, and touch not the unclean thing," or a time when less attention was paid to it? It is "narrow" and "ignorant" and "bigoted" to come out—so many affirm it is just the way to disgust "cultivated persons." Yet does not observation show that the way to win respect, confidence, and influence is to stand firmly by what is right, and not to conform to the ways of "this evil age"? Do not worldly persons say of the consistent: "Ah, well, he was a bit strict, but he never flinched from his convictions."

Have the men who so often and so obligingly bow in the house of Rimmon any idea of the scorn with which "the cultivated" often regard their ways? The only remedy for many of the ills of the nation is for professing Christians to keep themselves rigidly, but kindly, aloof from all that is not of Christ. This testimony would quicken conscience and lift the thoughts to higher things, and nothing else can.

It is to be feared that with some Christians the Old Testament is, comparatively a "terra incognita." With the exception, possibly, of the Psalms, certain well-known chapters in the prophets, and some of the more prominent personalities amongst the patriarchs, the books of the Old Testament need to be prayerfully explored. Dr. Parker has said recently,

> I thank God that I have been enabled to preach so much out of the Old Testament, and I cannot yet resign it. Resign it? I have not begun it. In it begins the light....Everything was done from the beginning, and there is nothing in the universe, physical, intellectual, moral, that is not in the first verse of the first chapter of the first book of the Bible.

The higher criticism has by no means divorced the glory of the old-time heroes—patriarch, prophet, priest, king—who make the Old Testament so wonderful a story-book in the best sense. Men and women who made history in far-off ages, that we cannot dispense with, live and move in its graphic pages. The New Testament by all means, so as to catch the spirit and pathos of the Christ-life. But "ALL Scripture given by inspiration of God is profitable." No word of God can be passed by without loss to the soul.

Scripture inspired of God calls no other writings Scripture, except those which are inspired of God. And the Lord Jesus and his Apostles defined as Scripture, Moses, the Prophets, and the Psalms, as we now possess them—the whole Old Testament.

In dealing with the abnormal child-labour which prevails so terribly in London's "slum" centres, the Daily News uses three descriptive sentences in calling attention to the evil: "The Cry of the Children," "How Little Ones Labour," "Some Bread-and-Butter Tragedies." And in the instances it gives, which, unfortunately, are not exceptional, most pathetic pictures are presented. One little lad was "in business for himself when six years old." His business was "sellin' fings" in the streets. "Sometimes it's songs; sometimes it's socks, wot yer put in boots."

Another, a boy of twelve, in the fourth standard at the Board School, adds to his family's means by going to a milkman at four o'clock in the morning in summer and about five at this time of the year. He helps to fetch the milk from Euston, and then, at six, begins his round to the customers. He goes again at the dinner hour, then again after school, and stays till about nine. He is there all day on Saturday and for a few hours on Sunday. For sixty hours' work in the week they give him two shillings! We are not surprised to read that this boy has a doughy face, lack-lustre eyes, and sunken cheeks. One wonders how long the young life in him will bear the cruel strain—how long it will enable him to toil before it sinks in complete exhaustion.

The kind-hearted schoolmaster who sees these things daily all the year round may well say—"Oh, if only these lads could be taught trades as soon as they leave school. I do manage to get a good many into stick-making and some other trades, but it is little one can do with the parents wanting their lads to earn something at once." The condition of the "homes" of these bairns and their perilous surroundings renders it impossible for them to receive any training that will make them useful citizens. Christian enterprise is doing much, but well may we cry, "Save the children, O Lord."

Prevention is always better than cure; and this applies to poverty as much as to greater evils. A great deal of the poverty that afflicts our women workers, says Mrs. Bernard Bosanquet, is preventible, for it is caused by inadequate industrial training. The remedy is to be found, first, in using all our influence with the working classes to educate their girls properly; and secondly, in directing charitable effort towards giving industrial training in those cases of distress that come under our notice.

Philanthropists would do well to note this. It is far easier to get well-disposed people to help actual distress than to defeat the causes of such distress as they arise. The one meets the eye and touches the sensibilities, and so reaches the sympathies; the other needs the gift of foresight, which is rare even among good people.

We cannot go into the question of the housing of the people by the County Council, but the humane aspect of it must be interesting and important to everyone. The London County Council, finding that private enterprise lags far behind the requirements of the time, has, by a large majority, including men of both parties, decided to purchase land and erect dwellings for the purpose of supplying housing accommodation. This is apart from the rehousing of the working classes required in connection with clearance or improvement schemes. Of course much was said for it on economic grounds and sanitary too. The terrible fact behind it is, that our capital city is growing so fast that numbers of our people are compelled to live like animals. The dust shoots on Hackney Marshes afford painful evidence as to how some are not housed. It will, we cannot but believe, be an immense gain to things good and loss to things evil to have every one decently housed—to let him have "a home."

We are glad to see that the resolve of the Wesleyan Methodists to raise £1,000,000 in guinea subscriptions to form a Twentieth Century Fund is provoking other Churches to similar efforts. Christian emulation — not rivalry—is about to provoke the leaders of all the denominations to dare and to do great things for Christ in the service of the people. The last to initiate some scheme of advance for the new century are the Congregationalists. Dr. Guinness Rogers suggests raising £250,000 in guinea donations extended over a period of two years. These efforts are good so long as they are fed by a consecrated love to Jesus Christ. Not for the extension of a denomination, not to enthrone the name of a great religious leader—far higher than these must the motive rise—but to exalt Christ, the Son of God. There is nothing so likely to prevail as that.

The special articles in the Daily News on the Czar's Eirenicon, written by a well-known journalist who has spent three months in visiting the various capitals of Europe, with a view to "ascertain the views of those responsible for public affairs," were ably summed up in Monday's issue. The impressions of the writer were eminently favourable on the whole. Briefly, he has come to the conclusion that (1) the movement is a genuine outcome of the Czar's deep personal conviction that something must be done to arrest the increase of modern armaments; (2) he is proving himself a strong and capable ruler, and is determined to use the whole weight of his influence to make the movement a success; (3) Britain has everything to gain and nothing to lose through its success; (4) the final issue will depend predominantly on the attitude taken up by the representatives of this country at the forthcoming conference.

It is with the last point that we have specially to do. It is notorious that so far public sentiment in this country has been far from enthusiastic on the question. The habit of distrust towards everything Russian, and the fear of future changes in the balance of power in Europe, has infected the attitude of the whole community towards the proposal. There is, however, time to change the situation. If our religious leaders, who have hitherto been so curiously silent, will but do their part to rouse the Churches to a sense of their duty, and all Christian people will remember that on them practically depends the question whether we shall accept this great opportunity of checking the terrible evil of militarism, we may find that the pessimists who are so busy prophesying evil things will be put to utter confusion. The cause of peace is the cause of Christ. Next Sunday is Peace Sunday. Let the prayers of his people be lifted on that day on behalf of peace and goodwill among men.

The very beginning of the emancipation of Israel was in an emotion of brotherly feeling. "And it came to pass in those days, when Moses was grown, that he went out unto his brethren, and looked on their burdens: and he spied an Egyptian smiting an Hebrew, one of his brethren." The blows wounded his own flesh, and thrilled in every nerve of his own body. It is of the very essence of the Christian motive that the worker be identified in sympathy and feeling with those for whom he works, doing his service as for brethren. "Remember them that are in bonds as bound with them; and them which suffer adversity, as being yourselves also in the body."

It is this feeling of brotherliness which leads refined persons to dwell among the unrefined, and the saintly among the vicious in the confidence and hope of saving them. Christianity has given a wider and fuller meaning to the old word, brother, taking it out of the national association and making it human. If, therefore, a Christian now sees a wrong inflicted upon anyone, no matter of what nation, he should regard it as done to "one of his brethren." And not the less should he feel the wrong his brethren do to themselves by their degrading sins.

But this human brotherhood is entirely distinct from brotherhood in Christ. When those who are our brothers according to the flesh receive Jesus the Son of God as their Saviour and Lord, and believe in Him who raised up Jesus our Lord from the dead, they become children of God and brethren in Christ with all others who believe. The confounding of the fatherhood of God in Adam with the fatherhood of God in Christ, and of human brotherhood with Christian brotherhood, is at the root of much of the plausible but fatal error of the time.

Those who are concerned that the service of praise in the sanctuary should be devotional, as well as truly musical, will sympathise with the demand made at a recent conference of local preachers that, so far as ascertainable, organists and members of choirs should be converted men and women. It is well known that there are plenty of people whose love of music makes them willing to give regular service in the church in this way, even apart from the question of salary. Their lack of spirituality, however, is patent to everyone in the audience, and often gives deep pain to devout people, whose worship is frequently spoiled by the evident frivolity and inattention of those who lead in the singing. It would be well if ministers met their choirs periodically, with a view to impress upon their members the vast importance not only of good music, but of a right spirit and a worthy motive in their work. The sweetest singing, divorced from earnestness of soul, is a mockery to God, and cannot be any real help to any congregation in conducting his praise.

The so-called Christian Science, which has of late been so much before the public in England, is better known and more fully found out in America. Nevertheless, it calls for exposure there as well as among us. Mr. Henry Varley, who in his time has taken in hand many troublesome persons and misleading things, has just issued (Fleming H. Revell Co., of 158, Fifth Avenue, New York) a pamphlet, Christian Science Examined. The verbal term of the title might with equal truth have been "Exposed," for our vigorous friend shows the much vaunted system to be as distinctly opposed to Scripture teaching as it is lacking in reasonable warrant and foundation in fact.

Many questions are suggested by an anecdote, told in "Pages from a Private Diary," of a lady who bewailed the loss of a wealthy but somewhat ill-bred neighbour, who had liberally helped her country charities.

"Mr. X. is dead," said she; "he was so good and kind and helpful to me in all sorts of ways; he was so vulgar, poor dear fellow, we could not know him in London; but we shall meet him in heaven."

It would surely be much more to the honour of Christians frankly and kindly to acknowledge those who have given them valuable aid than to pass them by out of deference to a false worldly standard. There is something grotesque in the juxtaposition of the words:—"We could not know him in London, but we shall meet him in heaven." There is more soreness caused by this "not knowing" than one likes to think of. Can we imagine our blessed Saviour "not knowing" any of his friends anywhere?

It is said of the late Dr. John Hall that in his youth he had committed to heart the whole of the Westminster Confession of Faith, as well as large portions of Scripture. This may have largely accounted for the vigour and tenacity of his theological attitude, as certainly it did for his Evangelical fervour. It would be well if more incentive were given to the young to memorise the great central passages of the Bible. The duty is being alike neglected by teachers and scholars. In a recent class of young people, all of whom had been brought up in a Sunday-school and were well versed in Scripture history and Christian principles, there was not one who could quote any passages connecting the evil one with the idea of darkness! Such a vague grasp of the actual words of Scripture cannot but result in the end in a slackened hold on its vital doctrines. The substance of the truth can hardly be intelligently held without some idea of the precise "form of words" which embodies it.

The Voice of the Needy.

MISSIONS are many and varied, and each has an appeal after its kind and order. But at the present season all speak the same thing in view of winter's pressing need, and the impending loosening of the purse-strings of Christian Philanthropy. It is eminently fitting that Christmas should be associated with liberality on the part of God's people, as the time stands for and symbolises an event which towers above all others in God's approaches to man in mercy and grace. Christ's coming was God's giving; and it is well to walk, not only in the way of Christ's condescension, but also in the way of God's generosity.

This, by a proper instinct, the Church of Christ has evidently done. The many missions and allied institutions which to-day address our readers are the outcome of a spirit of condescension combined with a spirit of liberality. We care for the weak and neglected, the poor and oppressed, the erring and perverse, because God, for Christ's sake, extends mercy and goodness to the just and the unjust, the small and the great, the poor and the rich. God is our Exemplar, Christ is our Teacher, in all these things. Else we had been self-righteous and self-sufficient after the strictest sect of Pharisees, ancient and modern.

While thanking God for the many agencies which He is using to carry on his work, not only for the amelioration of the lot of men and women held in conditions of temptation and sin, but for the bringing of many children to glory in the knowledge of his Son Jesus Christ, we rejoice at any and every opportunity to drive home the fact that these manifold operations are of the one blood-bought Church in this our day. Though the Gospel remains the same from age to age "till He come," there is continual change in forms of ministration, and variation in methods of work, according to the social condition and mental characteristics of the peoples and races among whom the Glad Tidings are proclaimed, and Gospel obligations sought to be discharged.

Developments along these lines are our orphanages and rescue homes, our organised aid for the poor, and our efforts to deal with the horrors of the slum. One and all are expressions of Christian sympathy and activity, which could no more be dispensed with than could our places of worship. Both come of a desire to carry on God's work, and by means of such efforts a great deal of good is done. By concentrating our attention upon the thousands of organisations, we are impressed with the wonderful volume of devotion and labour which they represent. As soon, however, as we look upon the wide expanse of land yet untouched, we exclaim, "What are they among so many?—what are the works in comparison with the urgent needs of our time, among our neighbours and fellow-countrymen, and the men, women, and children of this and other lands?" Nevertheless, we rejoice that God has raised up and fitted so large a body of men and women to "launch out into the deep" of human sin, sorrow, and distress; and that by their toils such signal blessing has been brought to individual souls and the community at large.

A glance at our supplement pages is sufficient to prove the wide influence of the institutions whose cause is pleaded with the eloquence of facts as distinguished from the display of rhetoric. Evangelical in foundation, Protestant as to principles, these many works are all the care of the Christian Church; and they are the instruments of good on a scale which men and woman singly and unorganised could not possibly perform. Of one accord as to the necessity of these undertakings, and united in concern for their support, we share the present responsibilities of the weary workers, as we shall in the end have a part in their rejoicing when the sheaves are garnered in. As we recall the worthies of the past, the Shaftesburys, the Müllers, and the Spurgeons, who, through faith, and by means of works, founded institutions which will serve generations yet unborn, we thank God, and pray that we may have grace to follow them as they followed Christ, of whom record was borne in the remarkable words, "He went about doing good."

Let us, then, at the present time "consider" our friends who carry on these many works as being ourselves "in the body," as entering into their experiences of care and obligation. This consideration will lead to sympathy, which will impel to prayerful interest, and eventuate in practical support. As we look forward to a season of comfort and brightness, passed under the spiritual spell of the message of "Goodwill to men," let us remember those whose burden of care includes anxieties arising from the charge of others, and who frequently look ahead with apprehension rather than assurance. Yet, let not the workers forget that their help is in the Lord, whose servants may be trusted at length, if not immediately, to "do his pleasure."

The Evangelical Alliance.

SPECIAL attention is called by the Evangelical Alliance in a circular-letter to the alarming spread of sacerdotalism. The letter is signed by the president, vice-presidents, and members of council. To these are added the names of a large number of representative men amongst all the churches.

It is proposed that at the evening meetings during the Week of Universal Prayer at the beginning of the year addresses should be delivered upon the Scriptural warrant for the fundamental truths of the Evangelical faith. The truths to which attention is directed are:—

The sufficiency of Scripture as the only rule of faith and practice.
The spiritual character of the Church of Christ.
The sole High Priesthood of the Lord Jesus, and the priesthood of all believers.
The finished work of our Lord.
The commemorative aspect of the Lord's Supper, and the duty of confession to God alone.

We heartily approve of the Alliance methods, which are exclusively spiritual, and entirely non-political, but uncompromising in their loyalty to the principles of the Gospel. It is to be hoped that the spirit of prayer in which the truths named will be considered will be of considerable value in emphasising the positive nature of the New Testament faith.

Too much stress can hardly be laid upon the importance of the simultaneous meetings it is arranged to hold throughout the country on February 14, when the great Christian doctrines are to be re-affirmed. Such widespread testimony as that proposed by the Alliance will have great influence in rivetting attention upon those doctrines in which all Evangelical Christians believe. We trust that the important movement of the Alliance will help much to quicken the spiritual life of all who hold the Truth in its entirety and simplicity.

London Central Wesleyan Mission.

WE usually find dinners for about 2000 people in their own homes on Christmas Day. Every case is visited, and a great many people co-operate in securing worthy recipients. The winter need is now upon us, and we hope that our friends will send us help. If the funds allow, we also give to deserving widows a sack of coals after Christmas. Parcels of new and second-hand clothing will also be gratefully received. JOHN E. WAKERLEY.

Protestant Notes.

IF the Church Times is really sincere and in earnest in one of its latest utterances, there ought to be very little difficulty in solving the Ritualistic problem. It said, and by no means for the first time—

It seems impossible for a certain class of people, who take an active interest in ecclesiastical affairs, to understand that our fundamental objection is to any sort of interference on the part of the State with spiritual concerns. The struggle is not so much for the maintenance of this or that point of ceremonial, but for the recognition of the proper authority which shall have cognizance of all ceremonial. We are not so much engaged in defending isolated points of doctrine, as in asserting the right of the Church, as a Church, to say what the Christian doctrine is.

. . . .

England has had Christian citizens for three hundred years who have objected to the State's "interference with spiritual concerns," and they have supported their contention by keeping apart from the State and managing their own concerns under the guidance of Christ. Why cannot the Ritualists do the same? Why stay longer in a Church to which they have a fundamental objection? Is it honest? If they will step forth into the liberty they desire, and maintain their system at their own cost, people will believe in them as now they cannot do.

The gradual withdrawal of so many Ritualistic clergymen from association with the Bible Society is not the least significant sign of the movement which they represent. The Sacerdotalist can have no enthusiasm for the free and open New Testament, for his special creed finds no support from the Gospels and Epistles. As a natural consequence, he is drifting into the Roman Catholic attitude, which looks at the Bible as a dangerous book to place in the hands of the "uninstructed." The priest wants to be the interpreter of Sacred Writ, lest its simple appeal to the spiritual sense of any and every devout reader may destroy the foundation on which alone he can build. Fortunately, in this country it is too late to reverse the process which the Bible Society has been mainly instrumental in carrying out. The Book is in the hands of the people, and will remain so. If only they could be made willing to read and ponder its teaching, Sacerdotalism would not live long. Open-minded Bible-study is the first and last refuge of the Evangelical faith.

A weighty article was published in the November Nineteenth Century on Confession, from the pen of the Hon. Mrs. Chapman, in view of the Archbishop's recent charge on the subject. Exception is rightly taken to the attitude of non-interference shown there with those clergymen who teach that confession is compulsory, on the ground that it is not possible to prevent men from "teaching that which tends not to liberty but to bondage," and that

All that can be said is that when they do so it is without any authority from the Church of England.

The idea that this is a matter in which "all must see to themselves" is futile, in view of the fact that it is the weak of will, and those too young to distinguish truth from error, who are most in danger of succumbing to priestly pressure. The future is largely in the hands of those who take the pains to dominate the minds of the "young and unlearned." Archbishop Temple's attitude on the whole question, while theoretically correct, practically plays into the hands of infatuated Sacerdotalists and secret agents of Romanism.

An Interesting Movement has arisen in America as a result of the war with Spain. At the outset of the struggle the American fleet captured a number of Spanish merchantmen. It has now been suggested, for the reflection of civilised nations, that private property on sea should, during war, have the same immunity as private property on land. It is suggested that the matter might very fitly be brought forward at the peace conference which the Tsar is convening. In that case England, which has such a myriad of merchant ships, might well support the scheme.—Daily Chronicle.

The Subtlety of Modern Sacerdotalism.

By Rev. ARTHUR T. PIERSON, D.D.

THERE is much discussion nowadays about Ritualism which does not touch the core and root of the alarming and growing evil, which is sacerdotalism, or priestly pretension. A priest is something wholly foreign to New Testament ideas, for all believers are in Christ priests, and have priestly access and prerogatives. The word priest is said to be an abbreviation of presbyter or elder; but to some it looks more like a corruption of the scriptural term, and reminds us of one who (pre-sto) stands before God in place of the believer—that is, assumes the mediatorial place and function.

Whatever be the etymological idea, one thing is sure, that the system of modern sacerdotalism is a subtle mechanism of imposture to put a human being between the believer and Christ. It establishes a merely human and arbitrary medium of approach, thus preventing immediate access to God and fellowship with Him. It renders every disciple or inquirer liable to forfeiture of all true blessing by the fallible and even mischievous nature of that mediation which alike perverts his conceptions of Divine things and misleads him in his supposed conformity to the Divine will. It is an unwarranted priestly intrusion between a human soul and God.

To see this clearly we must put these pretensions together. To consider the confessional, prayers for the dead, etc., apart from the system of which they form a portion, is to lose their main significance. We need to study these parts, not as disjecta membra, but as members in a body, to which they belong, and in which with Satanic skill they are fitted to their place. There are at least to this monstrous mechanism of evil that has found its way into the nominal Church of God, and is threatening to subdue the very ordinances and sacred observances of the New Testament beneath its sway. They are as follows:—1. Priestly ordination. 2. Priestly regeneration. 3. Priestly indoctrination. 4. Priestly absolution. 5. Priestly confirmation. 6. Priestly administration. 7. Priestly intercession.

In other words: 1. Ordination. 2. Baptismal Regeneration. 3. Tradition. 4. Confession. 5. Confirmation. 6. The Real Presence. 7. Prayers for the Dead.

The basis of all the rest is Priestly Ordination, mildly called Apostolic Succession. This puts priestly intervention between a believer and his right to act as a minister of Christ. It is supposed to confer, by a sort of succession in grace, the Divine authority to preach and administer sacraments. Space does not allow full discussion, but in the New Testament all believers preached (Acts viii. 1-4, xi. 19, 20), and even baptism was performed by Philip, who was set apart for temporal and not spiritual offices, and was, therefore, a "layman," and one case breaks the sacred line. This matter of rigid priestly ordination is the head of the whole system of sacerdotalism, for it carries all the rest with it, by making a human authority necessary for all ministry, so that one is dependent upon such priestly intervention for all else.

Then follows Baptismal Regeneration, which puts the ordained priest between the infant child and the church of Christ. Infant baptism becomes the means of regenerating the infant with the Holy Spirit and engrafting it upon the body of Christ.

Next follows Priestly Interpretation or indoctrination, which puts the priest between the baptized child and the Word of God. The priest becomes the teacher of the child, and churchly tradition the practical source of authority. Wherever the testimony of Scripture is considered doubtful, tradition interprets it, and wherever the two conflict, tradition takes precedence. Hence the Bible is not a safe book to be put into the hands of any but priests.

Next follows Priestly Confirmation, in which is supposed to be found the channel of grace to the believer, as in ordination to the priestly candidate. This puts priestly intervention between the "child of the church" and the Holy Spirit.

Next comes Priestly Absolution. The child is supposed to err, fall short, commit sin, and the only way to get clear of it is by the way of the confessional. This puts the priestly intervention between the sinner and Divine forgiveness.

Then comes Priestly Administration of the Eucharist, whereby some mysterious change—transubstantiation, consubstantiation, or whatever it be called—takes place, in priestly hands, in the "bread and cup," so that they become the body and blood of the Lord. Hence the Lord's table becomes an altar, and the Supper a sacrifice. This puts priestly intervention between the child of the church and Christ's atoning death and sustaining life.

Finally come Prayers for the Dead. The soul departing lingers in some intermediate state of more or less imperfect and disciplinary suffering, until priestly intercession relieves it of disabilities, and promotes fuller entrance into the heavenly estate. This puts priestly intervention between the human spirit and final entrance into glory. What must the dying thief have done with no priest to baptize, instruct, confirm, absolve, administer the "real presence," or pray for the repose of his soul!

To put all this together is to see the singular and subtle

COMPLETENESS OF THE WHOLE SYSTEM.

If priestly ordination is the head of this body of sacerdotal pretension, we may compare baptismal regeneration to the breath which gives life; priestly interpretation to the brain which supplies thought; priestly absolution to the hands which apply cleansing water; priestly eucharistic administration to the mouth which receives food; priestly confirmation to the blood which affords vigour; and prayers for the dead to the feet whereby all final advance within the doors of heaven is secured.

It is not here intimated that for none of these features of modern sacerdotalism there is any Scriptural foundation. All most subtle error is at bottom a half truth; and herein often lies its fatal character. But it behoves us to remember that whenever even a Scriptural truth or practice is either lifted into unscriptural prominence, or linked with other unscriptural teachings and practices, it becomes error. Truth is wholly such only while it holds its true position and true relation. The most sacred teaching may be made to uphold error, and so become practically erroneous.

For ourselves, we despair of seeing any permanent and thorough cure of the existing malady in the Church until disciples dare to renounce the whole system of sacerdotalism as such, and return to the simple New Testament faith and life. A system of idolatry is the inevitable outcome of the present growth of the sacerdotal pretensions which too many meet with practical apathy. The priest is virtually assuming Divine prerogatives, the water of baptism is becoming holy water in the eyes of the victims of sacerdotal superstition, the bread of the Lord's supper an adorable "host," the confessional a throne of grace, the priest a divine teacher and intercessor, and the Church, instead of a mere helper in drawing nigh to God, a hopeless barrier—not a means to an end, but itself the end.

Hints to Bible Students.

By Rev. ALEX. WHYTE, D.D.*

READ the Bible not so much for instruction and information as for impression. We may read to grey hairs and still find teaching in it, but we need to read it so that our sinful hearts which have gone astray may be impressed by the presence and grace of the Shepherd and Bishop of our souls.

Read the great books that have come out of the book of God, and out of the heart o man. In this age we are overwhelmed with trash that should be lighting our fires, and as for the great classics of the heart and mind nobody is reading them. Read Spurgeon on the Psalms, and Matthew Henry. In the latter you will always get knowledge, sagacity, and humour, and sometimes fun. Commentaries should be few but fit—suggestive but not exhaustive.

Read biographies—the best biographies of the best men. There is nothing so interesting as a man's life. Rabbi Duncan used to say that there were only three biographies—Augustine, Bunyan, and Haliburton, "but the tinker beats them a'." We must bring the very best of pronunciation, intonation, and style to the preaching of the Word of God. For a sweet, mind-satisfying, soul-elevating study, give your days and nights to the Bible and Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress, and for a commanding style nothing could be better than Bunyan's Grace Abounding.

Read with pencil in hand. The world is full of books that do not pertain to a man of earnest purpose. Read the best books only, and only when they are productive to you. If you take up a book and read thirty or forty pages of it without finding anything worth jotting down lay it aside. Macaulay had a memory of great tenacity and grasp, but we who are men of infirm minds have great wants and needs, and require the artificial aid the pencil supplies.

Keep note-books. Put everything down in them that is likely to be of use to you in the future, and they will become richer and richer to old age.

Have an interleaved Bible. Never grudge work upon the Book of God. Revelation was not written without sorrow, and it cannot be studied or preached without sorrow. If you want to be a preacher worth your clothes and your meat be a diligent student of God's Word.

Preach always your best—even if to a garret meeting with five old women. If you have five ragged children to teach on Sunday, prepare all week for them. You will not hold their eyes until you give them your best.

What to preach. Ask yourself what you would preach if it were to be your last sermon. Preach what is hot as God's own coals on your own heart. If you preach an old sermon it must be re-baptized in the Spirit and presence of Jesus Christ.—The Reaper.

THE REVIVAL.
1859—1899.

GOD is always ready to revive his work, and to answer the prayer of his people —"Wilt Thou not revive us again that thy people may rejoice in Thee?"

There has been much prayer for Revival, and our columns testify that in many quarters there is a fixed belief that the Hearer of prayer is already answering that cry.

In order to create or increase interest in this all important subject, we are preparing a sheet entitled THE REVIVAL, containing accounts of the Revival of 1859, Revival hymns, extracts from Finney's writings on Revivals, and other matter of the same character.

The paper will consist of eight pages, quarto, and will be supplied at 6d. per dozen copies, post free. A reduction on larger quantities for distribution direct from the publishers.

The first issue will be 100,000, and in order to make it known, parcels will be sent to Pastors, Teachers, Superintendents of Missions, Sabbath-school Teachers, Tract Distributors, and others interested, at the cost of the postage only, which will be at the rate of one penny for every eight copies. Early application is requested.

We hope that all our readers will co-operate in this endeavour.

THE REVIVAL will be continued occasionally, or monthly, or weekly, as the interest it excites and the orders received, may indicate.

Signs of Awakening.

THE timely letter of Mr. Leonard Weaver in THE CHRISTIAN last week seems to call forth additional witness as to the longing desire of many who lead in the things of God, and as to the actual outbreak of revival in many places. Speaking for a number of evangelists known personally to myself, it is the conviction of all that we are actually in revival times. The workers are more ready for prayer and outside effort in bill distribution, open-air work, and house-to-house visitation, etc. The prayers are full of life and earnestness in the meetings, and there is an eager looking out for the conversion of souls. The people listen with more concern, and there is a freedom of speech which, considering the surroundings, is itself an indication of the presence of the Holy Spirit in quickening power.

Mr. Weaver's appeal seems to be the best thing possible to encourage an onslaught upon the enemy's camp, and one can only hope and pray that the Lord's stewards will hurry up with their subscriptions, as the time is short, and opportunities to serve the Lord, who laid down his life for us, are fleeing apace. NED WRIGHT.

The Tottenham Hospital.

AS our readers are aware, there have been two distinct schemes under review in considering the future of this institution, so long associated with the name of the late Dr. Laseron. The proposal of Dr. Harford-Battersby to combine the work of the hospital with the special missionary tuition of Livingstone College was outlined in these columns a month or so ago. After deliberation the Charity Commissioners have finally decided to approve of the scheme promulgated by the council of the hospital and published some time since, and Dr. Harford-Battersby's plan therefore lapsed. The accepted scheme provides for the placing of the hospital work under a separate committee from that of the Deaconesses' Institution, and apart from religious considerations. The Charity Commissioners, in their letter of decision, state that they regard the scheme now established as an experimental one, which in the result of its working may require revision.

Hermann Warszawiak.

WE have received copies of a pamphlet purporting to give "The Whole Truth in the Cause of Hermann Warszawiak, in Answer to his Accusers." To ask us whether all the statements made in the pamphlet are true, is to impose upon us a scrutiny which we are by no means prepared to undertake. It is a simple thing, however, to deal with the statements that concern ourselves. Speaking of the exertions of an American Jew named Benjamin, who has for years persecuted Jewish missionaries, the pamphlet says:—

(1) The London CHRISTIAN, and some other respectable mediums, public and private, were simply A. Benjamin's mouthpieces until the secret channel of inspiration accidentally sprung a leak, and the last poisoned paragraph was stopped in the Editor's room from fear and shame.

(2) A. Benjamin, to prove his friendly intentions towards Mr. Warszawiak, had begun by giving him a confidential "tip" of certain machinations of his enemies, which providentially proved a clue to the intimate relations of A. Benjamin to their conclave, and to a certain editorial intention of THE CHRISTIAN. The detection, brought home to the Editor, shut off the next, and probably the last, of the inimical communications fed to that paper through A. Benjamin, and like worthy agents of the amazing conspiracy of which we have thought it well to uncover a single interior glimpse.

Of these charges and insinuations we say: There is not a word of truth in them. We never published a word from A. Benjamin; we never wrote a line from his inspiration. If "the Whole Truth" is throughout as veracious as are the statements made regarding ourselves, then it is worse than worthless as an "Answer to Accusers."

Having read the letters of Hermann Warszawiak to Madame Nicolas, we are also prepared to say that the pamphlet is not to be relied on in its statements on that matter. The same applies to the circular, obviously libellous in its terms, issued by Rev. A. A. Isaacs, of Bath.

Recalling the fact that our more recent references to this subject were the outcome of letters received from Mr. Henry Varley, who began his investigations as a warm friend and defender of Hermann Warszawiak, but found by further investigation that he had been deceived, we reproduce a few lines from an examination of the pamphlet made by one well-qualified for the work, who also had been a staunch supporter of Mr. Warszawiak, until he was forced to take a different attitude:—

It is neither kind nor just to designate as enemies to H. W. those who are his truest friends, and have proved themselves so, just because they cannot restore to H. W. their confidence and affection, which they long to do, until some satisfactory explanation has been given, or honest confession made, not only of the misapplication of thousands of pounds, but especially of the untruths told about these funds. "He that covereth his sins shall not prosper, but whoso confesseth and forsaketh them shall have mercy."

But speaking for ourselves, we regard Hermann Warszawiak as disqualified by untruthfulness from any work requiring the confidence of Christian people. We have no sympathy whatever with the idea that a lower standard of righteousness is to be applied to Hebrew than to Gentile Christians.

Before a judgment at once thorough and satisfactory could be arrived at, it would be necessary for the facts that have come to light on this side of the Atlantic to be placed before the ecclesiastical court in the United States.

Missions in China.—A Chinese Imperial Edict has been issued conferring the button of the third rank upon a foreign missionary. The edict also states that missionaries to China intend to persuade men to be good. This is expected to have a salutary effect upon the Chinese mind.

The Evangelistic Mission.

FOR a long series of years this Mission, under the control of Mr. C. R. Hurditch, has been seeking to evangelise the masses of the people at different crowded centres in the North-west and other parts of London. Besides these endeavours, which are sustained all the year round, special efforts are made by tent services and similar agencies to carry the Gospel into the villages and country districts. A great deal of this direct and aggressive Gospel work is carried on quietly, and does not come within the public ken; but the workers are constantly cheered by seeing tokens of Divine working in the reclamation of sin-weary wanderers and in the refreshing of believers. As a long established channel of Gospel work this Mission may be in danger of being overlooked by givers, but its past services and honourable record ought to commend it to all who wish to help on the diffusion of saving truth.

Many auxiliary branches of service are in operation, such as colportage and Bible-carriage work, the circulation of good literature, the Home of Rest for Workers at St. Leonards, relief work, etc. Friends should not forget the Mission in the apportionment of their Christmas benefactions. Mr. Hurditch's address is 164, Alexandra-road, N.W.

A correspondent writes concerning a recent series of services conducted by two of the Mission's evangelists, Messrs. P. R. Hurditch and F. H. Hutchins, at Bell Green Mission Hall, Forest Hill, which were attended with very pleasing results:—"We are full of deep thankfulness to God for so abundantly blessing their labours. It is a glorious result to find over fifty professing decision for Christ in a hall which will not comfortably accommodate more than three times that number. Physical comfort, however, was evidently not an important consideration, for with the aid of the vestry and class-room in the rear the number on Sunday evening could hardly have been short of 300."

The Y.M.C.A.

THE Birkenhead Association, which has occupied a handsome building in Grange-road during the past eight years, has opened a second building closely adjacent, designed and furnished for the use of the junior section.

Considerable encouragement has been met with in the Aldersgate-street centre recently, both in the Sunday Bible-class and at the Monday night Gospel meeting. A series of lantern services by Mr. A. H. Carter at the latter materially assisted in the revival, and following him Rev. John Wilson, of Woolwich, is giving a series of special addresses.

The Berlin Associations have formed a society with the special object of reaching the numerous young people arriving in the capital. The society has induced the authorities to furnish it regularly with the names and addresses of all within this category, and this system has already for some time been successfully carried out. The Berlin society has made successful efforts to extend the same system throughout all the great German cities which contain more than 100,000 inhabitants. In this way the Associations of these cities are able to enter into direct communication with new-comers, and to invite them to their meetings.

When it was known at Honolulu that the third American expedition on their way to the Philippines would put in there for three days, the Association at once had tasteful invitation cards printed, and the members distributed them on board the men-of-war. The result was that several thousand soldiers visited the fine building of the Association, more than 2000 inscribed their names on the visitors' register, about 7000 letters were written in the correspondence room, and 1500 baths taken by the soldiers during the three days. Special evangelistic services were held every evening in the large hall, which was packed each time. No other place in the town was so largely frequented as the Association, notwithstanding the numerous places of pleasure and entertainment that were open on all sides; indeed, not an inch of the vast Association building was unoccupied.

Hospital Sunday.—At the annual meeting on Monday of the Hospital Sunday Fund it was stated that since the commencement of the movement £952,525 had been collected for the London hospitals. Next year it is hoped that a million sterling will be reached. One speaker made a plea for a greater proportion of help to the dispensaries.

Bible Conference in Edinburgh.

A CONFERENCE was held last week in the Free Assembly Hall, Edinburgh. The subjects were "The Inspiration of the Bible" and "The Final and Last Things." On Tuesday afternoon Dr. Whyte, the Moderator of the Free Church, gave the opening address upon "The Name of the Lord." Men are miserable, but the Lord is merciful. The name of the Lord is expressive of what He is—to meet our need. In the evening Rev. Mr. Sheppard, of Appleby, directed attention to the adaptability of the Bible as a proof of its inspiration, remarking, "It has been translated into all languages, and it meets the need of all peoples." Pastor F. E. Marsh followed with an address on the correspondence between the Living Word and the Written Word, showing how inseparable they are.

On Wednesday afternoon Pastor Marsh gave a Bible Reading on what the Bible is and does. The points noted were:—The Word of God is the "Life-Bestower" (1 Peter i. 23), the "Christ-Revealer" (John v. 39), the "Assurance-Giver" (1 John v. 13), the "Joy-Imparter" (Jer. xv. 16), the "Victory-Effector" (Eph. vi. 7), the "Soul-Sanctifier" (John xvii. 17), the "Mind-Feeder" (1 Peter ii. 2), and the "Service-Equipper" (Acts viii. 4). Rev. G. Wilson dwelt upon the importance of absorbing the Bible, in order that it might be the warp and woof of our life.

Mr. John Colville, M.P., was the first speaker in the evening. The battle of the Reformation, he said, was over the question whether the "Church" is the seat of authority in Divine things or the Word of God. He called attention to three things the Bible does—quickens (Ps. cxix. 50), cleanses (Ps. cxix. 9), and feeds (1 Pet. ii. 2). Pastor Marsh drew attention to the fact that the Word of God is the Critic, the Greek word "Discerner" in Hebrews iv. 12, meaning a critic or judge. Men to-day are criticising the Word of God, instead of being criticised by it.

One of the most solemn and telling addresses was given on Thursday afternoon, when Rev. G. Wilson gave an address on "Eternal Punishment." The ten points of his address were:—(1) The personality of the individual is permanent. (2) The duality of the human race, namely, the saved and the unsaved. (3) The wicked can only cross the line which divides the saved and unsaved in this life. (4) The wicked in the other world are not susceptible to salvation, and the righteous are not susceptible to sin. (5) There is no revealed provision for the salvation of the wicked in the hereafter. (6) The term which is used to express "eternal" is "age-lasting," and must, therefore, be permanent. (7) God's character will be vindicated in what He does. (8) There will be a correspondence between what we are now and what we shall be there in spirit, soul, and body. (9) The blame lies with those who have had the offer of salvation and neglected it. (10) The blame lies at the door of the guilty church with regard to those who have not had the offer of mercy. In the evening Pastor Marsh gave an address on the same subject.

On Friday afternoon Rev. Sholto Douglas gave an address on Christ's coming for and with his saints. In the evening Rev. G. Wilson and Pastor Marsh gave addresses on the Lord's coming, dwelling principally upon the practical effect of it in the believer's life. Mr. W. D. Dunn gave the closing address, emphasising the practical effect of Christ's coming. Commenting on the comfort the fact of Christ's coming gives to the sorrowing ones, he told us of the lassie, who, having listened to the words, "Comfort one another with these words," ran home to her mother and said, "I am glad it says, 'Comfort one another' and not 'frighten one another.'"

Mr. J. J. Sims was the convener and the chairman of the conference.

Highlanders in Glasgow.

READERS of The Christian will be interested to learn of the good work being carried on among Highlanders in Glasgow by Mr. Duncan McColl, an office-bearer in Wynd Free Church. On a recent Sabbath, the writer, with two medical students, was present at the evening meeting, which was held in a hall in Jamaica-street, near to "the Highlanders' Corner"—so named from its being a favourite trysting place of Northerners. The audience — which crowded the hall—was largely composed of young men and women, many of whom, by the healthy flush of countenance, gave evidence that they had recently come to the city, while there were present not a few who long ago had left their Highland homes.

In the conduct of the meeting there was gravity, but no gloom—the solemnity of a Highland gathering as well as the fervour and enthusiasm of an evangelistic meeting. Several short addresses in English and Gaelic, marked by earnest entreaty for decision for Christ, were delivered; these were interspersed with hearty hymn-singing; and at no point did the interest seem to wane. At the close of the meeting, which lasted an hour, opportunity for conversation with the workers was given to the anxious, and it was interesting to see how many, without the slightest pressure, remained. The spirit of earnestness manifested by the inquirers gave testimony to their longing after salvation, which was satisfied in the case of some that night. Such results, we understand, are not confined to Sabbath evenings; but on Saturday nights also, at the Gospel temperance meeting, much blessing is being vouchsafed.

It may be mentioned that Mr. McColl is assisted in this good work by Highland students from the Bible Training Institute, whose knowledge both of Highland character and the subjectivity of Highland piety enables them to meet the introspective difficulties of their countrymen.

As a Highlander, the writer feels that the importance of such a work cannot be over-estimated when one thinks of the temptations and allurements of city life, among which these young men and women now move, in contrast to the quiet and in many instances the religious atmosphere in which they drew breath in their country home; and who, through the instruction there received, were brought near to the Kingdom, so that they require but to take the step of decision, which alone can garrison them against their new and deadly foes. This, Mr. McColl seeks, in God's name, to bring about. Let us pray that God may prosper him in seeking this great end.

A Good Investment.

IN these days when money is so cheap, and consequently very plentiful, truly one often finds it difficult to decide on a good investment. To get high interest is simple enough, provided you are not particular as to the risk you run in securing it; to be sure of retaining your capital, though, you must be content with small returns.

But there are some investments in which the child of God cannot possibly stake too highly, and one of these is assuredly the Field-lane Refuges and Ragged Schools.

Let me briefly mention, in commending this deserving charity, some of the multitudinous operations which are carried on in connection with the institution, all helping either the bodily or the spiritual needs of the inmates. In the Refuges, both male and female, nearly 1000 cases are dealt with annually. And it must be remembered that the people thus benefited here find "a home away from home," and they are not retained for a short time merely, but the principle of the Refuges is to give those who enter all the help required, and, where possible, to secure them employment.

The Crèche is also of inestimable value to the many mothers whose offspring are thus cared for. And the children themselves are a living testimony to the trouble bestowed on them, as I can personally testify.

The Industrial Homes, situated at Hampstead (where some 250 boys and girls are annually trained), are conducted on most practical lines. The boys are taught tailoring, shoemaking, baking, etc., and the girls are trained for domestic service. Mention must also be made of the mothers' meetings, which are attended by 400 to 500 weekly, and which themselves form a compact mission work; and of the ragged church service, held for tramps, every Sunday morning, when, on an average, 600 attend. In both these cases the Gospel is always faithfully preached, as, indeed, in every possible department of the work.

Temperance efforts are likewise vigorously carried on, both among old and young; Bible Ragged Schools and classes are held weekly; food is distributed, and much other service for Christ's poorer brethren is undertaken—and always in the Master's own spirit.

Last year just under £9000 was used in carrying on the operations referred to. Surely an altogether inefficient sum! Here investors may find adequate returns, both in the present, and in days to come. True happiness, remember, is secured by making others happy; and by giving as God enables us to such truly Christ-like work as that performed by the Field Lane Institution, we are laying up "treasure in Heaven." The secretary is Mr. Peregrine Platt, Vine-street, Clerkenwell-road, London.

Homeward Bound!

EVERY year as the season comes round, we meet with the following:—"The unloading of the Christmas Boat, laden with gifts for sailors of various nations, will (God willing) take place Saturday, December 17, at the Welcome Home for Sailors, Iron Bridge (close to Canning Town Station). All friends are welcome. Tea at six. Unloading of boat at seven. Meetings in different languages before and after."

To the outsider there is a mystery about this notice which we will try to explain. For many years in Ratcliff Highway Miss Child had a "home" and a welcome for sailors; the home work is now carried on in Canning Town, the later centre of sea-going life. As published in The Christian of Nov. 10, a new and larger mission-hall for meetings has been opened, and here the old work is still continued under constant blessing.

The "Christmas boat" is a part of that old work, and in faith that a cargo will be forthcoming Miss Child once more announces the unloading. Sailors of various nationalities will be invited to tea, and will then receive presents from the boat, in the form of woollens, needlecases, and other articles, suitable for them or their wives and children.

During the evening there will be meetings, personal talks, interspersed with hymns and solos, thus giving the men a real Christmas party when far away from dear ones left at home. Miss Child and her helpers ever aim at the spiritual benefit of those present, believing that nothing is done that is really worth doing, unless the immortal soul is saved. In how many cases God has blessed effort to this end eternity only will declare. Many who have been converted in the Home are now at sea, sowing the seed literally beside all waters, while others have left the sea to wholly devote themselves to the Lord's work.

In addition, those who belong to the "Christian Lifeboat Crew" are out nearly every week seeking to "rescue the perishing" at the various mission halls to which they may be invited.

Help for the boat will be very acceptable just now; and will those who can do no more do that which is the greatest of all, pray for Miss Child, "Welcome Home," Iron Bridge, Canning Town, London, E.?

Scottish Coast Mission.—This Mission has sought for many years to reach the largely fluctuating population of seafaring men visiting Scottish ports. The work is carried on at seventeen harbours, into which some 120,000 seamen, 40,000 of them foreigners, enter annually, and about an equal number of towns in which there is a resident fisher population of some 18,000. There is regular visitation in the homes and on the ships. A large number of Bibles and tracts are sold and distributed; while the Gospel is proclaimed in Bethels, mission halls, on shipboard, in the open air, and in many cottage meetings by the twelve missionaries. Much blessing has attended the Society's operations during the past year. The secretary is Mr. W. Allardyce, 5, St. Andrew-square, Edinburgh.

Christians as Intercessors—2.

BY MRS. MERRILL E. GATES.

"He is able to save.'

ONE source of the power to bring souls to God which Elizabeth Fry possessed is revealed in these words written of her by her sister: "She (Elizabeth) has spoken of many as being in constant prayer for them. I asked her how this could be: how she had time to pray so much. 'Why, it is always on my heart,' she replied. 'I think, even in sleep, the heart is lifted up.'" The record of her life is the record of the answers to these prayers.

Is there any more practical way in which Christians can act upon their belief in the power and love of God than in "intercessory prayer"? Every Christian mother may be an interceding voice, ever speaking in the ear of the risen Jesus, unto whom all power is given, and asking that his Spirit should affect more delicately, more surely, and more powerfully the inner working of her child's heart than could she by her wisest and most persuasive words. We read of no occasion when our Lord denied a parent's request for help and healing for his child. When shall we recognise that our great work as parents is to procure for our children greater spiritual enlightenment, knowledge, and love of the truth as it is in Jesus, and power to live to the glory of his name by our believing prayers for them? "Whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, I will do it."

To such friends (B. W., and G., who have written me, and others who have not) as are interested in this matter as a practical means of bringing actual spiritual power, day by day, to bear upon their children, relatives, and friends, so that real changes are effected in them, it may be helpful to suggest the work of Andrew Murray, "With Christ in the School of Prayer." The following paragraphs will show the spirit and teaching of the book:—

I feel sure that as long as we look upon prayer chiefly as the means of maintaining our own Christian life, we shall not know fully what it is meant to be. But when we learn to regard it as the highest part of the work entrusted to us—the root and strength of all other work—we shall see that there is nothing we so much need to study and practise as the art of praying aright. . . . Believe in Jesus. You are called, you are appointed to do the works of Jesus, and even greater works, because He has gone to the Father to receive the power to do them in and through you. "Whatsoever ye shall ask in my name that will I do." Give yourself, and live to pray, and you will learn to do the works He did, and greater works. With disciples full of faith in Himself and bold in prayer to ask great things, Christ can conquer the world. "Lord, teach us to pray!"

While we may learn much from our more spiritual fellow Christians, yet each of us, the humblest, has direct access to the great reservoir and fountain of Divine instruction in this matter. It is well to search out (by means of a concordance, or by means of marginal references in our Bibles, under the heads of "prayer," "pray," "ask," etc.) as many passages as possible on this subject; and thus make vivid and powerful to our own consciousness, under the golden illumination of the Holy Spirit, who searcheth all things, yea, even the deep things of God, the power which God possesses to answer our prayers for others, and the loving pledges He has given that He will do so.

What God says He means. He tells us "the promise is to you and to your children." We may claim the promise of the Holy Spirit for them—that gift beyond all price, which He is more ready to bestow than we to give good gifts to our children. And while the gift of the Spirit is the all-inclusive gift which we may claim for them, we are at the same time privileged, in our secret prayer for individuals, to ask for special things according to our knowledge of their need. We cannot particularise too much in our secret prayer to God! "Your Father knoweth that ye have need of these things." Our need as parents is often the hungry desire that our children should be more deeply taught of God, and brought into perfect union with Himself through Jesus Christ our Lord. And such a desire turned into the prayer of faith, He cannot, He will not deny. Let us put Him to the proof.

But one question we must still put to ourselves, Is it possible that our prayers for our children or friends are not answered because in the depths of our being we ourselves are still holding back from the answer to our prayers, are still unconsciously reluctant that the children or friends for whom we pray should be subjected to the trials and suffering which may be needful to bring them into full submission to God and entire consecration to his service? In other words, Are we content to pray for the end, namely, their union with God, and leave the means to this end with God alone? We must reach this fulness of faith also!

"According to your faith, be it unto you."

Unlimited fields to conquer by intercessory prayer are enfolded in this loving, mighty challenge of our Lord!

A Silver-Winged Messenger.

BY MRS. HARVEY-JELLIE.

COLONEL VALIOUS sat alone in his dining-room, looking at the many presents that had been sent for his wife's birthday. She was thirty years old that day, the sunshine of his home, and the delight of all who knew her.

But no festival of rejoicing was to be held, for she lay in her silent room, apparently near the gate of death.

Dinah Hall, the old servant of the Valious' home when the Colonel was a child, had become the gardener's wife, and lived near, and she was coming to nurse the invalid.

A gentle creature was she, one whose anchor of faith was cast within the veil, and whose soul dwelt in perfect peace. The door opened softly, and she stood before the downcast man. "Ah, to be sure, it's her birthday," she said, glancing at the presents, "and this one is lovely," pointing to a flower-vase held by a silver angel, with outstretched wings.

"Her friend Mrs. Statham has just sent it; you shall carry it to her, Dinah; place it on the table beside her; the flowers are choice," he said, handing the vase to the good old servant, for whom his wife and he had a real affection.

In Dinah's pocket she had a card with her favourite verse on it, and she thought to show it perchance while attending to her patient; but now, quick as loving thought can prompt, she took it out and hung it between the silver wings under the maidenhair fern, and in the stillness she breathed a prayer, and felt confident her God would use the little messenger.

The fever had gone, and Mrs. Valious lay prostrate. She smiled at the familiar face. "How kind of you to come, Dinah!" she said faintly.

"I have come gladly, dear lady, and with God's blessing I hope soon to see you better. This is one of the presents; the Colonel will bring the others up. May this be a truly happy birthday to you."

During the day her weakness increased, and great fear was entertained. At night Dinah sat watching, relieved to see her patient fall into quiet sleep. In the morning restlessness returned; but after a while she asked to have the new vase put nearer.

"It was good of her to send it, but what does that card say?" for she had been too ill to notice it before.

Dinah simply raised it and read: "This is eternal life, that they might know Thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom Thou hast sent" (John xvii. 3).

"I cannot understand Mrs. Statham putting a text on; how very odd!" said Mrs. Valious.

"You will forgive an old body, I know," said Dinah, "but when I saw the choice gifts, I just thought of the best gift of all, and 'twas I who hung my little card there, such a tiny present—but it tells of the largest gift of God, in sending Jesus to give us eternal life, and I've been asking you may receive no less than that."

A faint smile crossed the lady's face; she knew nothing of such life; enough for her to beguile herself with earthly pleasures.

"You are a good old soul, Dinah, I forgive you; but take it off the silver wings, for fear my friend should call and see it. There, give it to me, I know you meant it well," and she took the card to avoid seeming unkind.

Another day came, and, refreshed by sleep, she was able to hear her husband read to her, while Dinah went to rest herself.

"Poor old body! See, Hugh, what she hung on those wings," and he read the words, new words, hard for him, wise and prudent in worldly wisdom to understand, but failing to see the hidden meaning in words so grandly rich.

But one woman under the same roof had faith in the "whatsoever ye shall ask in my name," and she asked of God eternal life for the Colonel and his wife.

When danger was said to be gone, and strength seemed to return daily, the Colonel's joy was great, and he went out with a gladsome heart to find some book or present.

He selected what he thought suitable, and then before him he saw in large silver letters on a scroll the very words of Dinah's card. He purchased it and returned.

Prayer is the burden of a sigh,
The falling of a tear,
The upward glancing of an eye,
When none but God is near.

Dinah was content to leave God to work, while thus she prayed in silence. And his ways are wonderful.

"Hugh, I have seen something in my dreams so strangely beautiful," said his wife, as he entered the room with his parcel. "Sit down and let me tell you."

The books were given to her, and the scroll placed on the mantel-shelf, and he sat down to listen.

"I saw all things around me fading and passing away, and I was on a rocky steep, alone, and frightened, and I seemed to know I must fall and die; when a being stood before me and held out his hand and asked, 'Will you not trust in Me?' And as I took his hand He said, 'I give you eternal life!' and such a burst of glory came around me, and my heart swelled with joy; and I heard singing and voices of those I could not see, saying, 'This is life eternal, that they might know Thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom Thou hast sent'; and I wanted to know Him—nothing else seemed worth a thought then. But I woke, and still I can hear the words. Where is Dinah? Let me tell her, she can help me."

. . . . .

Three weeks gone, and still those words ring out their joyful message in the ears of the Colonel's wife, and she has heard, to the saving of her soul.

"Good-bye, Dinah; God bless you, I shall hold as a memorial of you that little silver-winged messenger," said Mrs. Valious, as she let her nurse go.

The humble and thankful woman returned to her cottage home, rejoicing in the work of grace [illegible], and for the honour put upon her in allowing her to call the wanderers to eternal life.

hank Thee, Lord, for using me
For Thee o work and speak;
However trembling is the hand,
The voice however weak
For those to whom, through me Thou hast
Some heavenly guidance given
For some, it may be, saved from death,
And some brought nearer heaven.

*What the School-Desk Said.

SHALL I tell you a story? Well, here it is:—There was once a very clever boy who sat at the top of his class, and who determined to try to win the best prizes and the gold medal; and it did not seem unlikely that he would. He did not work so hard or so conscientiously as some of the other boys; but being naturally quick he made greater progress than they. One Bank-holiday he went to visit his uncle, who was a good and skilful doctor. Fred told him that he hoped to be medallist of the school.

"Is that all?" his uncle asked, in a tone of disappointment.

"Why, uncle, what do you mean? That is the highest honour I can attain."

"Poor boy! no higher ambition than to win prizes? I had thought better of my nephew."

Fred could not understand his uncle, and thought he must be going crazy. But nothing more was said, and Fred felt humbled and angry that his uncle gave him no encouragement.

In the train going home, Fred was wondering what his uncle could mean, when his eye caught an advertisement of pens which had two lines of rhyme in it. The line he noticed in passing, was, "They come as a boon and a blessing to men." "That is a queer way to put it," he said to himself; "pens are not selfish, anyhow." It had just come to his mind that, perhaps, it was selfish to want to be first, as it meant disappointment to others, and especially to his companion Joe Eversley, who was working very hard for the coveted medal and with a noble end in view. His father was an invalid, and Joe wanted to go on as a teacher, and be able to buy his father some comforts he sorely needed. The headmaster had promised that whoever won the medal should have the opportunity of becoming a teacher if he wished it. The pen advertisement seemed to explain something of what Fred's uncle meant. But was it not right for him to be a clever scholar, and to stand high in his class? Yes, there could be nothing wrong in that; but why not want his schoolfellow to be as successful? Would it not be a noble spirit to cherish? and would it not be pleasing to God and to man?

On the following Sabbath Fred was surprised to hear the text announced, "Even Christ pleased not Himself." He did not usually listen to sermons (he thought they were a bore), but thought of football and cricket instead. To-day, however, he wanted to hear about the singular text. The preacher began by showing that true greatness did not consist in winning honours to please one's self, but in living for others. And as he went on to show the love which prompted Jesus to suffer and die for mankind, Fred felt that Jesus was the Hero he wanted to imitate. Anxiously he waited to hear how he could become a true Christian, and was overjoyed that Jesus was able and willing to save all who came in simple faith to Him. Fred there and then decided for Christ. He returned to school on Monday, and his schoolfellows wondered why he was in such a good humour with them all, and did not fly into a temper when Tom Johnston threw a Latin dictionary at his head. His companion Joe was unusually sad, and Fred asked what was the matter. Joe replied:—

"Fred, I believe you will get the medal, and you ought to, for you are the cleverest fellow in the school; and I should not mind for myself, but I can't bear to think of the disappointment it will be to my poor father, and how it will stand against my getting a situation."

"Come to our house every night, Joe, and I will help you all I can to win the medal. And don't laugh, Joe, when I tell you that I have given my heart to God, and wish to help you to do the same."

"How awfully good of you, Fred. I like your religion if that is what it does for you."

Fred kept his promise, and Joe was the honoured medallist for the year. As soon as Joe had received his medal, he hurried to thank his friend, but Fred assured him that he had never felt so happy in his life as he did when helping him with his studies. He had already got his reward; and he wanted nothing more. With a merry twinkle in his eye, he said he now wished to be like the pens, "a boon and a blessing to men."

My Best Friend.

Who loved me e'en before my birth?
Who thought my soul of priceless worth?
Who came to die for me on earth?
'Twas Jesus.

Who smiled unseen when, weak and wee,
A babe I lay on mother's knee?
Who sheltered all my infancy?
'Twas Jesus.

Who keeps me now at work and play?
Who gives me what I need each day?
Who guards me from the evil way?
'Tis Jesus.

Whose Spirit speaks the gentle word
That moves my heart to think of God?
Who wins me to the Heavenly road?
'Tis Jesus.

Oh stay and lead me all the way!
Teach me to love, teach me to pray,
Teach me to please Thee every day,
Lord Jesus. J. R.

Margery Smart.—I had a good many papers sent in unsigned, so probably yours was one of those.

Grace Joyce.—I am surprised you so often send in your paper giving chapter and verse only. Full answers must be written as well.

Emily Bridgewater.—By all means send your papers together. Am very glad you have interested your friend in the Searcher.

A. Kendall and Henderson Nathan.—Many thanks for your letter.

Miriam Ecroyd.—You seem to be very busy just now with all your school work. Glad your kittens are getting on. I don't happen to know anyone who wants a black kitten.

Nellie Sery.—I was glad to see your name again. Will you and your sister send in your papers to reach me by first post on Thursday?

Harry Lincoln.—You did not fully answer the questions set for you.

Exodus vi.

DIFFERENT conditions of God's people bring out new phases of his character. The soul first knows him as the Almighty, "Mighty to save"; subsequently it recognises its need of redeeming love, the attribute which underlies the great name Jehovah. All along life our circumstances are so contrived as to bring out phases of God's character, which had not otherwise appeared.

How full this paragraph is of what God had done and would do! He had established his covenant, He had heard the groanings of his people, and now He pledged Himself by seven "I wills." Let us ponder each of these thoughtfully and quietly, applying them to our own desperate need. Full many of God's children are in the plight of Israel. They do belong to God by an indissoluble covenant but instead of enjoying the land of rest and plenty, they are groaning under the tyranny of their sins. Their lives are very bitter, with the endeavour to fulfil the law, in which after their inward man they delight They are sold under sin. When they would do good they are brought into captivity to the law of their members. If such should read these words, let them understand the distinction between position and condition. By the former they have right to the land of liberty; by the latter they are living far beneath their privileges; but Jehovah-Jesus waits to lift their condition to the level of their position.

Always remember that the ground of redemption is the nature of God. The marvellous exposition of God's purposes commences and ends with the august words, "I am Jehovah." Nothing more is needed; for this fire needs no fuel from the bush.

Exodus vii.

How often we say in other words, We are of uncircumcised lips. Forty years in the desert with no audiences to address, apart from the quickening influence of expectant disciples, had robbed the lips of Moses of the eloquence with which Stephen credits him as possessing in early life. In his address before the Sanhedrim, the first martyr tells us that Moses was "mighty in words." Probably there was little trace of this when he emerged from that long seclusion. He felt as those feel to whom a sudden summons comes to sway the minds and hearts of men, but are painfully reminded that they lack the first elements of eloquence.

Satan will always mimic God's work. We are told that Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses. They attempted to rob his deeds of their significance, as proofs of the supremacy of Jehovah, by repeating them apart from reliance upon his power. Their object was to show that the gods of Egypt were equally strong as He whom Moses invoked. Is not this Satan's master-artifice? He loves best to be served by those who hold the form of godliness, but deny its power; who seem to do the very works that Christ enjoins, while their heart has never yielded allegiance to Him.

The world is full of philanthropy and religion which at first sight might pass for true Christianity. Men use the name of Christ as their sign, and claim to follow in his steps, but they have neither part nor lot in the matter.

Exodus viii.

Repeated blows made Pharaoh yield slightly. He was willing that the children of Israel should sacrifice, if only they would remain "in the land." "He called for Moses and for Aaron, and said, Go ye, sacrifice to your God in the land."

There is a remarkable contrast in this chapter between God's separation of his people from the Egyptians, and their proposition for a commingling of the two peoples. God said, "Let my people go out that they may serve Me"; Pharaoh said, "Stop in the land." Egypt said, "Go not very far away." Moses, in the name of God, demanded that three days' journey should intervene between themselves and the Egyptian frontier.

The world does not prohibit our having a religion if only we will not go very far away. Go to church, by all means, but take a hand at cards on Sunday evening. Take the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, but let it be amid sensuous accessories that rob the rite of all spiritual effect. Be careful to preserve an outward decorum, but do not be too precise.

Moses, on the other hand, insisted that the Red Sea should interpose its broad dark waters, like a grave of death, and that the people should be separated unto God. So only could they avoid sacrificing the abomination of the Egyptians. If we separate ourselves to God, God will separate us to Himself. "I will sever," He says, "in that day, the land of Goshen, and I will put a division between my people and thy people."

Exodus ix.

This is an awful story of the conflict between God and the soul, but it has many counterparts in modern life; and voices speak from out of the storm and hail and anguish of human hearts. Take the following illustration, which is undeniably authentic:—

A pious man died, leaving to his son, a bold blasphemer, a little chapel standing on his small estate. With hardened and contemptuous resistance of God, the young man vowed that he would take the pews out of the place, and use it as a piggery. At this time he determined to visit London, still further to indulge in riot and sin. In the train he fell in with another man, who told him that on the following day, which was Sunday, he was going to hear Spurgeon, and, for a joke, he promised to accompany him.

On Sunday morning he went across from a public-house to the Tabernacle, under the influence of liquor, and stood wedged in the dense throng. To his astonishment the first sentence that struck him, for the preacher was in the midst of his sermon, was, "You shall not put those pigs in that chapel." He was sobered and greatly arrested, and on his return home could think of nothing else. He was constrained to visit the Tabernacle again, and this time the preacher said, "You shall preach in that chapel yourself." The remarkable thing is that Mr. Spurgeon was as startled as anybody, when he found these two sentences in the report of his sermons when sent to him for revision.

The result was that the humbled and convicted blasphemer offered the place of worship to a handful of Methodists, who invited him to the first prayer-meeting, and on his reaching the place asked him to lead in prayer. He then burst into tears and cried, "God be merciful to me, a sinner!"

Such are the dealings of God with men, be they kings of Egypt or English foeman.

THURSDAY, December 22.

Exodus x.

Pharaoh contested every inch of the ground. First he did not want the people to go across the frontier, though quite willing to let them observe their religion in Egypt; then he proposed, as a compromise, that the children should remain behind. "Go now, ye that are men, and serve the Lord." This is a favourite device of Satan. He is not unwilling that the older people should give themselves to religious exercises, if only the young ones may abide with him. If the daughters will visit the ballroom, he will acquiesce in their accompanying their parents to church. If the sons be allowed to bring home a number of gay companions, he is quite willing to let the father pose as a religious man and a philanthropist. Besides, if he has the children, he has the next generation, and the next.

Pharaoh's last device was to propose that, at least, Israel should leave its possessions in Egypt. Could anything tally more exactly with what we are perpetually meeting to-day? You may give Sunday to God, if you will give all the week to the world. You may sacrifice in the Promised Land on the one day if you will only go down into the world to do business according to its maxims on the remaining six. The tempter knows well enough that when a man tries to compromise between God and Mammon he will certainly cleave to the latter, whilst he gives only a formal adherence to the former.

That was a grand answer that Moses made, "Not a hoof shall be left behind!" Too many of us think that we can give Jesus less than all He purchased with his precious blood.

FRIDAY, December 23.

Exodus xi.

The Lord always puts a difference between his people and the world. From the days of Noah, when, with his sons, he floated across the flood; of Lot, when he went out of Sodom; of Israel, when the favoured nation escaped the plagues of Egypt, and went forth with great judgments, men have been invited to discern between the righteous and the wicked, between him that serveth God and him that serveth Him not.

The difference which God puts between his Israel and Egypt is one of life and death. Between the children of God and the world yawns the mighty chasm which separates all sentient things from the dead matter around them. "He that hath the Son hath life, he that hath not the Son of God hath not life." On one side there is not a house in which there is not one dead; on the other, we are told, "Against any of the children of Israel shall not a dog move its tongue."

There is no difference so far as our sinnership is concerned, we have all alike come short of the glory of God. There is no difference in the redeeming grace of God. But there is a whole world of difference between those who shelter under the Lamb and those who elect to enter the storm of judgment without the blood on the lintel or sideposts.

SATURDAY, December 24.

Exodus xii.

This chapter is, indeed, full of Christ. With his redemption begin the months and years of the soul's life. It cannot be said to have lived before it knows Him as the Lamb of God.

The blood of Christ links households together. Neighbours and strangers gather around the common board, and feast as part of the family.

Our Lamb is without blemish. Searched as He was by friend and foe, no fault at all was found in Him. He was in his full prime when He laid down his life. Set apart to his supreme purpose at the beginning of his ministry, it took three years to consummate his doom. His blood claims immunity for those who shelter beneath its crimson brand, whilst they feed within upon the emblems of his body and blood. "Roast with fire." Ah! we know well what that means, for on the altar of the cross the Divine fire played about his heart. "Killed between the evenings!" Yes, He died as the sun was westering to the sea. The blood on the sidepost and lintel! Just so. The inmate of the house sees not the crimson stain, is not always reminded of it, does not always dwell on it, does not appeal to his feelings with respect to it, but is content to live beneath its panoply. Oh, ponder the Divine asseveration, "When I see the blood I will pass over." It is enough for God to see it; abide thou within the house at peace.

Let us keep the feast, not with the leavened bread of malice and wickedness, but with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth. And see that all ferment, everything that partakes of the nature of disease, decay, or death, be carefully removed, that God Himself may feast in company with his child.

A Real Danger.

By Dr. THOS. J. BARNARDO.

A FEW weeks ago, as all readers of The Christian will recall, several prominent workers among Orphan, Waif and Destitute Children were invited by the venerable Sir George Williams to take part in a three days' Conference of Evangelistic Missions at home and abroad, convened in Exeter Hall. A report of the proceedings duly appeared in these columns; but I should like to give at greater length certain remarks upon a subject of great importance to all Christian workers of to-day, which I had the privilege of laying before the members of the conference. I took occasion then to emphasize some dangers which lay in the path of those who would rightly train and fit these poor Waifs for their future lives.

Among other matters I besought my hearers to beware lest in their religious training of the children there should be any substitution of merely materialistic observances and so-called sacramental theories for the simple and gracious teaching of our Divine Lord and Saviour as contained in his holy Word. "Do not at any cost suffer the shadow of a man-made priest to intervene for one hour between your children's consciences and their Lord who loves them. Remember this, that even those precious words, 'Suffer the children to come unto ME and forbid them not,' are interpreted by one party in our National Church to mean in effect, 'Let the children be indoctrinated early in our sacerdotal views and practices, brought to the sacraments and taught the value of coming to God's priests (!) for guidance and absolution.'

"In some Institutions that I know of, stupid pictures of sinful men and women, supposed to be 'saints' in some sense that all God's believing people are not, and apocryphal prints of so-called 'Fathers of the Church' are hung up in the dormitories for reverent observation, while in one instance a vast crucifix adorns the room, before which all the little creatures prostrate themselves on entering and leaving. In some of these 'Homes,' confession is either enjoined or permitted. Which of us present to-night but would dread the evils that must follow if once that practice became habitual? Only a fortnight ago I had proof of the undesirable vigilance with which some misguided sacerdotalists carry out their intentions, and also of the unutterable importance of seeking to bring all the inmates of our Homes, before they leave them, in faith and love to the feet of our Saviour Himself, if they are effectually to withstand the subtle and powerful influences of some of these extreme and

MISGUIDED RELIGIOUS TEACHERS.

"After having addressed a great meeting in one of the suburbs, I was delighted at its close to find myself approached by eleven young women and two young men, who had once been boys and girls in the Homes, but who for some years had been in respectable service. I found that no fewer than eight of these—more than half of the whole number—were walking in the ways of the Lord. At the railway station a young woman, also formerly in the Homes, whom I had not before noticed, was, I found, going to a place three stations off on the same line as I was myself travelling by. I thus had the opportunity of speaking to her on spiritual matters, and I was greatly cheered and encouraged by the calm but humble response she made to my inquiries, and by the manifest reality of her faith and hope. She told me that for the last four years she had lived in what she called a 'very High Church family.' Shortly after she went there the clergyman called, and one day he saw her alone for a few minutes.

"During his interview he asked her if she had been confirmed. She said, Yes; that while boarded out from the Village Home she had been confirmed when fifteen years of age.

"'Do you go regularly to church?'

"'Yes, sir; always once, sometimes twice.' Then, sir, he asked me if I went to Confession. At first I could not quite tell what he meant; but when he explained, I said:

"'Sir, I have confessed all my sins to God, and I do so every day, and He forgives me.'

"But he explained that I could not know I had absolution unless the priest of God's Church spoke the words to me.

"I said, 'I was sure God had Himself given me absolution.'

"'But how can you be sure, my girl? How do you know? It would be a dreadful thing to make a mistake about, and to trust to your own feelings and notions.'

"'Oh, sir,' she said, 'I don't trust my own feelings one bit. I know and am sure, because God says in the Bible, If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness.' And she added: 'Then, sir, I told him I was brought to know and love Christ as my Saviour when in the Village Home, and now I am trying to live so as to please God.'

"'Oh, then, I see you are a Dissenter!' continued the clergyman.

"The girl replied: 'I don't know what that means, sir; but I have always gone to church, and I always like going whenever I can to the Communion, for I love Jesus.'

"I knew not which to admire most, the humility and simplicity with which she had said all this in the most natural and matter-of-fact way, or the readiness and quiet confidence with which she had appealed to the law and to the testimony in so great a trial of her faith; but my readers may imagine my own gratitude to God as I was thus unexpectedly permitted to reap some of the fruits of the

PRAYERFUL LABOURS OF LONG AGO.

"If such was the attitude this clergyman assumed towards a young woman who was manifestly living a Christian life and walking in the narrow way, what mischief could not such a false guide have done by influencing in erroneous views young children, too young to doubt or question what he might say, who might be the inmates of a Home of which he was the chaplain? It is teaching of this sort, begun when children are young, and continued for years, that is causing the minds of the rising generation to drift steadily towards materialism in the sacraments and sacerdotalism in the ministers. At such a time as this every lover of the Reformation, every sincere and spiritually-minded Christian, should earnestly see to it that only those Institutions which are known to be true and faithful to Christ and to the doctrines of the Reformation have the sympathy, co-operation and support of the Christian public.

"I will only add as I close, that the longer I live, the more persuaded I am not only that the conversion of children is a very real thing and may be assuredly looked for as the result of our labours in answer to prayer, but that all rescue-work undertaken on behalf of street children is of little abiding effect, however great it may seem, unless this be the fixed purpose of the workers."

Think of the Others this Christmas.

THINK of the others this Christmas!
For other folks live on the earth.
Perhaps you had thought,
And perhaps you had sought,
Your own little circle of mirth:
But think of the others this Christmas; forego
Yourself, and let others your fellowship know.

Think of the others this Christmas!
Perhaps they think little of you.
Then give them the more
Of your own thoughtful store;
Be liberal, loving, and true.
To think of the others this Christmas will add
New joys to thine own heart when it is most glad.

God thought of the others at Christmas!
That first Christmas Day long ago:
And passed angels by,
That his heart might draw nigh
To sinners in sin fallen low.
God thought of the others, and you with the rest:
Now ransomed yourself, let still others be blest.

Think of the others this Christmas!
Go forth from your own narrow sphere,
And make it your plan,
That as wide as you can,
You'll gladden the far and the near.
Let the lamp shine for others—'twill brighten the beams
If far through the window the glory-light streams.

Think of the others this Christmas!
The others who know not your Lord.
Perhaps there are others,
Your own bosom brothers,
Who never have heard pardon's word.
Art thou one of those others? This glad Christmas Day?
Believe in our Jesus—now trust Him to-day.

INTERNATIONAL S.S. LESSONS.

December 25.

Christmas Lesson—Luke ii. 8-20.

GOLDEN TEXT—"For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord."—Luke ii. 2.

THE INN.

HOSPITALITY, a sacred duty among the Hebrews. Chief of each town deputed to entertain strangers. Hence erected in each town or village a khan, or inn, where travellers could stay. It consisted of an enclosure formed of buildings opening on the inner side. The ground floor was used as a stable, and the upper floor for the traveller himself. In this case the crowd of people who came to Bethlehem to be taxed was so great that late comers had to be content with accommodation in the stable. Among these latter were Joseph and Mary.

BORN IN POVERTY.

The poverty of Christ had been foretold. Why was Christ born in to such a poor home and family?

(1) He who was to be loved in all points must know the pinch of the poor.

(2) No material wealth or grandeur could show his greatness, for it was to be spiritual.

(3) Riches would have blinded his followers to the true mission of his life.

THE WORLD WAITING.

Both Dr. Geikie and Dean Farrar show that the world lay hushed waiting for the advent of the Christ. The Jews expected the consolation of Israel. The Gentiles had been seeking after spirituality and immortality of their soul. But their philosophers had failed in the search. They were waiting anxiously for further light. Yet their dreams did not paint the Messiah as He came, nor the lesson of lowliness He had to teach. There was, after all, "no room" for Him.

NO ROOM IN THE STATE.

Herod occupied the throne and tried to slay the infant rival. In another sense the great of the earth were not prepared to practise his precepts. Late Archbishop Magee said, "It is not possible for the State to carry out all the precepts of Christ. The State which attempted this could not exist for a week."

But growing Brotherhood—philanthropy, charity—substitution of arbitration for war—the movement of the Czar of Russia in favour of peace—all show that the nations of the world are trying to find room for Christ.

NO ROOM IN MEN'S OPINIONS.

Minds of the disciples full of notions about the Messiah and his kingdom. Scribes and Pharisees rejected his teaching, being preoccupied in opinion by the law of Moses. Paul on Mars Hill listened to while he preaches Greek philosophy, but cried down when he introduces Christ. Teacher should illustrate this truth by showing how the new virtue of self-sacrifice has grown in the minds of men. Hospitals, charities, missions abroad and at home, the desire to help the poor at Christmastide—all show that we have made room for Him.

NO ROOM IN THE IDEALS OF MEN.

The ideal of Greece was the wise man, of Rome the brave warrior. They never thought of such an ideal as the beauty of holiness. The happiness they sought was little in the gratification of passions or the æsthetic taste of literature and art. The ideal of a morally strong and unselfish character had not yet dawned.

To-day art must be moral, and grovelling passion hides its head in darkness. Christ has not much room, but the world is making room for Him.

NO ROOM IN THE HEARTS OF MEN.

Christ has won his way into millions of hearts. Thousands have died for Him. Millions have lived for Him. The love He manifested is reflected back in holy deed and word.

The heart of man is the true Temple of God. "My son, give Me thine heart." Once open the door to Him and place Him on the throne and all will be well. Apply these lessons to suit age of scholars.

Bearing One Another's Burdens:

Among Our Home Missions.

The Backslider.

"The backslider...shall be filled with his own ways."

By Dr. THOS. J. BARNARDO.

TWENTY-FIVE years ago a young lady of gentle birth, who had been religiously brought up, fell deeply in love with an officer in the Army, and the engagement which after a while followed appeared to be in all respects, save one, suitable. The exception was that he was not a religious man; not only so, but he lost no opportunity of expressing his strong disapproval of the views adopted by his fiancée and of the general religious atmosphere of her family home. Had all the facts of his past career been then known this story would never have been written.

But no one was aware of the sad and shameful secret of his life: that, while professing to be a single man, he had a wife and two children actually living! Man and wife had separated by mutual consent, and yet, with this impassable barrier against any other lawful union, he suffered himself to excite an ardent attachment on the part of this young girl. It is clear from what eventually occurred that he must, a little later on, when he was assured of her love and devotion, have broken the news to her that she could never be his wife. But even then the young lady was so infatuated, and her own declension from the ways of the Lord so real, although so gradual, that, concealing the true state of affairs from her friends, she left her luxurious home and her family circle, to become, as she thought, his lifelong companion.

But, four years later, he suddenly lost his life in a railway accident. At the time of his death it was found that no provision had been made for the girl whom he had so deeply wronged, or for her infant son, then but three months old. He died intestate, and his lawful wife and her children claimed and became possessed of all his property, which was considerable. The unhappy girl had to face the world with her infant, almost penniless, certainly friendless, for long ere this she had been cut off from the family upon whose proud escutcheon she had brought so shameful a blot. For years prior to the death of her betrayer there had been no communication of any sort between her and her relatives. Every letter written by her had been refused; her father had died, absolutely to her, or to make any provision for the daughter who had so shamed him.

Thus it was that when the railway accident occurred she, nurtured in luxury, fell, by a terrible turn of life's wheel, into a condition of the most deplorable destitution. A dreadful struggle for mere existence began She moved from the country where she was living into the nearest town, and there ineffectually sought for remunerative employment. She could only obtain an occasional engagement at work of the poorest and roughest kind, for which she had no past training or experience to qualify her. By the time her boy was two years old, she had lost youth and health and good looks, and she had parted with everything. Every little treasured possession was gone—sold for bread! She earned something by odd jobs which was hardly a living wage.

About this time, hoping against hope to influence a sister who she heard was married and well-to-do in the North, the unhappy young mother tramped with her boy to Durham. She failed in her quest, and then this delicately reared and educated woman took to a wandering career, thus tasting the full bitterness of a tramp's life. She never afterwards had a home of her own! What did it matter then that she had once been an admirable performer on the piano and the harp—that she had a lovely soprano voice, and could speak both French and German? She was a veritable outcast! All heart and life were gone out of her in her struggle for bread. Assuredly the punishment of her sin had been severe. The words were coming true: "The backslider in heart shall be filled with his own ways." She lost self-control, and, alas, she learned to turn to drink for the temporary exhilaration and forgetfulness of misery which forms its chief attraction to the unhappy and desolate. "It is the chloroform," said a public speaker lately, "that some people take to enable them to endure the terrible operation of living." For the next few years her career cannot be described in detail. It was ever downward, and ever more wretched. But "beneath the lowest deep a lower deep still threatening to devour her opened wide." She was constantly in and out of various workhouses, and her

TRAMP'S LIFE WAS NEVER BROKEN.

Finally, after years of wandering to and fro, she drifted to Liverpool, and, having contracted heart disease in her miserable trampings, she died there in a hospital. Her boy was then about eleven years of age.

Before her death a light shone for a short time upon the sombre picture!

In the providence of God the nurse who attended her in the hospital proved to be a true-hearted Christian woman. Her words, her ministry of mercy, and her tender loving sympathy were all used of God to bring repentance and peace to the poor, worn-out, backsliding woman, who, though she had lived but thirty years, was dying of old age, an exhausted victim of man's sin and her own frailty and folly. She lingered for a few weeks, and, as I learned afterwards from the nurse herself, was enabled to realise the loving forgiveness of her heavenly Father, and entered into that peace which only He can give to an upbraiding conscience. There grew up an overwhelming desire to save her son, to whom, in all her degradation and dreadful wanderings, she had been passionately attached. Too well she knew the evils of the workhouses and the streets. As she lay dying there in that hospital, unknown to any, she confided her story to the nurse, and besought that friend, raised up by God for her at the last moment, to help the homeless boy, so soon to be left an orphan, and to SECURE FOR HIM A CHRISTIAN TRAINING.

On the death of the mother the boy was placed temporarily by the nurse with some kind folk, while she sought in many directions a home and education for him beyond what she could herself give. After many failures, a letter of abject appeal from the nurse was my first introduction to Tom Collins. Assuredly he was a destitute and homeless lad; but the good nurse herself, only earning £30 a year, undertook to pay at least £12 annually towards his maintenance if I would receive him. I ought to add that the dying mother, in telling her whole story to her Christian friend, had given all needful names and dates; and the nurse, when she besought me to admit the boy, felt it her duty to place all the facts in confidence before me. I was, therefore, able to verify in a quiet way the statements made, and to ascertain that the dying woman's account of herself was absolutely accurate.

So I admitted her son. Tom entered my home, and had been there about two years, when I received sudden intelligence that the nurse who had befriended him and his mother had herself succumbed to an illness caught while nursing.

Tom was, indeed, now friendless and alone in the world! I had many a talk with the boy on different occasions, when he told me of his poor mother, and of their sad experience when on the tramp. Of course, he knew nothing of his parentage, except that his mother had told him his father was a gentleman by birth, and that she had once been in a higher rank of life. It was moving to hear this lad's simple, pathetic account of the hardships which he and his homeless mother had undergone for as many years as he could recollect. But he proved himself to be a very superior boy. He learned quickly, and he advanced in favour with all those under whose charge he was placed. Tom was possessed of a charming nature, amiable, gentle, unselfish, and brave. Even those who were ignorant of his history could not look at him or know him without feeling that he was altogether a lad of great promise, for whom the future gave good hope of advancement in life. When fourteen years of age Tom was one of the most ardent volunteers for admission to my Canada list, and I thought it wise on the whole to yield to his aspirations. And now Canada, with all its golden promise, stretched out before him, and the boy's buoyant nature leapt to meet the possibilities of a new life in a country through which he had never tramped as a homeless beggar boy, and where he had never known cold or wet or hunger. So to Canada in due course he went.

Shortly after his arrival there, Tom was placed upon a farm, but by and by he shifted, and was admitted to the household of a medical man, becoming a kind of indoor servant. Here, as in his first place, he won golden opinions, so much so that at length his employer grew deeply interested in his protegé. After a while he arranged to release him from his toil, to treat him as his own son, and to give him a superior education at his own cost. Eventually, Tom went to the university, and early last year I received a letter from my quondam waif telling me that he had that he had now entered the medical school, and would proceed to take out his M.B.

I write with Tom's photograph lying before me on the table. It is a fine, thoughtful, noble-looking face, with well-poised, courageous head, and intelligent observing eyes, but with a touch of sadness in them which seems to the on-looker to suggest that the subject of the picture has a story of his own. In the very last annual letter I had from him, Tom gives vent at once to his gratitude and to his sad reminiscences. He says, touchingly: "I might have lived and died a beggar; but God's goodness has made me A MAN!" Who shall say that the prayers of the poor, sinning, but repentant mother were not heard and answered in the opportunities afforded to her son for a better life, and in all the hopeful prospects which God's providence has vouchsafed to rescued Tom, through the medium of my Homes?

Tom's case, in its success, is far from being unique in our annals. Most of my lads, indeed, fill humbler niches in the great world; but some there are, gifted with larger capacities than their fellows, who are to-day filling positions of distinction to which I may never hope to attain.

A Loan Agency.

FOUR hundred boys to lend, in ones, or twos or larger quantities, to suit borrowers! No interest charged, but boys must be returned carefully and in good condition immediately after Christmas! Please apply at once to the Stepney Loan Agency, as below, at 18 to 26, Stepney-causeway, London, E.

This is a perfectly serious Christmas offer to my friends, and I sincerely hope I shall have a large number of responses. The case stands thus: In my three chief Boys' Homes in London there will be quite four hundred boys at Christmas-time who have no friends to whom they can possibly go. My purse is so low that I am loth to encounter any special expenses in the way of Christmas fare or Christmas festivities. When bread and butter are hardly obtainable, I grudge having to purchase cake! And yet Christmas ought to be the sweetest memory in a boy's life, and I would like every one of my rescued waifs to look back with pleasure upon his Christmas in the Homes.

Now, will the friends of my Waifs and Strays come forward and solve my difficulty? I want four hundred helpers to send me an invitation each for a boy guest for Christmas, and an offer to pay his return fare from and to the Homes. This last may seem a somewhat ungracious addition to the request; but it is necessary. In some cases last year in which I accepted invitations, I had to pay as much for railway fare as would have almost kept the boy in comfort during all the days he was away; so that, after all, the expense was nearly as heavy as if the lad had remained with me. This year, therefore, I only ask for invitations from those friends who can also afford to pay the return railway fares for their young guests.

I can send little boys (from six to thirteen years of age); big boys (from thirteen to sixteen); youths (only a few of these being available) from sixteen to eighteen; or finally, cripples (both young and old). I think the boys should leave me on Friday, the 23rd, but they MUST return not later than Wednesday, December 28th.

Each boy will have the name and address of his intended host written plainly upon a card fastened to his clothing, and he will be given into the charge of the guard, for I cannot supply an escort. Each boy will carry with him the requirements for cleanliness for the few days while he is a guest, and I would ask those who play the part of host to see that all these little belongings are brought back safely. Great care will be taken that no boy is sent out who is likely to be troublesome, or who is not cleanly in his personal habits. On the other hand, I ask my friends everywhere, who are good enough to invite my boys, to see to it that no incitement to drinking or smoking is suggested to them. I simply desire for the children plain fare, a little change, and a peep into a home-life perhaps far above anything that they have ever seen before, with kindly words and sympathy at this season of the year.

All invitations should be addressed to "Dr. Thos. J. Barnardo," at the offices as below, and they should reach me at once if possible, but on or before December 19th at latest.

Billy's Father.

ST. GILES'S CHRISTIAN MISSION.

"HELP me, guv'nor," growls the convict, fresh from the dock; "ha! ha! that's a good 'un. Why, I've a wife and family down Doory-lane way, who'll starve, I guess, while I does me eighteen munfs 'ard."

"We will do something for your family," is Mr. Wheatley's quiet reply, "if only you will mend your ways. Remember, God will keep you."

The convict stares, not knowing what to make of it. But a few moments since his brain reeled as he pictured not so much the cell, the treadmill, the rigorous round of gaol life, as the struggles of his wife to find bread for the children during the bitter days of winter. Now, with a flash of hope, his heart revives.

"I've heerd o' you afore, sir," he mumbles, flicking away, with the back of his big black hand, something very like a tear, "but I didn't know as you'd care fer a feller's wife an' kids. You—you might look arter young Billy."

"Billy?"

"Ah! He's got a twist in the leg, and can't git along wivout a crutch."

"All right," says Mr. Wheatley. "Now, do your best to redeem the past. We will meet you at the gaol gate on your release, and, depend upon it, there is no reason why your future should not be one of blessing; yes, and of service to God."

The court gates are swung open, and the familiar van, with its living freight of sorrow, rumbles away prison-ward; but "love shall conquer," and the kindly words of the evangelist bring forth fruit even in these seemingly hardest of hearts.

For the sequel of the history of Billy's father let us transport ourselves to a garret in the purlieus of that network of grimy alleys which lies directly north of London's great artery of pleasure, the Strand.

In a scantily-furnished garret, high up, seeming to jostle the very chimney pots, sits a decently-dressed woman, just returned from the Mission's convalescent home at Hastings. While nursing Billy, and encouraging the other children to "make a good tea," she indites, in good set terms, the following letter:—

DEAR MR. WHEATLEY,—As I have just returned from Hastings, and feel very much benefited by the change, I wish to thank you for my children and myself for the privilege of enjoying such a happy time at the Home. We were made most comfortable and received great kindness. As I am now so much nearer to Little Wild-street, I hope to attend your chapel on Sundays. Sir, if you would kindly let me know if I might meet my husband on Wednesday at Brook-street Home, as I expect he will pass through your hands.—Yours most respectful,

Mark the thoroughness of the work. The family is once more united, health gleams rosily on the little one's cheeks. Billy grows strong, and his father, erstwhile the friend of criminals and debauchees, and so well known to the police, is an honest man. Together they love and worship the Lord. The mission-hall is their sanctuary.

Multiplying this instance a thousandfold, realising that at every prison door of the metropolis, every day, all the year round, loving hands and hearts greet the weary gaol bird, we have a conception of the work done by the St. Giles' Christian Mission.

But, does the work stand? For answer, let us attend on an anniversary day in the mission's capacious hall, and note the seemingly interminable procession of smiling young fellows and modest young women filing forward to receive the awards due to old "cases" for length of service in their situations. Surely the chorus of approval from the assembled judges, magistrates, and police authorities is well deserved. The Mission, be it observed, aids prisoners of either sex, and amongst the squalor of St. Giles's, nurses the sick poor, carries the Gospel to dark masses, and snatches the prey from the mighty.

Here is a letter of thanks from an entirely unknown writer:—

DEAR SIR,—Having at one time received assistance from your society, which I can assure you I was very thankful for, I hope you will receive my mite; and, as it is only small, I can give you my word that my prayers are for your Mission, which I am sure God will bless. I hope it will give you courage to continue your good work.—Believe me, Sir, One who is Thankful and Believes God will Bless what is Done for Him.

Enclosed were nine penny stamps, the practical "thank you" of a poor fellow who, writing from a hospital sick bed, felt bound to send his few pence towards the salvation of his fellows.

How much, then, will you, good reader, spare from your store to aid, in the Master's name, this glorious work among the criminals and the poor?

Communications should be addressed to Mr. W. Wheatley, Ampton-street, Regent-square, W.C.

"In Peril on the Sea."

MISSION TO DEEP-SEA FISHERMEN.

THE good work which this Society has carried on afloat amongst the fishermen whilst pursuing their hazardous calling on the deep, by means of its well-equipped hospital vessels, is so well known as to need hardly more than a passing notice. From a philanthropic point of view the record of its work is truly striking, no less than 10,315 cases having been medically and surgically treated last year. These figures include 161 serious cases received into the hospitals of the mission vessels as in-patients for periods varying from three to four days to as many weeks.

When it is borne in mind that the brave fishermen never see land from the time of joining one of the fleets till returning home two months later, and that during most of that period they are from two to three days' sail from land and medical assistance, the value of the society's work at once becomes evident. But its efforts are not solely directed to healing men's bodies; this department has rather been added to that higher aim of leading sinners to the Cross of Christ, thus carrying out the command of the Master to his first disciples—"Heal the sick," "Preach the Word."

Upwards of 2627 services were held afloat for the fishermen last year, and many hundreds of visits made by the society's missioners to the crews of the different fishing smacks composing the fleets. Upwards of thirty-five tons of healthy literature were distributed by the mission during the same period. The society also has shore stations at the different fishing centres round the coast.

An important work is also carried on amongst the Labrador fisherfolk, but as a graphically written description of this Medical Mission has recently appeared in THE CHRISTIAN, those who desire can obtain fuller information by perusing it.

Those in whom this work of the Royal National Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen strikes a sympathetic chord should write to the secretary, Mr. Francis H. Wood, 181, Queen Victoria-street, London, E.C. Funds are greatly needed for the erection of an Institute at Ymuiden, a Dutch port much used by English fishermen, for whom no such provision exists, Grace Triumphant.

THE STORY OF ONE OF OUR ORPHAN GIRLS.

By Rev. Vernon J. Charlesworth.
(Head Master, Stockwell Orphanage).

KATIE was a child of godly parents. Never robust, there was, however, but little to ndicate the insidious working of an inherited idisease.

It was while she was an inmate of the Orphanage she gave her heart to Jesus, and proved the reality of her conversion by her winning ways and gentle deeds. Her matron, Miss H., says, "I can testify to her consistent life and conduct; her anxiety for the other children was beautiful. She sought every opportunity of praying and speaking with her companions, also of writing out for them suitable texts of Scripture. At her own request we arranged one evening a week for her to hold a prayer-meeting with the elder girls."

In the usual Sabbath-evening prayer-meeting, held in the house, the dear child was always ready to lead in prayer, and she would plead earnestly for her little sister, who was the only member of the family unconverted at the time, but who has since given her heart to Jesus.

Her teachers have often spoken of the reality of her Christianity, and their testimony leaves nothing to be desired.

"Her meekness under reproof (rarely necessary), her prompt obedience and unflagging industry, her unselfishness, her readiness to serve, and her appreciation of the Scripture lessons, were as consistent as were the earnest loving home letters it was often our welcome duty to overlook.

HER LIFE A FRAGRANCE.

"Her little life was to us a fragrance and delight, as are those of many yet in our midst."

Her mother being able to support her at home, she left the Orphanage and attended school, with the view of becoming a teacher; but the disease, which eventually proved fatal, manifesting itself, the plans which had been formed for her future had to be abandoned.

The first intimation of her serious illness was conveyed to us in April, when her mother wrote, "Katie is very ill; has been far from well all this year. Six weeks ago she was examined, and the doctors agree that there is very little hope of her recovery, but she is very bright and happy, and wholly resting on Jesus."

From May till August Katie gradually became weaker and weaker; her pain, at times, being almost past endurance, and yet it was meekly and patiently borne. It was sad to see her suffer, but the watchers were spared the grief of bearing with a fretful or a murmuring spirit.

In writing to tell us of her death, her sister says: "Oh! what

A BLANK IN OUR HOME NOW.

Nodear sick one to wait upon, her sweet patient face for ever gone; but, oh! we have a wealth of riches in her memory, she said so many beautiful things during her illness, especially towards the end. She quite realised that, as she put it, she would have to go through the trial of death; but she had no fear, because she knew Jesus would never leave her. She said she longed to see Jesus, if only to thank Him for all He had done for her. There was one thing she said she could always do, and that was, to bear her sufferings patiently for his dear sake, that it might glorify Him!

"Just before the end, she wished me to read to her the texts which hung on the wall, and, referring to one of them, she said, 'Yes, I am kept by the power of God!' She then said, 'I can't see you; get a light!' I did so, and asked her if she saw it. She said, 'Only a mist, dear!' She then added, 'I am going to sleep now, dear; and if I don't wake again, dear Ellen, please give my love to them all, and say good-bye to them all for me. Tell them I shall meet them in heaven. Tell Ruth to keep close to Jesus.' She then said, 'I think I have said all I need now, dear; good-bye again.'"

This was her last good-bye, and soon all was over. She sank into a sleep from which there is no awaking here.

Tower Hamlets Mission.

By Miss ROSE BENN.

ONCE more I am permitted to come before the kind readers of The Christian, inviting their practical sympathy with the great work of the Tower Hamlets Mission, which forms one of the largest branches of mission labour in London, and the results of which have been so often set before the public by many whose experience has entitled them to speak.

After nearly thirty years' whole-hearted devotion to the uplifting of the fallen and blighted ones of life, we may truly say that Mr. F. N. Charrington is entitled to all the support which this vast undertaking requires. The Great Assembly Hall, Mile End, so well known now at home and abroad for its splendid Gospel services, is open every evening all the year round to the multitudes of wayfarers of every condition who throng the Mile End-road at all seasons of the year. The fine organ vibrating into the street, arrests them, and then attracts them in; while the spacious interior, well lighted and heated, affords a resting place to a weary wanderer who has nowhere else to sit down, except some doorstep from which he or she is told to "move on," and they thus gladly avail themselves of this comfort and shelter, where they are always cordially welcome—there, evening after evening, they come, and there they must of necessity hear prayer and hymns, and some short, practical Gospel addresses.

I well remember noticing the same faces continually returning, and gradually coming into the glorious Light, which has made them new creatures in Christ, a result which must ever attend the faithful preaching of the Word of God, combined with the love which is manifested towards these erring ones, by the active body of working Christians, who, after their own day's toil at their various trades and callings, hours to these services, seeking to save the lost—the giving a hymn book, the kindly word, the hand-clasp, the sympathetic glance, have such power over the outcasts of life, who know they have forfeited all right to it, and whose poor, weary hearts are breaking with the longing for a little love.

Such is but one view of the many which make up the vigorous life-blood in this mission, and we put it first because it is most important, being spiritual and eternal, but it would be incomplete without its companion the philanthropic, which cares for the bodies of these poor people as well as their souls. "Give ye them to eat," was a favourite expression of our Divine Lord and Master, when the needy multitudes were before Him, and so we cannot attempt to eliminate this Divine command from our service amongst them.

It seems a mockery of woe to a poor creature who is faint with hunger to speak to him of the Bread of Life until you have first fed him, and appeased his pangs—then, "afterwards, that which is spiritual;" and I think I may challenge contradiction when I state that there is no organisation which more large-hearted tenderness, towards the destitute than does the Tower Hamlets Mission, and that not indiscriminately, though generously, for the many voluntary workers connected with it, called "Messengers," make it their business to sift the truth of statements made, though a meal on the spot is never refused while proofs are pending. Then rent is often paid, where some poor family has been brought low through accident or illness to the breadwinner, and in this way many have tided over some terrible calamity, which otherwise would have broken up their little home, and landed them in the workhouse.

Not least amongst the special functions for the benefit of the poor is the giving, to as many needy families as funds will permit, provisions for a Christmas dinner at their own homes. This institution Mr. Charrington has now carried on for eighteen years, and a more touching sight than the distribution on Christmas Eve cannot be imagined. The lives of these dear people are so devoid of "treats" of any kind that this particular one is the supreme idea of the family, especially the children, for many weeks before it comes.

But all this needs money, and a very large outlay indeed, if you consider the size of the work, and the fact that those helped may be counted, not in mere hundreds, but in thousands. Will you, then, be God's almoner, and, out of his bounty to yourself, will you lovingly "Send portions to them for whom nothing is prepared?" I believe it is even a duty to cheer Mr. Charrington, whose health has so long been ailing, literally worn out by the crushing weight of this work for nearly thirty years.

Nearly Fifty Years.

By Mr. GEORGE HOLLAND.

THE Lord in his great goodness and mercy has graciously permitted me to spend nearly fifty years among the poorest of our fellow creatures, in connection with the George-yard Ragged Schools and Mission, High-street, Whitechapel, E. During that time, He has sent us many of his people to work for Him—fellow-labourers, servants of Christ.

The children still flock to the Ragged Schools; all are very poor, some are homeless, their parents homeless, too. How sorely do they need our practical Christian sympathy. It is a great privilege to talk to them and tell them of Jesus, once homeless Himself and not having where to lay his head.

What would have become of the very poor if the Lord had not laid the matter upon the hearts of his own people to do something to help such in their time of need? We have to come down to these poverty-stricken ones, and, as far as possible, lift them out of their present position and place them on a higher platform. This only can be done by those who have the love of Christ in their hearts, and who are prepared to be anything, everything, nothing, that good may be done and God glorified in the salvation of precious souls.

After many years of constant labour among the men, women, and children of East London, I have to testify that the Lord has stood by me and the great work He has placed in my hands. He has sent men and women, taught of God, to face and repulsive, to see a great deal that is distressing, to listen to tales of sorrow and suffering, to cheer the disconsolate and bereaved ones, to sympathise with the widows and orphans, and to "comfort all with that comfort wherewith we have been comforted."

The work at George-yard reaches persons of all ages, from the tiny infant in the day nursery—well cared for and snug enough in its little cot, and watched over by tender nurses—to the aged and infirm, who have passed the days of man, and have entered their four score years.

There are nearly forty agencies of a missionary nature in operation for the souls and bodies of the very poor.

The children are fed, as far as possible clothed. They are gathered into classes, services and meetings, where they are talked to and taught about Jesus.

The Lord has, indeed, smiled upon and blessed this work; He has rescued many from destruction; He has raised them up to become messengers of his Gospel to others, telling them of the Lord Jesus Christ, who saved them, makes them safe, and keeps them safe.

There is a blessed and a great work amongst young women and elder girls; many are in the work-rooms and factories where they are employed.

We must not forget the Training Home for chiefly motherless girls. A cheering work has been done and is being done. Girls about fourteen are received and trained for domestic service. Wonderfully has the Lord blessed, prospered, and provided for this portion of his work. Many young people have been placed out in good situations, and are comfortable and happy.

There are the mothers, many of them widows, attending the large meetings specially held for them every week, and where He continues to win precious souls to Himself, and many are growing in grace and in the knowledge of their Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. There is the Mission to Inebriate Women, with its weekly meetings and the soul-loving mission woman going in and out among those given to the debasing sin of drunkenness.

How it has encouraged us to know, when every plan has failed, that in answer to prayer the Lord Himself has taken away the desire for strong drink, homes have been made happy and God glorified.

The Lord has stood by his servants all the way through. He has provided all the means necessary to carry on so great a work. Truly, "hitherto hath the Lord helped us."

We have full confidence in Him that He will continue to provide for his own work, moving the hearts of his own people, his own stewards, to send the necessary supplies for the work. Christ has his place in every portion of the work; He is the base, the centre, the head of everything. "Our expectation is from Him."

"I have not seen a Bible for Sixteen Years."

THIS was said by a poor woman, a navvy's wife, living in a lonely village on the Wiltshire downs, to a colporteur who offered her for sale a fourpenny Testament. It was down a little court in the village, where the colporteur found two or three untidy-looking women standing gossiping. As soon as he produced the Testament all the women left except one, who listened quietly as he spoke of the Word of God and the message of salvation, and then said sadly: "I haven't seen a Bible for sixteen years, not since I was married." She said she would like to have the Testament, but had no money; would he trust her, and she would be sure to pay him next time he came? Seeing that she really wanted it, he said he would give it to her, which he did after marking a few passages for her.

About a month afterwards he again visited the village and called at this woman's house. As soon as she opened the door he could see there was a stranger; her very appearance was altered; she was cleaner and tidier, and with a bright smile she welcomed him and invited him to come in. She then narrated what had taken place since his previous visit; she told him that as she read the Word of God she became more and more convinced of sin, until one night she was so miserable she could not sleep, but lay tossing on her pillow till about midnight, when she seemed to hear a voice saying to her, "Get up and read your Testament." Doubtless it was the Holy Spirit speaking to her heart, but to her it was so real it seemed LIKE A VOICE IN HER EAR.

She arose, lit her candle, sat down and began to read the third chapter of St. John's Gospel.

When she came to the sixteenth verse, she said, she read it over and over again, and it seemed to go through and through her, till kneeling down at her table she poured out her confessions to God, and soon had the joyful knowledge of sin forgiven. She had told her husband, but he was very angry, and had begun to persecute her on account of her "religion," and she asked the colporteur to pray for his conversion. The entrance of God's words had given her light and joy and peace. May the Lord keep her and make her a light to lighten others in that dark village.

There is "a famine in the land...of hearing the words of the Lord" to an extent little thought of by many of God's people. There is an ignorance, a darkness, a spiritual destitution all around us, amongst high and low, rich and poor, even in the most favoured localities, as well as in thousands of country villages and hamlets.

To meet this crying need for the Bread of Life there is no more effective agency than that of the Christian colporteur.

THE CHRISTIAN COLPORTAGE ASSOCIATION has now a staff of 130 colporteurs, who in town and country have circulated 900,000 Bibles and Testaments and fourteen millions of books and magazines, while eleven millions of Gospel tracts have been distributed free. Very great blessing has followed in the winning of souls to Christ, for this is the one great aim ever kept in view.

The committee are earnestly desirous of extending this important work if funds are forthcoming. Full particulars may be obtained from the Secretary, Mr. H. D. Brown, 37, Farringdon-street, London, E.C.

Crippled Dot.

It was early in November, a dark dismal night. The streets, in their foggy blackness, made everyone hasten homeward. I sat in my office, preparing for a quiet evening's work, when I was suddenly interrupted by a knock at the door, and informed that a child was outside begging to see me. I hastened downstairs, and found on the doorstep a poor little deformed girl, about thirteen years of age, who, with a voice that betrayed deep agitation, cried: "Oh, Mr. Groom, do please come and see my mother! Please come at once; she is dying. Make haste." I slipped on boots and overcoat, and taking the poor child's hand went forth, she hurrying me on through the gloom of dreary streets. A few minutes, and we turned into Swan-court—a most wretched place. Even then there were some poor children huddled together on the doorsteps, seeking to get some warmth and shelter. The house we entered was found by my little guide more by instinct than anything else. No need of bell or key, for the door was never fastened; and so, without staying to inquire the cause of the brawling in the lower room of the house, we mounted the reeking stairs and entered the third back. The room was attic-shape, it would have been considered a poor box-room in most houses, but it was Dot's "home." There had been no attempt to tidy the place to prepare in any way for my visit, yet a glance revealed cleanliness and care. Upon the poor trundle-bed that seemed wedged under the sloping roof lay a poor woman, whose look of pain and entreaty awoke at once my warmest sympathy. My little guide sprang to the bedside, and mother and child were clasped sobbing in each other's arms. I stood a moment to take in the whole bearings of the case. It was the old, old story of want in which the mother is worsted. I recognised the suffering woman as one of my flower-sellers, whom I knew both at the street-corner selling flowers as well as at the meeting at one of our branch mission stations. "Crippled Dot" was a scholar in my school; for, seeing her so often with her mother in the streets, I had won her to Sunday-school, and here she had learnt something of love and trust, which led her in this emergency to run to me for help.

FIGHTING AGAINST POVERTY AND MISFORTUNE,

I sent Dot to fetch some necessary food while I lit a fire, and together we prepared a nice tea for the poor mother. The warmth of the fire, the food, and the replenished lamp, gave a better aspect to the room, and I think to the sick woman's sad condition. Upon the mantelpiece stood a large bottle, the label told that it contained medicine from St. Bartholomew's Hospital. But warmth, food, rest, hope, these were the medicines most necessary.

Now I learn the history of the last few hours that so nearly proved fatal to Dot's mother. The morning had been foggy, and for breakfast there was only a piece of dry bread for Dot. Mother could not drink the cold tea made from leaves that had already done duty several times, but had started out cold and hungry to sell her stock of oranges, while Dot, as usual, went off to school, never troubling about dinner, but hoped, when school for the day was over, mother would be home and have tea ready. Being disappointed in this, she had started to find her mother, but at the usual corner she saw a crowd, a policeman, and a woman being carried away, whom she immediately recognised as her mother. She clung to the officer, crying, "Oh, sir, don't! Pray don't! She is my mother! She is good"—thinking, of course, that the policeman was taking her mother to the station.

"All right, my little maid," said the kind officer, "show me where you live, and I will help her home. Poor woman! she is ill."

But while the crowd gazed, the poor woman partly recovered, and begged to be allowed to try and walk, Dot carrying the basket, the stock of oranges having been sadly reduced by the depredation of dishonest boys.

Hardly knowing how she reached her room, she threw herself upon the bed and fainted again, and in alarm Dot ran to me. She had seen my crippled girls in their nice comfortable home; she had heard of the work of my nursing helpers; and this was to poor little Dot

THE VERY HAVEN OF HOPE.

I sat there and noticed the tears in the poor mother's eyes, and as I spoke of the Father of the Fatherless, and of Him who is the husband to the widow, I learnt that there was real loving trust in God, and the poor woman's chief anxiety was for her afflicted child. So, after earnest prayer and a promise to send one of my nursing sisters, I wended my way back to the court—where still the children crouched, waiting for someone to come home—and entering my office, and stirring up the flickering embers, I thought over the privations and sufferings of my poor street-sellers, and breathed an earnest prayer to our loving Father that He would make me more and more a help and blessing to them.

Next evening I went again and found that nurse had been and put the place straight, and seen to the patient, who was now too ill to leave her bed. She was in a state of great excitement and alarm. "Have you seen Dot?" she said; "where can she be? She came home from school, and when I saw her having her tea I dozed off to sleep, and when I awoke she was gone."

The mother's anxiety was most painful to witness, and I could offer no explanation until a thought as an inspiration led me to ask, "Where are your basket and oranges? They are gone too! I'll go and find her. Poor child! she has gone to take her mother's place, and is out trying to sell the oranges."

I found her at the old spot, where she and her mother had often sat, in the full glare of the public-house. To the policeman who sought to send her home she said, "I am minding mother's basket." But alas! her earnest pleading voice to purchase small sour oranges on such a night. The one comfort was ministered by a kind-hearted lad who bought a baked potato of the man at the opposite corner, and gave it to the shivering, hungry, little one. Surely this thoughtful act will not be forgotten by the loving Saviour, for it was food, warmth, and comfort to Crippled Dot. I touched her, and as she turned I saw the tears gathering in her eyes; and as they ran down her cheeks, she said, disappointedly, "I haven't sold one!" I left her stock and basket at Lockhart's coffee palace close by, for the kind-hearted manager—to whom I was known by frequently taking in the flower-women for needful food and cocoa—promised to mind them.

COULD NOT MOVE THE PASSERS-BY

We hurried home, lest the mother's anxiety should prove serious. The child's faith was unconsciously a rebuke to the poor sick mother when she said, "Why, Jesus wouldn't let anyone harm me. You have often told me, 'how the angels watch over God's little children. He knew we wanted food and rent-money, and those oranges must be sold, so I asked Jesus to take care of me, and to send someone to buy them. Why didn't Jesus let me sell those oranges? I asked Him to. But no one looked at them, except the policeman, who told me to go home, and that boy who gave me a nice hot potato."

It was not easy to explain to the child the mystery of prayer unanswered in our way; but when I said that, perhaps, God did not like his little girl to be in the cold, dark street, that He would provide for her in another way, she was comforted, especially when I agreed to buy all the oranges left, and bade her accept it as God's will that she was not to go to the streets again. However sad it was to see this little deformed, stunted mite in the street with the oranges, who could but admire her noble spirit in wanting to take the place of her sick mother, and earn food and fuel and rent? Such a child is WORTHY OF THE BEST HELP.

The days rapidly passed, and Christmas was drawing nigh. The streets brightened under the glare of extra light, the shops decorated, and goods handsomely displayed in prospect of the happy Anniversary Day of Christ's birth. There were the bazaars of toys, dolls, and presents of all kinds; happy children, home for their holidays, busy buying Christmas cards, dressing Christmas trees, and full of joyful anticipation of family greetings and re-unions. Yet in the midst of all this joyful preparation in the wealthiest city in the world, there were courts, alleys, and dark slums where no extra light, hope, or joy penetrated; the same round of struggle, misery, and want; hungry and poorly-clad children, empty cupboards and fireless grates, beds of straw, and visions of half-fed babies, never a hope reaching such that Christmas Day could to them be anything different to other days. Yet such children claim the same country as their native land, members of the same human race, subjects of the same gracious Queen, children of the same Heavenly Father.

So, amid all the surrrounding joy, the days passed in Swan-alley. Dot went to school, Nurse visited and attended the sick woman. The necessaries of life were provided, and my friend, Dr. B——, visited the poor mother, saying, "She is too ill to be removed to the infirmary; she is slowly passing away, and Dot will soon be a double orphan." I promised the mother that a place in my Home for Crippled Orphan Girls should be found for Dot, so that with a mind at peace, and full of trust in God, from street toil and struggle to the golden city of love. We gave her a humble funeral and a quiet resting-place. The few little things she left were distributed among her poor neighbours, and thus ended the home-life at Swan-court of little Crippled Dot.

THE SUFFERER PASSED GENTLY AWAY

Let us now follow Dot to her new home. She has come to live in the Crippled Girls' Home of the Watercress and Flower Girls' Christian Mission; her simple faith and sweet winning manners have won all hearts. She wants to work, and truly there is need to-day for all hands. It is "Christmas," and in such an institution as this, embracing such a wide area, the preparations are very extensive. The large schoolroom is like a meat and vegetable market, with grocery stores combined, for here one thousand families have a liberal Christmas dinner provided for them—1000 4lb. joints of meat, 1000 6lbs. of potatoes, with a parcel of plums, currants, peel, tea, sugar, and flour, and a sixpence in lieu of coals—and Dot's joy is unbounded as she watches these poor widowed mothers from the streets and lanes of the City come in and go away loaded with these good things for those at home on Christmas Day. Then there is the decorating of the Crippled Girls' Home, and the preparing of the dinner for the inmates; and the orphanage, with its 150 resident children with their superintendents and foster-mothers; the Sunday-schools and poor children from the surrounding districts all have to be provided for.

Then bundles have to be made up and tied from the articles sent by loving hearts and hands, woollen scarves, shawls, old boots, dresses, and clothes of all kinds. The slum children are clothed, as well as fed; and from this centre of Christian effort where Dot now lives blessing and truth go forth on every hand.

Such is the work undertaken by the Watercress and Flower Girls' Christian Mission. Your prayers, sympathy, and generous gifts are earnestly entreated, and will be gratefully acknowledged by the secretary, Mr. John A. Groom, 8, Sekforde-street, Clerkenwell, E.C.

Homes for Aged Poor.

The Society is entering on the thirtieth year of its work, the object being to provide aged poor with a quiet and cheerful home rent free for their closing years. There are fourteen homes containing 136 rooms, and inhabited by 170 inmates. Of these homes seven are the property of the charity unencumbered by debt, while the remaining seven are rented on advantageous terms.

The two oldest inmates are both in their ninety-fourth year; one has occupied her room for nineteen years, and will tell with a smiling face that they have been the happiest years in her long life. The other aged inmates ha been seventeen years in residence; if few have attained to their great ages, there are several who can boast of having enjoyed the blessing of a room for as long a period.

It has been found necessary to supplement the slender means of the inmates by providing them with coals during the winter months, and the urgent need at present is money to purchase 136 tons of coal, the quantity necessary for winter use. Surely we shall not ask in vain for help for such an object.

Visitors are welcome to any of the Homes, and an afternoon spent in one of them would do much to excite interest in a charity that does so much at so small a cost.

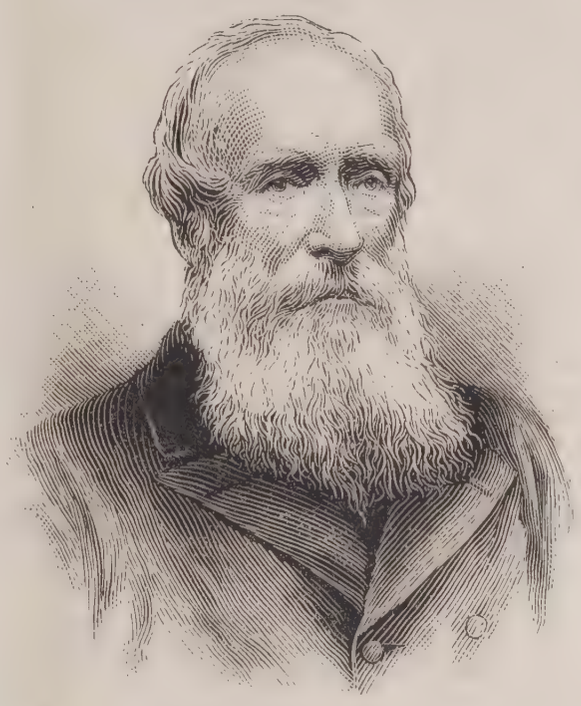
THE LATE

Rev. James Smith, of Delhi.

WHILST spiritual effects in the mission field do not necessarily find in length of service a contributory cause, such a life as that which has lately closed could not have extended over so many years without exerting a great influence. For "James Smith of Delhi" was no ordinary man. His was an individuality potent with force. He had strong convictions, which he held with an iron grip. His physical energies were well-nigh inexhaustible; and above all, and sanctifying all, was conspicuous devotion of spirit.



It was in 1846 that Mr. Smith became connected with the Baptist Missionary Society, having five years previously been an agent of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel. His career in the East began still earlier, for he entered upon his Indian life as a soldier. On a change occurring in his religious views, necessitating retirement from the Propagation Society, he sought fellowship with the Baptist missionaries. The home committee hesitated, according to its wont, to receive an agent from another community, and it was not until 1852 that Mr. Smith actually came as a full missionary upon the staff of the Baptist Missionary Society, in the meantime remaining in association with the Agra Missionary Auxiliary. Whilst an Anglican he was located at Cawnpore, acting mainly as a schoolmaster, but rendering such evangelistic service as his duties permitted.

His first station, under the auspices of the Agra Auxiliary was the ancient city of Muttra, where he continued for about a year. A little before this time a deeply interesting work had originated in a place named Chitoura, twelve miles distant from Agra, where a few of the inhabitants had become Christians. The work spreading, Mr. Smith was sent to preach the Gospel in the surrounding region. Persecution speedily arose, and the converts were threatened with starvation. To meet the difficulty it was resolved to form a Christian village, and land for the purpose was rented. Mr. Smith was put in charge of the experiment. Already he had become strongly convinced of the inadvisability of rendering material support to natives professing Christianity, "Rice Christians" being very far from his ideal Christians. Whilst a refuge was thus found in the settlement for the persecuted converts, it was upon the products of their own labour they were required to subsist. School and evangelistic work were entered into with much zest, and the Christian settlement, sometimes called "The Town of Salvation," quickly increased in numbers.

As time passed on Mr. Smith came clearly to see that, whilst the inculcation of self-support was good, the system of housing converts together and so carefully shielding them from the persecutions of their heathen fellow countrymen, was neither beneficial to the Christians nor helpful to the spread of the Gospel; so that when, in 1855, he came to England he brought with him a decided opinion that the conditions of the Christian village were not favourable to the production of a strong and healthy spiritual manhood. The terrible Mutiny which broke out shortly afterwards made short work of the Chitoura settlement scheme, for the village was completely swept away, the converts being either martyred or scattered abroad.

On his return Mr. Smith was appointed to the important city of Delhi, which city was to become the scene of his labours for twenty-five years. Delhi had previously been the centre of successful missionary operations, but such had been the devastation wrought by the rebellion that scarcely a single Christian was to be found within the city. The zeal with which he devoted himself to street preaching was most exemplary. When he was tired out and could preach no longer, the people, as he said, would stop him from moving off, so that they might hear still more of what he had to tell them; and it was no uncommon thing for him to be asked to preach two or three times as he walked down the principal street, and hardly a day passed without several coming to his home seeking for conversation and instruction.

A great feature in Mr. Smith's Gospel preaching was his basti meetings—gatherings in the compounds, the yards of the homes of the poor. These were usually held at sunset when the day's work was over; sometimes as many as 200 would congregate, and it was estimated that no less than 2000 of the people every week regularly heard the words of eternal life. Mr. Smith's labours were by no means confined to the city of Delhi itself. He journeyed much into the surrounding villages, in not a few of which much precious fruit was ingathered, as the result churches being formed and schools established.

In 1884, his health failing, it was thought the time for retirement had come, and Mr. Smith returned to this country with the intention of spending his last days in the homeland; but he soon found that to him home was much more in India than in England, and, restless to be once more engaged in his much loved work amongst the heathen, he set sail again in 1887 to render service, as his strength might allow, in Simla and in the contiguous mission field of Kharar and Kalka, the scene of the labours of that devoted missionary the late Rev. Goolgar Shah, and where his son, Rev. George Anstie Smith, is now stationed. On his way thither he found himself once more in "dear old Delhi." He felt that the welcome he received was worth more than all his journey from London, all sections of the community appearing glad at his return. To show how the work had multiplied since the time he first entered the station—a scene of desolation—we cannot do better than quote his own words of astonishment and praise:—

"What a multiplicity of agencies," he exclaimed, "are in work in Delhi; the Zenâne Mission is carrying on a wonderful series of labours. Zenâne visiting, large girls' boarding school, Purdah women's school, Churmarni girls' school, village schools, widows' home, dispensary for women and medical work outside. The ladies and native helpers are a complete hive of working bees, scattering honey through hundreds of homes. Then the bazaar preaching, Basti meetings and schools, the various Sabbath services and church work, boarding schools for boys of Christians, and the Theological Institution and Normal School, preparing a noble Christian agency for church and evangelistic work in the future.

This notice would be sadly incomplete if it failed to refer to the zealous attempts this distinguished missionary put forth to establish a self-supporting native agency. Upon this problem—still one of the most pressing, but most difficult, with which missionary societies have to deal—Mr. Smith bestowed constant thought and energy. We have already recorded his views as to converts being thrown upon their own resources; his convictions were equally strong as to the importance of native churches propagating the Gospel without reliance upon foreign funds. But Mr. Smith found, as others have found, that the conditions — the great poverty of the people, the wants of missionary comity, the disadvantages inherited from a system which in the first instance should have been avoided—all these conditions powerfully militated against the realisation of his ideal. The problem as yet remains unsolved; at any rate, an independent, self-supporting native agency throughout the Indian Mission Field is still in the future.

The esteem in which Mr. Smith was held in Delhi is shown in his appointment to the position of vice-chairman of the municipality, a post, honorary in its character, which undoubtedly gave him an influence, but which influence he ever made subservient to his life work. The Botanical Gardens of the city, of which he was the conservator, have been largely indebted to his knowledge of horticulture.

The last part of his career, as already intimated, was passed in Simla, where in "labours abundant" he continued to find scope for his extraordinary energy. Though approaching eighty-two years of age he died in full harness, his death occurring on November 16 in his "dear old Delhi," whither we understand he had gone to perform the marriage ceremony of his son, Rev. George Anstie Smith. His widow, in whom he has ever found a most devoted helpmeet, has been one of the most prominent lady missionaries in promoting mission work in the Zenanas of the Indian women.

Soho Mission.—A most interesting meeting in commemoration of the jubilee of the mission work in connection with Bloomsbury Chapel was recently held at the Mission Hall, Meard-street, Rev. B. J. Gibbon presiding. Mr. Munn gave an interesting account of the work being done at the present time. Rev. W. Harrison gave an account of past endeavours in the neighbourhood, and other friends spoke.

Little Sufferers.

THE "BRIDGE OF HOPE."

ONCE more the pressure of winter and its special needs is upon us, and we seek the of our friends to carry us through these dreary months in this parish, which could scarcely be equalled for its dead level of grinding poverty.

All through the year we have had a constant stream of applications, each of which has had to be most carefully considered, because out of so large a number only the saddest and most needy cases could be received. Those who have had experience in such work—and those alone—can fully realise the painful difficulty of selection when of sad necessity so many must be refused.

As I look into the faces of the young girls in the Refuge—and they are all so very, very young—I think what a world of pity lies even in the fact of the friendlessness, and consequent loneliness, of nearly every girl. A very small proportion of them have some kind of apology for a home, but even those few might be better if they had none. But the larger number would be absolutely adrift on the streets of London but for the shelter given them here, or in some other Home. Most of them are rough and wild naturally, as the result of the life they have lived, but in many of the young hearts there is a desire after good, which is visible in their every-day conduct. There are some who are happy in the consciousness "that old things are passed away," and they are walking truly "in newness of life," and striving to lead others to Christ.

I think that no previous year has brought so vast a number of applications for vacancies in the cottage training homes, and certainly, as a whole, the cases have been more painfully sad. That little children should would often seem incredible were we not able to verify the stories. One of the most recent cases is extremely pathetic. The child is eleven years of age, and, losing her mother eight years ago, was left in the father's sole charge.

As the child grew older she would often creep from her wretched bed when the public-houses were closing, and seek her drunken father to get him safely home. She was often without food, and scarcely had any clothing, whilst she was a stranger to the luxury of boots and stockings. At last the father confided his child to a woman whose character was congenial to his own, and M.'s fate was worse than ever. Every article of furniture in the wretched room was sold, and even the Bible which had belonged to the child's mother (who was a good woman) was sold for twopence, and the money spent in drink.

Happily an aged grandmother heard of the pass to which things had come, and by some means she secured the child, although not knowing how to support her. Her only daughter is middle-aged, suffering from spinal complaint, and quite unable to earn anything. They are very respectable people, but on the death of her mother this poor invalid will have only a mere pittance to live on. Out of their poverty these women were willing to sacrifice something to and place her under Christian care. Needless to say, after verifying the story, we received the child.

A very large percentage of my Training Home children have spent their childhood as sadly, and often under still worse conditions, than little M., whose story I have given. It is that many more such children may be rescued I ask for generous help.

We rejoice in the generosity of our country when a cry for help comes from afar, and we pray that the cry of the little ones at our very doors may not go unheeded, whilst those in the far East and West are being cared for. "This ought we to do, and not to leave the other undone." There are few countries to-day that could produce a sadder or more shameful sight than some of our own little London children, and it is to our own peril if, seeing them in their distress, we pass by on the other side, forgetting at this season that they are representatives of Him who came to bring "peace and goodwill."

Life's Eventide.

AGED PILGRIMS' FRIEND SOCIETY.

THE late Earl of Shaftesbury, whose name will long be a household word in the homes of England, said, when presiding over a meeting of the Aged Pilgrims' Friend Society, "This institution, apart from the benefit and relief it gives, is a great moral institution, and is set to create in men's hearts and minds a feeling of reverence, which is necessary in things moral, political, and religious. Old people are apt to be regarded as burdens, whereas it should be a joy and a privilege to minister to them. For this reason I specially commend the charity to young people."

It is recorded of that noble man William Wilberforce, the friend of the slaves, and a vice-president of this Society, that he would subject himself to all sorts of inconvenience in order to carry a ray of gladness from the social circle into the sick man's cottage, or to temper with his own diffusive gladness the bitter cup of some humble believer.

Such is the spirit the Aged Pilgrims' Friend Society seeks to cherish. Personal visitation is a leading feature in its work; the pensions in London and Brighton are paid monthly, in the homes of the recipients, by the committee and lady visitors, and throughout the country the services of Christian friends are enlisted, wherever possible, to distribute the pensions in the same way. A living sympathy is thus the tie that binds the Society and its pensioners together, and formality is excluded.

For ninety-two years this work has been carried on, life pensions of five, seven, and ten guineas per annum having been granted to upwards of and a total sum expended amongst them of more than £200,000.

At the present time 1500 pensioners are upon the books, and more than £10,500 per annum are expended in pensions alone. In the four Homes 180 of the recipients have peaceful dwellings in life's eventide. The total needs of the institution require a daily sum of £36 to supply them, and to meet this the ordinary income is inadequate.

All the pensioners are over sixty years of age; 1073 are upwards of seventy, and of this number 328 are above eighty, and nineteen more than ninety. The oldest pensioner entered upon her 100th year in January, and, except that she suffers from deafness, is in full possession of her faculties. Some of the recipients have long been bedridden; others are sadly crippled, and all, but for the regular and permanent help given, would be sorely tried as to ways and means.

One pensioner was for thirty years a Bible-woman in Bethnal Green; another, aged seventy, is an industrious Christian man, but his little business has decayed, and he has a blind wife and imbecile son dependent upon him. Many a humble little home is thus maintained, many a sad heart is cheered, and from many a family is lifted a load of anxiety as to the future welfare of an aged parent. A pensioner in Essex writes: "I cannot be thankful enough to the Lord for making me a pensioner, and for providing for me now I cannot work. I have been enabled to keep on a cottage home twenty-five years, and must have given it up long ago but for your benevolent institution."

The nomination of candidates is by qualified subscribers, and careful inquiry is made by the committee into the suitability of those so recommended. Kindly discrimination is used in selecting those only whose need, age, and discipleship entitle them to the help of the Society, the undenominational character of which is a distinguishing mark of its work.

A heavily afflicted pensioner in Kent writes: "If those who have the heart and means to subscribe to your Society could fully realise how much their generosity is appreciated by the recipients, and how it helps to ease their troubled minds respecting temporal matters, they would be amply repaid for all they do."

Contributions towards a work which must commend itself to all the Lord's stewards will be thankfully received by the Secretary, Mr. J. E. Hazelton, at the office, 83, Finsbury-pavement, E.C.

Sheltering Homes, Liverpool.

THE winter is now upon us with its usual inclement weather, causing an increased bitterness in the cry for help, for shelter, for food.

The three branches of our winter's work are being actively carried on.

First.—The 240 old widows meet weekly to sew, for which they receive sixpence and a meat meal. Some friend gives a bright, cheering address, to lift their sad and burdened hearts upwards. How little we realise what a sad and lonely lot is theirs, struggling to support life and pay rent out of the 2s. 6d. a week allowed by the parish!

Second, and main work.—Receiving into our Shelter such needy little ones as the following:—

Will H——, a very neglected lad of eleven, whose father was one of the victims of the sea, which claims such a heavy toll from Liverpool. The mother is in ill-health, and while she is struggling to do a day's work Will plays truant from school and gets among rough, bad boys, who knock him about. His head has been all cut with stones.

Harry T——, another seaman's orphan. Mother was left with six children to bring up, and has become crippled by rheumatic gout. She feared Harry would get into mischief, as she is too invalided to look after him.

Agnes ——, an orphan, aged 12; has been cruelly ill-used by relatives, one of whom has been sentenced to three months in gaol. Agnes seems a bright girl, on the point of being driven into an evil life by cruel treatment; but we hope she is rescued in time.

The sheltering home, by its method of emigration, gives these children a radical change of surroundings, of climate, of occupation, of mental exercise, and of spiritual motive, and so their development is stimulated all round.

They give their own testimony that the change has been exceedingly to their advantage.

LETTERS FROM CANADA.

"I hope you will excuse me for not answering your kind note sooner. The minister here is starting a Sunday school, and they have appointed me secretary. I do not know how I will suit, but with God's help I will do my best to satisfy them. If all goes well with me, I intend to try for something a little different from farming. I am going to work my way through college next of all, if possible. The minister here is going to see me through, which is very kind indeed. I thank you very much for helping me out to this favourable land.—Yours truly, JAMES W."

An older lad writes:—

"I am quite ashamed of myself not writing to you before this. I am doing very well indeed. I go out by the day here, and they give me all meals and one dollar a day. I find the Canadian people are so friendly and sociable to strangers. I have never as yet even thought of being sorry at leaving England."

Many little ones from four to eight years of age have been adopted and tenderly cared for, giving as much happiness as they receive from their kind foster-parents.

Our third branch of effort is to give 5000 poor children a Christmas dinner in remembrance of our Saviour's birth as a poor and humble child. Any contributions to help in this service among the poor of our great seaport will be gratefully welcomed by (MRS.) LOUISA BIRT.

Friendless and Fallen.

YOUNG WOMEN AND GIRLS.

MAY I ask the reader to kindly accompany me in imagination into the matron's room at the Home in Euston-road. A most respectable but greatly distressed man and his wife have come in answer to a letter about their missing daughter. They had made every enquiry through the police and in other ways, but failed to trace her for a fortnight. The parents are members of a Christian church, and the father is the conductor of a Bible class, an open-air preacher, and an earnest worker in other directions also. Their daughter had acted most unwisely, and had added to her folly by not returning home, where she would have been at once forgiven. Within a few days she heard of the Home in Euston-road, and, with an invented story of friendlessness, she sought admission. The story was not believed, but there being an apparent need for prompt succour, it was given pending enquiries, which resulted in tracing out her sorrow-stricken parents, who immediately came for her. The interview was painfully touching, and when they took away their erring daughter (who wept bitterly when she realised the anxiety she had caused), the father said he and his wife had been praying for her ever since she left home, and he was sure she had been safely

RESTORED TO THEM IN ANSWER TO PRAYER.

I will now ask the reader to visit with me (also in imagination) one of the branch homes at Fulham, and see a very different character. She is a young woman belonging to a northern town. Many years ago she had the misfortune to lose her mother. The father married again and emigrated; but, owing to the misconduct of his wife, a separation followed, and the stepmother returned to England with this girl. The woman commenced to live an openly wicked life, and the girl grew up to be a witness to scenes of the grossest wickedness, and herself fell into evil ways. She was admitted to the home, but her outbursts of craving for drink were terrible to see.

Again and again she begged to leave the home, but the kind and judicious matron succeeded in calming the poor creature, who would then, with tears, express her thanks for the forbearance shown to her. She, however, recently left the home in spite of all entreaty, but has since been heard of and is now in another shelter, where it is hoped she may even yet do well.

Yet once more. Some months ago a man was charged on warrant at a provincial police-court with assaulting and threatening his wife. The woman stated that for several days in succession her husband came home more or less intoxicated, abused her, threatened her, and attempted to strike her. She was in fear of him, and said her daughter was outside but afraid to give evidence against her father, who had beaten her. The Chief Constable also said there had been other convictions against the man.

A lady residing in the town interested herself on behalf of the daughter, and when applying for her admission remarked that the mother was no better than the father himself.

AGED JUST OVER FOURTEEN,

There would be no difficulty in multiplying such incidents as the above; but oh! if Christian men and women could be brought to realise the painful necessity there is for prompt and judicious succour in such cases, there would not be lack of means, as is now so often the case, to maintain the Homes which afford them protection and a means of reclamation.

Upwards of 800 applications are received every year at 200, Euston-road, N.W., and five Homes, besides a Refuge, which is kept open all night, are dependent upon the voluntary gifts of the Lord's stewards. The large family of 180 young women and girls have to be provided for every day throughout the year. The Homes are all conducted on distinctly Christian and industrial principles. The primary object sought is the salvation of all who are admitted, and upwards of 170 voluntary workers (very many of whom are ladies) are engaged in this most important evangelising effort.

During the autumn (which this year was exceptionally protracted) the daily cost of maintenance is nearly double that of the income. Supporters are away seeking rest and recreation, and the Homes, for the time being, are forgotten, which accentuates the urgency of the need of immediate help. The Superintendent is Mr. William J. Taylor, 200, Euston-road, London, N.W.

The Christian Community.

THE twenty-sixth annual report is full of interest. God's blessing has rested on every branch of the operations, and the readiness and the willingness of the people to receive the Word of Truth has been most marked. In former times opposition was frequent, and almost violent, but now it is rare to meet with the least resentment from the people, even amongst the lowest and most degraded met with in the open-air, common lodging-houses, or anywhere else. Some idea of the general work may be gathered from brief extracts from the report:—

"As an undenominational body we do not form churches, and thus have imperfect means for obtaining the number of conversions and other results, yet, by the deep interest many take, their regular attendance, and the assistance they give in the work, we feel sure the Lord is blessing the effort. The Bible class for men on Sunday afternoons, conducted by one of our experienced members, has been continued with much encouragement. The various meetings for prayer have been continued with much success.

"The work amongst the children has also been carried on with vigour and regularity. The Sabbath School and Children's Service have been kept up; also the Bands of Hope and Mercy have been well sustained. For the benefit of the members, lectures and addresses have been given, at which interesting subjects have been discussed, and profitable seasons spent. Tract distribution and open-air services have been carried on in each of the districts.

"We now pass on to the infirmaries, workhouses, and casual wards. The work has been continued in about twenty of these establishments, where possibly 15,000 poor people of all grades are located, to whom, under the sanction of several Boards of Guardians, we have free access. The work is done mostly on the Sabbath Day, but in a few houses, on week days also. To meet this work about every week. Both men and lady visitors are freely allowed, and the latter do invaluable service with the female inmates, especially with certain classes, who temporarily resort to the workhouse in time of trouble.

"The work in the lodging-houses has been continued in Spitalfields, Borough, Hackney, Stoke Newington, Notting Hill, and at Hastings, where one of our members has been resident for some years. He has gathered a band of workers who render assistance, and on on a small scale, a good and necessary work has been accomplished, with many evidences that sinners have been saved. Generally the order is as perfect and the attention as close as it could be in a church or chapel, as the people have become so accustomed to the service, that it most exceptional to have the least disturbance, or to hear objections from anyone. Several of the houses are for men only, and accommodate from 200 to 400 lodgers. These houses are of recent construction, and fitted up with every sanitary and other modern convenience, an improvement which has contributed to the benefit of the men, both morally and physically.

"Labouring, as we do, amongst the poor and destitute classes, belonging to no particular body of Christians, they naturally look to us for help in all times of necessity, for that is indeed true which is written, 'The poor ye have always with you.' Without doubt, is a great help in securing attention to the Gospel, which alone can elevate and save them; and herein we verify the affirmation of the Master when He said: 'To the poor the Gospel is preached.' By means of the help we give, thousands are led to hear the Gospel who would not do so without it.

RELIEF TO THE REALLY POOR

"In giving this relief great care is taken to ensure that the recipients are really in need, and that help will be a step towards their betterment. The members engaged in this work are men and women of experience, who can pretty accurately judge who are deserving, and we believe that upon the whole they are not often deceived. Still, it will readily be understood that in giving free meals and other temporary relief, we of necessity give to many poor creatures, who are starving and utterly destitute, on the ground of humanity alone, and not on their deserts, and we fully believe that such help often saves them from starvation, if not from suicide.

"During the winter and spring months widows and aged persons are employed in plain needlework three afternoons per week, under an experienced lady superintendent. They work in a warm, airy room, are paid 6d. each afternoon, and have tea provided for them. Many ladies purchase the articles made, and have testified to the excellence of the work. To say that it is a great boon to many poor women battling hard to earn a scanty living, and keep out of the 'house,' is to say far less than the results of the agency would justify. They are benefited in keeping their independence, and not being pauperised. Moreover, it has proved a good training to many in needlework, not only for home purposes but as enabling them to secure work elsewhere.

Other benevolent operations include free breakfasts and teas, a night refuge, and a holiday home. The persons who have benefited make a large total in figures. These include innocent children and fallen women, men and women in distress, young people in moral danger, and all and sundry, young and old, who are astray from God and untouched by other Christian organisations."

Sir George Williams is president of the work, and Mr. F. A. Bevan, treasurer. Communications may be addressed to the secretary, Mr. James Atkinson, Memorial Hall, London-street, Bethnal Green, E.

The Rescue Society.

THE misery of the life of sin is strikingly seen in the fact that out of twenty-seven young women at present inmates of one of the homes of this society four have been charged with attempted suicide, one having been before the magistrates for three different attempts. All are now doing well, and it is hoped that the lovingkindness shown to them in the home will, with God's blessing, be the means of leading them to see not merely the folly but the sin of their past life.

The maternity work is most encouraging, and the gratitude of those helped specially cheering. One poor, betrayed, and deserted girl sought the secretary's help in a painfully distressed state of mind; her lover had proved false, and there seemed no prospect but the workhouse before her. The man was seen and urged to act honourably; he promised to help, and a few days since called to tell the secretary he had resolved to marry her. The legal notice has been given, the poor girl's fears have been relieved, and as soon as possible she will, it is hoped, be a happy wife.

The spiritual work amongst the girls calls forth much thanksgiving to God, at one home especially so. One young woman, disowned by her relatives on account of her fall, has now been reconciled, and recently returned to her home in Scotland, to witness to her friends, as she said, of the Saviour she had found, and to tell what great things He has done for her.

The often exhausted treasury, and the confidence of the workers that in due time the need will be supplied, proclaim it to be truly a work of faith, and as such calls for the prayerful and practical sympathy of all who care for the outcast, the friendless, and sinful girls. The secretary is Mr. C. Stuart Thorpe, 79, Finsbury-pavement, E.C.

Country Towns Mission.

THIS Society reports encouragement in its operations in several villages. At a village in Hertfordshire God has been manifestly working, several having recently professed conversion. The secretary also found good work going on in villages in Kent, particularly amongst men. From Monmouthshire a missionary has sent some most interesting accounts of visits paid to villages in the vicinity of the town where he is stationed.

A new village station was recently opened in Essex, and a missionary has just been appointed to a large district in Hertfordshire. Both of these places promise much useful work.

The sixty-first annual report may be had on application to the secretary, Mr. G. H. Mawer, 18, New Bridge-street, E.C.

A Visit to Broadmoor.

By Mr. CHAS. COOK.

BY permission of the authorities I recently visited Broadmoor Criminal Asylum, and must confess I was not a little surprised at what I saw. Beautifully situated in a lovely stretch of country, the building is one-eighth of a mile in circumference, standing in its own grounds and gardens of many hundreds of acres, some seventy-four having been lately added.

I was received by the gentleman in charge, who recognised me as having visited Woking Convict Prison with the Baroness Wrede when he was the Governor there, some seven years ago.

I soon found that Broadmoor was not a prison. "No," said my conductor, "there is no punishment here. If the patients are to be punished it is the judge or the jury who should do it, not I."

"Is there any work done?" I asked.

"No task is set; but there are some of the patients who work, and they are paid artisans' wages. We take seven-eighths, and the rest is allowed them to do what they like with."

Passing through a workshop a little later I saw a number of men employed at tailoring and shoe-making, and all seemed happy and comfortable. Some wore the army-grey clothes, but others were dressed in ordinary clothes belonging to themselves, and wore watches and chains, and were not prohibited from smoking. Several well-known persons were in this room, especially one London burglar.

The living-rooms seemed built on the family plan—large, airy, well-ventilated apartments, with chess, draughts, magazines, and daily papers; while, for food, a liberal diet is provided.

There are at present 647 persons domiciled here, and the majority of them have a small room to themselves to sleep in, and are under supervision night and day; but there are others who can be fully trusted, who sleep in dormitories which accommodate about eight or ten, besides those few who are in the infirmary.

There is one attendant to every six patients, and, seeing that every convict in our prisons costs £40 annually, it is a wonder that the annual cost of a patient at Broadmoor is only £42. I believe this is accounted for by the administrative abilities of the gentleman at the head, Dr. Brain, and also from the fact that those who are able are allowed to keep themselves, while many earn more than is needed to pay for their board and lodging.

The inmates are allowed to have three hours' recreation in the MAGNIFICENT GROUNDS AND GARDENS.

Each man has a small plot of ground, on which he may cultivate flowers or grow vegetables (I think a merciful provision), and they all take great delight in showing what they have produced. We strolled into the gardens just as the men were returning indoors. In the summer they are allowed out about five hours.

Passing by us came a wondrous variety of beings, "all sorts and conditions of men," and whose names it were not politic nor kind to mention; but man t appeared, to those of us who know nothing o them, quite sane, though the public at large may take it on the authority of one of the brainiest, shrewdest, and yet withal, one of the kindest of men, that men and women who are sent to Broadmoor are persons who are certainly and assuredly mad.

Some certainly are "as mad as a March hare," as evidenced by their application to me to "get them out." The strangest things were said and done. One man said to me, "If you know anyone up in London that wants a coachman you might think of me; I've drove Mr. Chaplin's horses and been whipper-in' to John Day, and there is no finer coachman in any stables than me."

Another man who, must certainly have recognised me, addressed me in German and said, "You know Dr. Badaeker?"

The great bulk of the inmates are "detained during Her Majesty's pleasure"; but besides these, there are some forty convicts who have become insane during the term of their sentence—not necessarily by reason of their imprisonment—for by reason of their vicious lives and orgies, it is more than likely they would have become lunatics before they did had they remained at liberty. These are perhaps the most difficult cases to deal with. They are in a great measure domiciled by themselves.

On an average about ten are discharged annually to the supervision of their friends, who have to report regularly, and if signs are evident, or they take to drink, they are liable to be detained again. On inquiring if they are well-behaved, I was told that as a rule they were, it was the exception if otherwise.

"What would you do if a PATIENT WERE TO ASSAULT ANOTHER?"

"Put him to bed and keep him there; he would be safe, and he would lose his tobacco."

Evidently this is sufficient, as witnessed by these 600 inmates being housed together, and ruled by a firm but beneficent hand.

"This is our recreation room," and I was ushered into a large hall with a stage at one end, "and there is our programme of last Saturday."

I looked at the bill and wondered what next was coming! and when we had left the theatre and the male asylum, and had entered the altogether separate asylum for the females, the director showed me the recreation room of the females (also having its stage), and then we went into the music-room, where stood a splendid "grand" piano.

I may add in closing that there is a measure of division among the patients as far as possible into three classes, taking into consideration their mental and social positions.

I feel sure the reader will be thinking that this surely looks like pampering our criminals, and putting a premium on crime; but if these people be our brothers and sisters bereft of reason, and who are irresponsible, would you treat as criminals men who should be considered as patients? Treat them as animals, deal with them as brutes, and you would find they would break from the restraint, and become unmanageable, but under humane and considerate treatment you have the above result. I would add that here and there the name of Jesus was stuck on the walls of the little rooms, whilst one was working the blessed name upon a Christmas decoration. I believe the Lord has his own even here. Shall we not pray for these 600? I could write more, in which pathos and pity were blended, but time and space hinder.

Ragged School Union.

DEAR SIR,—Would you again grant me the hospitality of your columns, that I may say a word at this gracious gift-giving season on the great home mission work that is carried on in the metropolis by our Ragged Schools? These schools in all number 155, and they are manned by five thousand devoted voluntary teachers, who, week by week, all the year round, teach the children the Gospel of our Lord Jesus.

Of course the schools are not self-supporting; they are maintained wholly by free-will offerings. To each according to its need the funds are apportioned, which are sent to the council's care for this purpose. Benevolence at this season is imperative. When the children of the out-'o-work and of the widow come to their class hungry, they cannot be sent hungry away. If they are ill-shod, they may get shoes and stockings, and a warm garment to a little child makes glad many a poor mother's heart. Already we are receiving well-chosen consignments, but not enough. There are so many little ones that are bare and ragged.

Then there are the cripple children—5000 of them—a formidable undertaking, but one to which "No" could not be said. Many of them are prisoners for life. As far as possible all of them are being visited periodically. They receive help to obtain surgical appliances, crutches, etc., and the aggregate expenditure mounts up. They have, it is found, an unfailing thirst for toys, picture-books, and dolls, and a mail-cart is sometimes a blessing greatly desired. Already we have two holiday homes for their use, which we keep going all the winter.

Gifts in cash and kind, to keep all this machinery going, will be warmly welcomed, by yours most sincerely, John Kirk, Secretary.

Sunday Afternoon Visitors.

WILL you kindly allow me to tell your readers some of the tragedies revealed to me by the visitors of a recent Sunday, together with a way of helping to lessen some of the burdens of life for these disheartened ones?

A decent man came to see me whose wife is so hopeless a drunkard that she not only spent on drink the money her husband gave her for food and fuel, but pawned the very boots and clothes her children were wearing, until at last she drank herself into the infirmary. The poor man—home, furniture, clothing, all gone—was in despair. Happily a home was provided for his child, and probably also for the baby, so that he need not lose his work.

In another similar case the wretched mother has been sent to gaol and her poor little child has also come to the Cottage Home, with the saddest wee face I ever saw. Not a smile or word have we yet won from the child, so terrified had she been at home.

Another visitor told me how her husband had deserted her, leaving her penniless and homeless. For several nights she slept in doorways and passages, and finally her baby was born in the street. She has now recovered, and is giving great satisfaction in a situation, her infant and another little child having come into the Home. Help was wanted in the case of a man who has had a long illness as the result of an accident; his young wife bravely took a situation while he was hospital to save herself from the workhouse, the Home taking their little baby five months old, until the father's recovery.

But I cannot mention even half the tales of that one Sunday without wearying your readers. I should like, however, to point out that in every case the applicants were only anxious for work—they were not beggars—and a timely helping hand saved all from drifting into a workhouse life. The Home I have spoken of is open to children, however young, whose parents are striving to work honestly, and we now have some forty-five little ones, from a few weeks to seven years old, under our care. The parents when earning are expected to contribute towards their children's support. Our funds are exhausted, and we have nothing with which to meet the winter's expenses.

Rosa M. Barrett, Hon. Sec.,

Soldiers' Home, Winchester.

A MEETING was recently held in Eccleston Hall, to hear from Miss Perks an account of the Lord's work at this Home and on the troopships. She told of blessing at home and on the field, how outgoing ships were boarded, and loving Christian sympathy shown to the men when hearts are tender with recent partings. Home-coming vessels are met, often bringing sick and wounded men, who are only too glad to hear of the Saviour. Men in hospital are visited and cheered.

Winchester being a military depôt, young fellows came to the Home direct from their own homes; a cup of tea and a kind word often turn the whole future life. Correspondence is kept up with many as they move onward to foreign service, and right through their military career, and not a few time-expired men are among the overflowing crowds attending the services at the Home, making further extension of the work absolutely necessary. Letters were read from soldiers who had been blessed through The Bugle Call, a paper for all interested in soldiers.

One of the chief features of the meeting was that soldiers from the Soudan were present to speak of the many Christian men who had been in the late war, and how the literature had been prized when sent to the front. These men had held meetings among their comrades, with a few candles stuck in the desert sand. Other men, representing home regiments, also bore testimony to the value of Soldiers' Homes.

Miss Perks asked for £200 from the meeting and from friends who wish the soldiers to be saved, that this good work may still proceed.

William Luff.

A Military Convention.

RED coats were much in evidence at Exeter Hall on Wednesday of last week. It was, perhaps, rather misleading to call the day's proceedings a "Military" convention, though it was largely a convention of military men. It was, in fact, the annual gathering of the members of the Soldiers' Christian Association, which for some years past has been an affiliated branch of the Y.M.C.A. The first conference was held in a humble way at Portsmouth; the second was at Aldershot; the following three have been held at Exeter Hall, with a growing attendance and interest on each occasion. The secretary of the S.C.A. is Mr. Wheeler. Since the reorganisation of the work about five years ago there have been 275 branches formed and over 3000 members enrolled. The work has spread through the Mediterranean garrisons, North and South Africa, and the West Indies, and there have been most encouraging results.

Last week's conference began with two meetings for prayer and praise. Besides the earnest devotional exercises, there were warm personal testimonies from members of the Association, and a stirring address on the second coming of our Lord by Rev. F. Webster.

A large number of officers, non-commissioned officers, and privates, lady superintendents of Soldiers' Homes, and Army Scripture readers, with a good sprinkling of interested civilians, accepted Sir George Williams's invitation to lunch at midday. Sir George presided, and at the close of lunch very heartily welcomed the Army friends to the headquarters of the Y.M.C.A. Then followed brief, but gratifying, reports on different branches of Army Christian work. Major Granville Smith told of the operations of the Army and Navy Missionary Union, which seeks to enlist the personal interest of members of the two forces on behalf of missionary effort in foreign lands. He appealed to all Christian soldiers to help on such work by prayerful sympathy and all possible co-operation. The well-known and long established labours of the Army Scripture readers was testified to by Colonel Robinson. He, too, urged extension, and said that every regiment ought to have a reader permanently attached to it; four regiments have already taken this step.

A most happily expressed and encouraging account of recent tent work at various centres where military manœuvres are carried on was given by Rev. R. Oliver Deane, who is clearly an Army chaplain of the right stamp. There seems to be here a well-nigh limitless field for evangelistic and social work among the men in camp, and we trust that Mr. Deane's earnest plea for more prayer and co-operation will be generally responded to by all who can effectively help. The afternoon reports were concluded by an address from Mr. W. B. Harington, who struck jubilant notes of praise for progress made in recent years, not only in the work for soldiers at home, but for decided work of revival in regiments stationed in India.

Under the presidency of General Lord Chelmsford, a well-attended conference was thereafter held, the special topic being "the purposes and aims of the S.C.A." At the outset of the proceedings the noble chairman gave his cordial benediction to the work of the Association, and also warned his fellow soldiers against the dangers arising from spiritual pride and any assumption of superiority over their comrades because of their Christian profession. They would be targets for much keen-eyed criticism, and they ought in all humility and love to adorn their calling by a consistent life.

Captain T. M. Riley, of the Rifle Depôt, was the first conference speaker, and he touched on many important points, such as the necessity of being thoroughly unsectarian, of cultivating a holy and unblemished life, of being out and out for Christ, of self admonishment, and of a prayerful, rather than a critical, attitude towards unsaved comrades.

Some further practical words came from Mr. J. H. Putterill, who cited the aims and methods of the parent Y.M.C.A. as worthy of adoption by the soldier friends in work among their fellows. These might be shy of the "professional" chaplain or Scripture reader, but they could not get away from the living epistle of a consistent daily walk and conversation of a comrade—on parade and in the barrack room. He extolled the power of little unobtrusive acts of kindness, done at some self-sacrifice, as a potent instrument for commending their message to others.

Some interesting reports of progress from regimental workers concluded the session of the afternoon conference.

At a largely-attended and hearty meeting in the evening there were no fewer than twelve speeches. Several of these were in the form of testimonies from regimental delegates as to live Gospel work going on. Captain Wisely had a most refreshing story to tell of evangelistic effort promoted at Ladysmith, Natal, by Colonel Owen Hay, the commander of the troops at that South African station. The people had at one time feared the advent of the soldiers, but these red coats, under Colonel Hay's influence, are becoming evangelists to the district. Captain Tapp, lately returned from the West Indies, reported good work going on among the troops in the island of St. Lucia. Mr. W. R. Lane gave a weighty address to his military brethren. A happy feature about the whole day's proceedings was the fraternal spirit manifested towards the rank and file by the younger officers. Clearly the S.C.A. is doing a real and progressive work, and one that deserves every encouragement.

West London Mission.

CHRISTMAS is close upon us once more, and I want to appeal to your readers to put it in our power to give a little happiness to the poor dwellers in the slums of West London.

The shops in Oxford-street and Regent-street are now gorgeous with their Christmas display, but within a stone's throw of all this brilliance and luxury there are homes where patient toilers live in utter poverty.

One woman, well known to one of our Sisters, is living in one room with five children. The youngest is one month old; her husband, a drunkard, has deserted her. The eldest child, a girl of five, has spinal complaint, affecting the lungs. This woman works all day and every day as a paper bag maker, and by dint of incessant toil manages to earn 15s. a week, out of which she pays 5s. 6d. for the one small room in which the family live, sleep, and work. She, alas! is but a type of many others well known to us.

We shall thankfully receive any gifts of money, clothes, food, or toys; and if your readers who are looking forward to a "merry Christmas" themselves, will spare a little for those who have nothing but want to look forward to, we shall be glad to cheer and gladden many dreary lives. Goods should be addressed to the West London Mission, Craven Hall, Marshall-street, Golden-square, W.—Yours, etc., Katherine Price-Hughes.

Ratcliff Strangers' Rest.

BY the kind invitation of Mr. and Mrs. Henry E. Millar, a large number of sailors and their friends assembled to tea in the Strangers' Rest, 163, St. George-street, E., on Wednesday last week, after which a meeting of unusual interest and encouragement was held in the large hall.

Mr. Millar, who presided, gave a very hearty and stirring address. Mrs. C. F. Allison, who was again present, sang with great effect and power some of her beautiful sacred songs. Several bright testimonies were given by the sailors, and much interest was aroused by two of them being father and son, who also sang together most thrillingly of the love of Jesus, by which they had been saved.

Mr. J. Theo. Isaac, hon. sec., drew special attention to the sailors' Christmas tree and roast beef and plum pudding supper, to be held on 26th and 27th insts., and pleaded for liberal contributions of cuffs, helmets, mufflers, steering gloves, needle books, and plum puddings.

Dr. J. Vaughan-Hughes is a versatile writer, and in his latest booklet he shows his Christian confidence as well as his scientific knowledge. Many will read with profit The Human Eye and Human Vision, in the pages of which the power, wisdom, and goodness of God are exemplified. (6d. Operative Jewish Converts' Institution, Bodney-road, N.E.)

London Missionary Society.

THE one hundred and third report of this Society has just been issued. The Society has 192 male and 69 European female missionaries labouring in India, China, South and Central Africa, Madagascar, Polynesia, and New Guinea. More than half the male, and nearly all the female, missionaries labour in the two great empires first named.

The native helpers of various grades form an average of twenty to each European, and many of them are men of undoubted ability, piety, and zeal. The converts number nearly a quarter of a million; fifty-five thousand five hundred of them being Church members and communicants.

These numbers give but a partial idea of the results of the Society's labours. For instance, the remarkable success for many years in Madagascar has been maimed, indeed almost wrecked, by the French and their subservience to the Jesuits. In 1895 the native preachers were 6965, the Church members 62,749, and the adherents or professing Christians 288,834; and now the former are 1783, and the latter relatively 18,335 and 6127. The French authorities have of late become more friendly, but the future of the mission is uncertain.

The report gives abundant evidence of good being done which no figures can express. Tens of thousands, for instance, afflicted with all forms of disease, are relieved annually by its medical missionaries. 52,715 receive a thoroughly Christian education in the mission schools, and the report gives many instances of secret discipleship, hope in death, Bible reading, and the reception of Christian truth and practice by numbers quite outside the mission stations.

Great Assembly Hall.

THE month of November will long be remembered by the crowded state of the hall every Sunday night during Mr. Thos. Richardson's Mission. Mr. Richardson, whose work is so well-known in Rotherhithe, had all his early training in connection with Mr. Charrington's work, with which he was associated for over twenty years. It is, therefore, not at all surprising that when he takes a month's services in the magnificent Great Assembly Hall, that he should attract many who have known him in days gone by. All the Sunday nights were crowded to overflowing. The sweet singing of Master Percy Kahn had a marked effect upon the audiences.

The week-night services were above the average, corresponding with the increase on Sundays. In fact, on Thursdays, when he lectured with exhibitions of pictures by dissolving views, the gates had to be closed and hundreds turned away, unable to gain admission. It is most gratifying to know that it was not alone in point of numbers a success, but much blessing followed the faithful and earnest proclamation of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. How many homes have been brightened through the acceptance of the Saviour's love. Rejoicing reigns in many a family circle where before sorrow and sin had its full sway. The dread of many in looking forward to the festive season of Christmas has been turned into a longing to use it to the honour and glory of his name.

The British Chautauqua.—On Saturday the first of the winter lectures in connection with the British Chautauqua was delivered in the Haymerle Hall, Peckham, by Rev. C. Anderson Scott, of Kensington, on "The Dates of the New Testament Scriptures: How are they ascertained?" Mr. Scott emphasised the necessity for Sunday-school teachers to know at least something of Christian apologetics, and briefly sketched the chief lines of the attack of the enemies of the Christian religion during the last century and a half. He noted how important is the bearing upon these controversies of dates of authorship of various books of the New Testament, and showed how conclusively the historicity of these books has been proved by latest scholarship, and now universally accepted.

FROM OTHER LANDS.

Back to Zambesia.

THE return of Pastor Fr. Coillard to his much-loved Barotsiland opens a new chapter of mission history on the Upper Zambesi, and marks an epoch in evangelistic interest in many centres of Christian activity, especially in France and Switzerland. The story of Gospel work among the Barotsis has more than once been outlined in our columns; its origin in Basutoland, the native Christians of which country insisted upon having a part in the work of evangelisation in "the regions beyond"; its planting, after varied sufferings, sorrows, and trials, with the help of devoted men and women, some of whom are still on the field; and its steady progress, amidst labours accompanied by much prayer, and seed-sowing watered with many tears. And while these facts have touched the hearts of Christians in many lands, they have come home with special force to some of us, when we have realised that these great countries in South-East Central Africa have both, in the providence of God, become subject to the Imperial rule of Great Britain.

It is between two and three years since M. Coillard came home, nominally on furlough and in quest of health, but actually for hard work, after some forty years of service in the cause of God and man in what will soon cease to be called "the Dark Continent." While his few public appearances in Great Britain have been deeply interesting, his journeys on the Continent have been to Evangelical churches of every order. He promptly called for many workers wherewith to reinforce the Mission; and what with those already gone, some who accompany him on his journey, and a number who are in training and hope soon to join the band on the field, he sees his prayer for fifteen labourers more than answered. Of these, some are pastors, others teachers and artisans; and in point of nationality there are Swiss as well as French, also one Italian. There is also a medical missionary, a German, who, like several other members of the party, is a married man. M. Coillard likewise asked for money, in good round figures, and God has sent this by his stewards resident in many lands. From the poorer Protestants of France contributions have been received on a scale of noble liberality.

Beyond these matters of material importance, M. Coillard has pressed home upon the hearts and consciences of Christians the fact that the cause of missions is the inalienable heritage of the Churches. His faith has been honoured in the matter of men and money; moreover, his message has been blessed to the awakening of new life and vigour in circles where evangelistic indifference and inactivity formerly held sway. The religious papers of France and Switzerland have informed us of the moving circumstances under which he has been saying good-bye to friends now that he goes forth, as would reasonably appear, to finish his course in the land for which, by the goodness of God, he has been permitted to do so much.

A FAREWELL MEETING,

such as our Continental contemporaries have had the pleasure to describe, was held in Exeter Hall on Thursday evening last. The chair was occupied by Rev. E. W. Moore, and the proceedings took the form of a prayer meeting to commend the honoured worker to God. Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson and Mr. J. E. Mathieson voiced the petitions of the company at the outset of the meeting. In the course of some remarks the Chairman pointed out that it was an honour to bid Godspeed to a novice or beginner in missionary service; how much more inspiriting was it to bid farewell to a veteran in the army, a hero in the work, one who, at a time of life when rest might be craved, boldly went forth with all the vigour and ardour of a young man! Not by romance or enthusiasm had the work been sustained, but by the power and grace of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Captain Alf. Bertrand, F.R.G.S., who recently took part in an exploring expedition on the north bank of the Zambesi, described what he saw of the work at Lealuye and its hitherto dark neighbourhood. He spoke of the numerous hardships and sufferings of the workers; but in view of the triumphs and victories of the Gospel and civilisation, he found great cause for encouragement and rejoicing. Therefore, and on all grounds, he looked upon it as the duty of Christian people not only to pray, but in a material way to help the Mission. A short address followed, in French, by M. Jean Bianquis, of the Paris committee of the Mission. While the Protestants of France are not numerous, recent political changes have imposed great duties upon the Churches, and these must have attention. But although bracing themselves to the great opportunities and obligations thus presented, the French Protestants would, he said, never forget their first mission in Basutoland, nor neglect the grand work in which M. Coillard has had so worthy a part in Zambesi.

M. COILLARD'S ADDRESS

was pitched in a high key. He would have preferred to be silent, but he could not restrain praise to God. When he left France for South Africa forty-one years ago, he found comfort in the words of Christ: "No man hath left home or brethren, or sisters, or father or mother...for my sake or the Gospel's, but he shall receive a hundredfold more in this time—houses, and brethren, and sisters, and mothers, and children...and in the world to come eternal life." In the mission field he had found the fathers and mothers, and in the circles of helpers at home he had been in the midst of them. By God's mercy he did not come home, as was at first intended, on the ill-fated Drummond Castle; and now he had been restored to health and strength. This he regarded as meaning that there remained yet some work for him to do. Amid laughter, M. Coillard protested that he did not go back as an old man, but as one whose youth the Lord had graciously renewed.

Speaking of the work, M. Coillard told a story of difficulties, dangers, and disappointments; but God's Spirit has been at work. Among the things accomplished, he included:—The abolition of the slave trade, infanticide abandoned, and the cruelties which accompany witchcraft and the abuse of power—all things of the past. These reforms have been effected by the Gospel, and not by civilising influences alone; and not until they had been brought about did the land pass under the protectorate of Great Britain. M. Coillard asked whether Barotsiland had not come for the good of the people and the progress of the Gospel. When, in the early days of the Kimberley mining, he was given the opportunity of choosing one diamond out of a day's produce, he picked a black one. It was objected that he should choose a pink or white gem, as the black had no commercial value; but he went to Africa to seek black diamonds, and though the world might not value them he would lay them at the feet of the Saviour. Having shown that the Barotsis are themselves planting mission stations, M. Coillard spoke of the wonder with which they first listened to John iii. 16, "God so loved that He gave." He pressed home upon his hearers the question: If you love, what have you given?

In the course of the evening, prayer was offered by Rev. F. E. Paynter and Messrs. A. A. Head and Maxwell Wright. Amongst communications read to the meeting was a congratulatory telegram from Geneva, and a letter regretting absence from the Right Hon. James Bryce, M.P. Some hearty words on consecration were spoken by the Chairman, and from first to last a high tone pervaded the meeting. There are various ways in which friends may help the work, and these are set forth in papers which may be had from Miss Mackintosh, 4, Wetherby-gardens, South Kensington, S.W.

Lights and Shadows.

By Rev. R. HENRY DYKES.

AT the present time Basutoland is passing through a crisis. The natives have lost by rinderpest at least four-fifths of their cattle, and last year the drought destroyed about the same proportion of the crops. The consequence is that there is great want, and I fear that before the new crops come on there will be starvation. Formerly the Basutos could fall back upon their cattle, but now most of them are, as it were, bankrupt.

As a result of all this the task of the missionary becomes exceedingly difficult. The native evangelists who, in ordinary times, go out on their £10 a year, find that this year it is impossible to do so. The fields which yielded them food produced little or nothing, so they must purchase food elsewhere, and in order to meet this difficulty some would like to go to the gold or diamond fields to work for higher wages. But, again, where is the missionary, who is responsible for the £10 for each evangelist and for the schoolmaster's salary, to get the funds to meet these and other expenses? The ordinary church contributions, which last year produced £2000, will this year give much less than that, so that with an increased expenditure and a diminished income, the poor missionary finds himself

ON THE HORNS OF A DILEMMA.

Further, in certain cases it will be necessary to give assistance in food to keep some of the old people alive. Hitherto, no food has been served out, but in a month or two I intend assisting some of the most deserving cases; for this purpose the Lord has placed at my disposal 100 bags of maize, but when they are distributed what will they be among so many?

This is a black picture, but it has its reverse, and this cheers us, and enables us to go forward with hope and courage. The trials and losses which have come upon the Basutos have not been without fruit. The spiritual harvest has been rich and abundant; even the statistics of last year showed a wonderful advance upon past years; 2,024 were admitted into our catechism class throughout Basutoland, against 1,089 during 1896, nearly double the number, and I quite expect to hear of more during 1898. And what makes this large number still more encouraging is the fact that they represent a much larger number of conversions

DIRECT FROM HEATHENISM.

There is always a certain number of children of Christian parents coming in, but when we get over 500 or 600 we consider that the others are adults who have given up their heathen practices and put their trust in Jesus. In some places the number of men has been nearly as great as that of the women: and then, again, a great number of these converts are people occupying high positions, and some of them are from villages where hitherto there have been no Christians.

Another sign of the change taking place is that the boys and girls, whom we generally form into a Sunday-school, have come over on several Sunday mornings; they sit down under a tree near the normal school till one of their teachers goes and marches them down to church; they attend the service, and after it are most eager to hear Bible stories and learn to read. Thus we see the hard frost of centuries thawing, and giving place to the life-giving warmth of Christian teaching.

The hon. secretary and treasurer of the London Auxiliary of the Basutoland Mission is Mrs. Sutherland Taylor, 32, Beresford-road, Canonbury, N. Friends willing to offer drawing-rooms on behalf of the Mission are invited to correspond with Mrs. Sutherland-Taylor.

Movement in Italy.

DURING a visit to Italy an esteemed correspondent was much struck by the signs of awakening in Pisa and neighbourhood, where Signor Pierotti, of the Italian Evangelical Church, has for some years been engaged in earnest labour. Complying with a request for some particulars regarding the work, the pastor writes:—

"The Pisans, like all Italians, are Roman Catholics, but their Catholicism does not resemble that of others. It is very superficial—a mere veneer. Our Catholics do not think; they see and learn from what is set before them in religious festivals—the brilliant functions, the splendid illuminations.

"From the time I arrived in this city, I saw that it was necessary to preach to the masses—in the streets, by the roadside, and in the piazza. Accordingly, I went out from my central church and established other centres of evangelisation in San Marco, Cisanello, Cherrano, where I held Gospel meetings every week, and made many friends, and between February and July, 1897, about thirty-five souls were converted to Christ. This result was very satisfactory, and had the effect of REDOUBLING OUR ZEAL AND PRAYERS.

"This awakening spread very quickly, and other little towns asked that they, too, might have the Gospel preached to them. At Pontasserchio a colporteur and reader were asked for and supplied. The hearers were numerous, and the Gospel received with great enthusiasm, so that it was not possible to find a room large enough to contain all the people. The priests are much disliked there, so controversy was not called for. I preached Christ, and dwelt on his Personality, under every aspect. And He penetrated the hearts of many, and in six months we had forty cases of professed conversion.

"The movement has also extended to the province of Lucca, which is such a priest-ridden place that it has been called 'The Sacristy of Rome.' The pure Word of God was first preached there on September 13 this year, in the village of Santa Maria del Giudice, to a numerous audience, where a short time before a colporteur was stoned and the cry raised 'Death to the heretic!'

"During these two years the congregation of Pisa has increased by twenty members, among whom were some specially interesting cases of conversion, which may be recorded for the encouragement of Christian workers. From the beginning of my ministry at Pisa I had occasion to know Carlo Santoni, the proprietor of a printing-press, and

EDITOR OF AN ATHEISTICAL JOURNAL.

He was also president of the Pisa Rationalistic Association and author of a blasphemous life of Christ. I often spoke to this man of Christ as the Saviour of the soul, and of the repose one finds in believing in Him. At such times Santoni would argue in justification of his opinions. After a time he fell ill, and I visited him, always advising him to resign himself to the Divine will. At length he professed a change of mind, and expressed a desire to believe and to hope in God's mercy. By degrees the proud president of the rationalists, the unbeliever and infidel, was dead in him. A new faith lived, and God called him at the close of his life to be an honoured witness for Christ.

"In the midst of his physical agony (internal cancer) he confessed to all his old acquaintances and others that he was now a believer, and that through his faith he enjoyed a peace that was indescribable. When at last he dictated his will, he made a strong and sincere confession of the evangelical faith, deploring his past life, and declaring his serious repentance for having offended Him who was the Saviour of his soul. We have also received into our communion who had been a fervent Roman Catholic, and was attached to the archiepiscopal seminary. Disgusted by the conduct of the priests, he set himself to the study of Catholicism, and perceived its deviations from the truth of Christianity. Being a pious and upright soul, he recognised the truth, embraced the pure religion of Christ, and publicly announced his conversion and his reasons for it.

A PROFESSOR OF SCIENCE AND LITERATURE,

"I have selected these conversion cases from others to show how the Gospel has touched the hearts of all, and that we have converts of every kind. What about the care of these inquiring souls, which must be incessant and laborious, also the work of educating the children of the converts? We have urgent need of an elementary school in Pisa, to gather in the children of the brethren."

Inquiries may be addressed to Signor Agostino Pierotti, Ministro Chiesa Evang. Italiana, Strada Lavagna 27, Pisa, Italy.

Chinese Viceroy on Opium.

IN a letter to The Bombay Guardian, Rev. J. S. Adams, of Hankow, writes that Chang Chih-tung, the Viceroy of Nanking, and rival of Li Hung-Chang, has recently published a book which so pleased the Emperor that he ordered a copy to be sent to each high official in the Empire. The last chapter deals with opium-smoking, and his views may be gathered from the following translation of a section:—

"Opium-smoking is like the deluge, and an invasion of wild beasts. But it is worse. The deluge only lasted nine years, when the great Yü (Noah) subdued it. The wild beast invasion did not last beyond the Shang dynasty. Opium has desolated China during one century, and extended over twenty-two provinces. Several thousand millions of men have felt the sorrow it brings. It weakens the mental power, destroys the vigour of the soldier, and wastes the wealth of the country. Our imports amount in value to eighty million taels, our exports are fifty million taels. The value of foreign opium purchased is thirty million taels. We lose these thirty millions altogether. China is not made poor by foreign trade, but by opium smoking. This is the pass that China has come to.

"The loss thus caused of vigour in the army and talent in the scholar is a worse evil than the mere loss of money. The nation has no energy of will, no diligence in action. The people become more degraded year by year. They will soon be the laughing-stock of the rest of the world. Long ago the Government prohibited opium smoking, but the fear of punishment failed to prevent the extension of the habit. It is our destiny, we are told. Who could check the evil that heaven decreed should be our lot! But is it so? I do not think so. The disciples of Confucius say rule the people by punishment; they will avoid the punishment but feel the shame. Rule them by virtue and prosperity; they will feel shame and obey the law. Law is not successful in ruling men. The sense of honour is the key to the situation. In educating the people you can reform them. They cannot be reformed without education."

From Rev. E. P. Hammond.

IN recent letters, Rev. E. P. Hammond describes visits to Omaha and Council Bluffs. We make some extracts from his letters:—

Leaving Minneapolis for Omaha, we held a union meeting on October 30, in the West Minster Church, Rev. Mr. Moore, pastor. Children from the various churches and Sunday-schools gathered in the afternoon. I had spoken to the Christians in the morning about the importance of prayer. Surely God's blessing was granted, for many in the afternoon came to Christ. Dr. Harsha, professor of the Theological Seminary, came with me to the Christian Home, in Council Bluffs, where is located an orphanage which cares for over two hundred children. Most of them were gathered in the chapel, and we spoke to them of Jesus and his love. The Spirit of God rested upon them, and most of them apparently gave their hearts to Christ. We had another meeting there Tuesday morning, November 1, and it was a joyous occasion; many who were weeping last Sunday night were to-day rejoicing in Jesus, and were quite ready to stand and tell the story of their conversion. Rev. J. G. Lemen, founder of the Home, deeply sympathizes with effort for salvation of the young. About fifteen hundred children and youths have been rescued by this Christian home, which is laid out in twenty cottages, with two hundred and thirty inmates.

I found the Nebraska department of the Trans-Mississippi Exposition at Omaha especially attractive. I have never before realised that this was such an important State in our Union. I am told that there are only three per cent in the State that are unable to read; fine schools and colleges abound. I was invited upon our arrival here to deliver an address to the seven hundred pupils of the High School, between the ages of thirteen and twenty-one; and yesterday the Chancellor of the State University at Lincoln invited me to speak to his students. It was a great pleasure to do so. The students at the University number over two thousand, and the professors and the instructors one hundred and seventy-five. There are ten fine buildings, the last (Mechanic Arts Hall) having been dedicated recently. The college farm of three hundred and twenty acres is located within three miles of the University campus. I was pleased to find as I mingled with these students that a large proportion of them were evidently true Christians.

Salvation Army in India.

AS a "Son of the Soil" let me tell what God is doing through the Salvation Army in South India. The task before the Army is three-fold—viz., uplifting the people we work amongst from heathen darkness and sin; educating them in the ways and means of Salvation warfare; and inspiring principles of self-government and self-propagation.

(1) To illustrate how God helps us to emancipate souls from heathen darkness and sin, take for example the bigoted heathen village of Kadagramam. The Army went there with a band of some ten or more officers on fire for souls, on receipt of favourable news brought by the comrades previously sent out as "spies." After a period of work and pleading with God the village was "captured," and left in charge of a couple of experienced officers, whose work lay in further winning the people to the new faith. The temple where for generations their fathers worshipped and offered sacrifice to devils was pulled down by the villagers themselves, and a new place of worship (barracks) put up.

This happened some five years ago, and I can never forget my first official visit to the place eighteen months since. The captain in charge leading the bright band of soldiers to welcome their colonel was no other than the first soul God gave me, when as the Army's pioneer I visited South Travancore six years before. He was then a hopeless drunkard, wife-beater, and terror of the neighbourhood where he lived. What a change! Jesus has changed him, and has made him a soul-winner and leader of men. Hallelujah! God has helped us to pull down some twenty-three devil's temples like this (three during the early part of the present year), and Army barracks are put up in their stead. We now work eighty-four chief villages and 140 dependent villages in the five divisions of the territory, the Telegu country, Tamil, and Malayalam lands.

(2) If the reader could have a look at the Army villagers, walking single file on a Sunday morning along the rice fields, clothed in their "Sunday best," with beaming, happy faces, and big, bulky Bibles in their own language, carried by such heads of families who could read, the sight would fill their eyes with tears of gratitude to God. Thank God, our people do grow in grace, under the patient toil of our devoted officers; the development of our converts being, of course, proportionate to the time we have been dealing with them. Our oldest work is in South Travancore.

The children of our converts are dealt with in forty day-schools. We have also boarding-schools, where the children are being carefully trained as our future officers; we have also one industrial school.

(3) We have in the South of India 330 officers and teachers; of these only thirteen are European officers, the rest are Indians, almost all Army converts, trained in the country. Two large divisions in Travancore, the big Telegu division, and Madras division, are all under the leadership of natives of India. Eleven out of the twelve districts, with between ten and twenty officers in each, are managed by Indian Staff Officers. The unselfish aim of the devoted European officers in the field is thus bearing undoubted fruit in the education of Indians to win their country for Christ.

God has set before us an open door. We could rapidly spread on all sides, in proportion to the number of men and women from this country who will go as nursing-fathers and nursing-mothers to India, while those who cannot go may stretch forth their hands in increased liberality, with more courage and trust than ever. India's depressed millions cry to you through an humble soldier of Jesus Christ. MUSA BHAI, Colonel.

From the New Hebrides.

ABOUT four years ago, as we have already informed our readers, a young man in New Zealand, Mr. Houlton Forlong, gave up his farm in order to undertake Gospel work on the Island of Tanna, New Hebrides, among tribes untouched by the Presbyterian Mission which has laboured so long and so nobly throughout the group.

He was considered quite unfit for the work, knowing nothing of the languages used, and not having the faculty of acquiring foreign tongues. But go he would; and when, after two years' work, he sought a change of scene, it was with the determination of returning, although he did not think that a single man or woman on the island cared a pin for him or his evangelistic exertions.

He returned in due course, and found that God had blessed his former efforts far beyond his imagination. He learned that during his absence the natives had kept up the meetings he had organised, individuals among them having rehearsed again and again all he had said of sin and salvation through Christ. Confident that he would return, they had built a meeting house under the tree where he had been in the habit of preaching. His father, Mr. Gordon Forlong, of Wanganui, N.Z., who is well known in England, writes to us:—

"Houlton is now in his fourth year's stay, and the good work has gone on steadily; many most dependable Christians now remember the Lord's death in the appointed way. They asked for a white-faced Christian to go and speak to the still more violent tribes on the hills beyond them. Houlton's answer was, 'No, I will not; you must go yourselves.' The people took time before answering, and at length decided to go. The result is remarkable. At the risk of life they have gone; and when not ordered away, they have called the people together and told them the Good News. Gradually, of their own accord, they are holding meetings of a simple kind, praying and speaking; three or four converts speak one after another. I will make brief quotations from his journal:—

"'During my absence a worshipping man was shot by a native who lived only a mile from him. As soon as he was shot, the Christians sent messengers at once in my boat, to tell the townspeople of the murdered man not to retaliate, but to leave that to God...On Monday morning seven men called, each one bringing me a water melon. I like the spirit that appears among the natives, and I feel how important it is that I should be in a right state myself.

"'On Friday I held two meetings in the little town where this man was shot, and had to go some miles over the lands of heathen chiefs. I saw the chief who ordered the man to be shot; he knows me, and excused himself by saying that he was determined to put down hypocrisy, as the man was, he knew, killing people by sorcery! The chief added, 'There will be no more killing.' In another district a very 'wild lot' of people have built a meeting house themselves, and I find them greatly changed owing to the converts going there at times."

Zambesi Industrial Mission.

THE missionaries of the Zambesi Industrial Mission, in British Central Africa, recently sent to the Queen a box containing about 20lb. of coffee, as a sample of the crop (of some forty tons) which has been raised this year on the plantations of the Mission, by means of native labour, under the supervision of the missionaries. The sample represented the coffee in four of its different stages of preparation. (1) In the berry, as exported, after being gathered, pulped, and dried; (2) the berries cleaned and stripped of their husks, as sold in the London market; (3) the berries roasted; (4) the coffee roasted and ground and ready for use.

The box was promptly acknowledged by Lieut.-Col. Sir Fleetwood I. Edwards, who sent the following letter to Sir Brampton Gurdon, the treasurer of the Zambesi Industrial Mission:—

Windsor Castle.

DEAR SIR,—I am commanded by the Queen to ask you to convey to the missionaries referred to in your letter Her Majesty's thanks for the samples of coffee that they have been kind enough to forward for Her Majesty's acceptance. The gift is all the more interesting as an evidence of the progress made under the auspices of the Zambesi Industrial Mission.

Those who are interested in this method of developing self-supporting missionary enterprise will be pleased to have some details concerning the work of the Mission.

There are some thirty English missionaries in the field. Ten stations have been opened, seven of which are in charge of English missionaries and three are under native supervision. Eleven schools are maintained, and the average daily attendance last year was 670. There are two hospitals, and a recent report states that the number of cases treated in one month was about 1500, of which number about fifty were in-patients. The number of natives employed on the Mission's estates last year amounted to between 1600 and 2000.

One or two of the stations have this year exported sufficient coffee to produce the whole amount necessary for their maintenance, though in the case of some of the more recently opened stations it will take a year or two before they can provide the funds needed to support themselves. In the meantime, the Mission has to rely upon the help of friends at home.

The first object of the Mission is, of course, to provide for the spiritual needs of the people among whom it labours, and there is cause for great joy over many souls having been brought into the Kingdom, not only through the efforts of the white missionaries, but also through the testimony of many of the native converts who have themselves become missionaries.

Every mail brings news of renewed blessing. Lately it is reported that native Christians, trained in industrial pursuits on the Mission stations, have gone out to work for different Europeans, and encouraging accounts have been received as to the excellence of their work and the boldness of their testimony, in life and word, to the faith they have in the Lord Jesus Christ.

The Bible in the Philippines.

NINE years ago the Bible Society's earliest workers in Manila were imprisoned and expelled, and its books have ever since been rigidly excluded by the Spanish priests. This autumn, however, the Society has been able to resume its work. Recalling the past, the current issue of The Bible Society Reporter says:—

"Mr. B. C. Randall, our agent at Wuchow, sailed from Hong Kong on September 3, and reached Manila 'after a delightful passage of sixty hours.' The city is still suffering from the characteristic inefficiencies of its former masters. Mr. Randall was fortunate enough to secure a 'bungalow' in the suburbs almost at once. 'It is nothing to boast of,' he says, 'but I consider myself lucky to get any place at all. I have only my trunk for a table and the floor for a seat.' Spanish dilatoriness and formalities required a whole week to land two cases of Scriptures and pass them through the Customs."

Extracts from Mr. Randall's journal show that the United States Consul is in full sympathy with Bible work. It is estimated that there are forty thousand Chinese in Manila, a large number of them in union with the Roman Catholic Church, which they have joined in order to secure better protection and greater business facilities. Mr. Randall says: "I have sold, this first day (September 14), twenty Bibles, seventeen Testaments, and forty-five portions in Spanish, besides a Bible and a Testament in English. Many persons wished to buy, but dreaded the displeasure and maledictions of their priests. The Philippinos themselves are crying from every side, we want schools; we want to learn English.' Whatever their motive, there can be no question as to this desire — a desire so intense that not all the power of the priesthood could prevent crowded attendances at the mission schools wherein the English language would be taught."

'TEACH US ENGLISH;

Mr. Randall narrates a visit to Malolos, the headquarters of Aguinaldo, president of the Philippine insurgents. As a result of an interview, the agent secured the promise of a passport and of another audience at which to discuss the liberties to be granted and the protection to be given to Protestant missions. He says strong things of the way the Spanish priests have used their power in the past, adding: "It is safe to asume that, under any form of government, it will never again attain to its previous proportions." Mr. Randall says: "Never before, in any Spanish country, has there been such an auspicious opening for Protestant missionary workers."

Miss E. M. White, a lady who has done much to promote the circulation of the Scriptures in specially needy regions, hopes shortly to proceed to the Philippine Islands. She writes:—"I am informed that eighty per cent. of

THE PEOPLE CAN READ.

While the door is open is the time to give the people God's Word, so that should Rome work her way ahead again she will find that the door once open cannot again be shut." Miss White's work with Illustrated Gospels, issued by the Scripture Gift Mission (15, Strand, W.C.), have been much blessed, and it is these that she hopes to circulate in the Philippines. She purposes to leave Great Britain for the United States in January, and to proceed to the Islands with a party of workers under the auspices of the International and Missionary Alliance.

From Dr. Baedeker.

FROM Constantinople to Smyrna and back is a very pleasant trip, especially when wind and sea are calm, but the passport visé and the Turkish passport cause no end of close inspection, if not suspicious inquiries. It is quite an exercise of patience to pass through it all, and one cannot help pitying the Turkish officials, who have to write the names and personal description of every passenger before he is allowed to land and to depart. We have just passed through all this, and the Russian steamboat is just starting on her way to Constantinople, where we may expect a repetition of all the trouble and delay before we shall be allowed to land.

Yet a visit to the various mission workers and to the schools is worth all the trouble and expense. Having arrived on Saturday afternoon, December 3, I had the joy of meeting Mrs. Constantine, who only a few days previously to our arrival had come from India. Very soon my arrival was known, and my time was mapped out with opportunities for testimony in several languages in the Union Church, and also in several schools and orphanages. The fellowship and co-operation with various labourers in the Gospel are helpful and encouraging, and the singleness of aim and purpose binds together hearts that were unknown to each other before.

American brethren have a strong foothold in Smyrna, both ecclesiastically and educationally, and the different nationalities benefit by their services, so freely rendered. Armenians and Greeks form large congregations in the church services, and it is a feast to see their attention in listening to the Gospel, also the eager attention of boys and girls in the schools. There is also a largely attended school for Jewish children conducted by the Scotch Presbyterians, a large orphanage by the Armenian Gregorians, and last, but not least, the orphan house of the German Deaconesses. Very many of the orphans have come from the interior, the scenes of the massacres. The children show an unusual degree of intelligence and diligence, and in a remarkably short time they learn the English or the German language, without forgetting their own native tongue.

We hope to spend some days yet in Constantinople, and then to sail for Sassoon, thence to Marsovan, and further in the interior, to visit several missionary centres and orphanages, and finally to cross the Russian frontier into Transcaucasia, once more to visit prisons and to do whatsoever our hands find to do. I shall be grateful for every remembrance in prayer. Hitherto we have been especially favoured. My visits to Budapest, Klausenburg, Bucharest, Rustchuk, and Constanta were seasons of refreshing, making one desirous to lengthen out one's days at each of these places. A day with professors and students at the Theological College, Klausenburg, was especially encouraging.

Would that more volunteer labourers would visit the neglected lands of Europe, such as Austria, Hungary, Croatia, Slavonia, Transylvania, Roumania, Bulgaria, Servia, Dalmatia! Vast multitudes have never had the privilege of hearing the glorious Gospel. Whatever they have of religion is a caricature of the truth, the Roman and Greek priests domineering over the people and keeping them in ignorance. May the love of Christ enlarge the hearts and enlarge the borders of God's servants, so that the dark and needy places may be considered.

Letters will reach me if directed to my wife, Wart-Eck, Weston-super-Mare.

December 5. F. W. BAEDEKER.

Blessing in France.

DEAR SIR,—Your readers will be encouraged to know that we have token that God is answering prayer for France. The difficulties and trials of Christians in the past two years have drawn them nearer to God. The weekly meeting of McAll workers yesterday gave evidence that there are several of God's servants who are having blessing in their own souls, and are with increasing expectancy asking it for Paris. I have seen in these two months nine priests who have come out of the darkness of Rome to a measure of light, and this week I have seen another, still in Rome, but to whom the light is coming, and who sees he must come out.

But then the question comes: What to? Some of the pastors and teachers in Paris err sadly by Rationalistic views; and the priest who leaves Rome is, of course, abandoned by all his family and friends, and therefore needs wise guidance and friends; for, as a rule, none of them know anything of faith in the Living Lord. They claim our sympathy and prayers.

There are, I believe, many hundreds of them dissatisfied in the Church of Rome, but they need something more to lean on than a general denunciation of the errors of Rome, which millions see, and become unbelievers. Here, as in England, mere Protestantism is a broken reed, for it is honeycombed with worldliness or formality. Many churches have only one service a week. Thank God, there are centres of life and light, but they are almost lost in the huge masses of a godless population. But God is working.

France is in a transition state. God has "made void the counsel" of the Jesuits. They had urged on the Franco-German war thinking to crush Protestant Germany. But the defeat they brought on France necessitated the obligatory military service of the young men in the seminaries who had been trained for the priesthood. As a consequence the light of the outer world dispelled many illusions of the seminarist teaching, and numbers never went into the priesthood, and to-day 2800 parishes are vacant because there are no priests for them. And apart from some special effort utter godlessness will increase.

But there are hundreds of thousands in France who are disgusted with the priests, and who yet have some fear of God as the result of their religious training, imperfect and corrupt as it was. Now, therefore, is the time for an advance all along the line. Personally, I am bound to say I find the working classes far more ready to receive tracts than in England. Out of 1000 recently given away I have not had a refusal, while not a day passes without someone coming and asking for more. There is a great call for qualified workers. I ask special prayer that the French Christians may be quickened in larger numbers. We are to have a prolonged gathering before the Lord on Saturday next, at 4, Rue Roquépine, from 7.30 p.m. to 10.30. Pray for us.—Yours for Christ's sake, RADSTOCK.

Paris, December 10.

Pioneer Work in India.

THE work and characteristic features of the Indian Raj-i-Masih (or Christ Rule) Mission, better known in this country under its English title, "Indian Christian Realm Mission," was briefly described on Tuesday at the Aldersgate Y.M.C.A. by the founder, Mr. Jai Bhai.

The gathering was well attended, and the cheery, interesting accounts of faithful work carried out under conditions of difficulty and hardship were heartily received. Mr. Hodder presided, and Sir George Williams and Pastor Fuller Gooch took part.

The society acts upon the dictum of many of the churches that the responsibility for the evangelisation of India must be thrown to an increasing extent upon the converted natives. Accordingly, the European workers of the I.C.R. Mission place themselves side by side with their Indian brethren, who have equal place in council and in the work of the Mission.

The opening up of Gospel effort among, at any rate, some of the vast unmissioned districts of India is specially aimed at. Recent books issued by Miss Lucy Guinness and by the Students' Volunteer Union have accentuated the need of vigorous effort to carry the message to these unreached millions. As Mr. Jai Bhai remarks, amongst a population of three millions in the native States of the Central Provinces, there are no workers, and Behar, with twenty-four millions, has but six.

Three fields of labour hitherto unevangelised are now worked by the I.C.R.'s missionaries—Rajpipla State, in the Bombay Presidency; the Sirdic State, in Southern Rajputana; and Berenag district, in the North-West Province. The castes and tribes reached in these fields are Bheels, Talalavias, Vaghris, and Doms. Work has also been commenced in Ghoom, Bengal, among the Ghurkas. From Ghoom the workers hope to carry the Gospel into the "close" State of Nepal, with its five millions of unmissioned people.

As a result of the first year's work eighty to ninety adherents have been secured; about half have been baptized or are ready for baptism. The Mission has now twenty workers of the Bheel converts, nine of whom have been received into the society's training institute. The work is spreading, and there are abundant tokens of blessing.

The missionaries at present in England are Messrs. Jai Bhai (A.S., Paynter) and Isu Charan (Greet), who have come over by invitation with the object of giving information as to the work, and the prospects for further development. Two experienced lady nurses, familiar with Mahrati, have joined the Mission, and are shortly to proceed to India. The home representatives of the work are the treasurer, Mr. Martin (late Judge, Indian Civil Service), and the secretary, Mr. H. Page, 35, Tollington-road, N.

A Chinaman's Testimony.

IN a recent letter Mr. J. A. Anderson, of the C.I.M. at Tai-chow-fu, writes:—

I have just come from our street chapel where we tell out the Gospel daily to from fifty to 200 people. Many of them have never before heard the way of life, and as a rule they listen respectfully and well. It is my custom to take one or two students with me to help in preaching. While the three hours' service was proceeding to-day one of our members, a business man who lives about two days' journey distant, came into the chapel and sat down among the audience. I had never heard him speak in public, but knowing him to be a man of intelligence and force of character, as well as an old church member, I waited for a suitable opportunity, and then called upon him to come forward and speak for his Master.

I had felt somewhat tired at the drowsy, half-hearted way in which the student who preceded him spoke; but no sooner did the business man stand up than every eye was fixed upon him, and without the slightest apparent effort he kept the attention of the audience while he told out the way of salvation in faithful, clear, and sympathetic tones for about a quarter of an hour. When he had finished, I stood up and kept him from leaving the speakers' table while I asked him a few questions for the edification of the audience. These elicited the fact that he had come up to the city on business, that his business was prosperous, that he had a wife, three sons, and two daughters, that he has been a Christian for twenty-one years, that before his conversion he was a miserable man, but since believing on Christ he has had a happy peaceful heart. The audience seemed thunderstruck. They crowded round to see this wonderful man, who although refusing to worship idols for twenty-one years, was not only alive, but well and happy and prosperous.

This is one of the bits of cheer that our loving Father gives us—one of the "handfuls dropped on purpose" to help in cheering the heart of his toiler; so I pass it on.

France and England.—Sir Edmund Monson presided on December 12 at the annual meeting of the Anglo-American Young Men's Christian Association in Paris. He referred to the better understanding that has grown up between England and America. After speaking of the usefulness of Y.M.C.A. work, he said, with some emotion: "I am glad to have this opportunity of explaining my feelings towards France. I have a sincere regard for this country, and believe it is generally shared by the two peoples, though there is a racial difference not easily got over, and it requires care to avoid irritation. We hear of war and rumours of wars, news of armaments at home reaches us, but with the approach of Christmas my mind turns towards peace and good will towards all men."

Christmas Appeals.

A NUMBER of appeals have reached us from mission workers among the poor who are desirous of providing material comfort and cheer during the coming Christmas time. We are obliged to confine this list to those undenominational efforts that are without the backing of a church organisation, and to state the needs in the briefest possible terms.

Children's clothes, boots, etc., will be very acceptable for the motherless children in the Homes opened for them by Mr. R. T. SMITH, Evangelist, Chiswick, W.

The AGED CHRISTIAN BLIND at the Homes, 77, Hanley-road, Crouch-hill, N., numbering 87, will have some extra enjoyments at Christmas, and help is solicited.—Supt., Rev. H. BRIGHT.

In the district of Holloway there are numbers of poor to whom the NORTH LONDON GOSPEL SAMARITAN MISSION wish to minister.—J. R. BULLOCK, 93, Grove-road, Holloway, N.

Gifts of suitable articles for seamen will be welcomed by Miss CHILD, Welcome Home, Iron Bridge, Canning Town, for the "Christmas boat" to be unloaded on December 17.

Free dinners and teas are given during the winter among those out of work at the docks by Mr. C. COLEMAN, of the DOCK LABOURERS' MISSION, 150, Boleyn-road, West Ham Park, E.

The home visiting work carried on by Mr. JAMES SHARPLESS, late of the Spitalfields Gospel Mission, needs help, especially in clothing for the poor.—14, Sydney-square, Commercial-road, E.

The LIGHTHOUSE MISSION, Camberwell, hope to feed 500 old men and women, and 500 poor children, at Christmas.—Hon. Superintendent, R. R. BLEWER, 12, Elmington-road, Camberwell, S.E.

The HOWARD-STREET GOSPEL MISSION AND RAGGED SCHOOL wish to feed the hungry and warm and clothe the naked.—Superintendent, JOHN SOAMES, Mission Hall, Wandsworth-road, S.W.

Food, firing, Christmas dinners, etc., will be given to the many needy families reached by the ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION.—Superintendent, W. WHEATLEY, 4, Ampton-street, Regent-square, W.C.

Help is needed to give Christmas dinners and relief during the winter months to the poor of the neighbourhood by the HOPE MISSION, Friar-street, Blackfriars, S.E.—ANNIE MARTIN, Hon. Superintendent.

It is desired to distribute coals, groceries, etc., among the poor reached by the MISSION AT BERGER HALL, Bromley-by-Bow, and also articles of clothing among the needy children. Contributions to Harley House, Bow, E.

Mr. THOS. RICHARDSON, of Rotherhithe, appeals for help in providing Christmas cheer for the poor. Rotherhithe abounds with dock labourers and others whose employment is very precarious during the winter months.—Address, 48, Lower-road, Rotherhithe, S.E.

The Shaftesbury Institute Christmas dinners and teas take joy into many cheerless homes. The Christmas gatherings are essential to the success of the work carried on in the shelters and homes. Everything is managed in the most economical way.—Miss MEREDITH BROWN, Shaftesbury Institute, Lisson Grove, N.W.

The workers of GIFFORD HALL MISSION, Gifford-street, Caledonian-road, Islington, intend to provide 350 well-cooked dinners and materials for as many teas, to be enjoyed by some of the very poor of this crowded neighbourhood at their own homes on Christmas Day. Mr. J. L. Nye, 12, Landseer-road Upper Holloway, N., is one of the superintendents.

Requests for Prayer.

For Mr. John Wood, of the Evangelisation Society, and Rev. J. Manton Smith, who are still seriously ill.

Praise is asked for good work going on in the "Iron Room," at Boulogne, and prayer that God's blessing may be given on fresh work to be entered upon in the Central Hall, for the McAll work carried on there.

Praise.

For many brought to Christ during a mission at Penn Fields, Wolverhampton.

Stockwell Orphanage.—Those willing to help should send to the Secretary of the Orphanage, Clapham-road, London, S.W., for as many appeal envelopes as they can distribute amongst their friends. The passing of the envelopes to guests at the Christmas dinner-table will be a pleasure to all concerned, and no one will feel the poorer for any gift bestowed upon the family of nearly 500 fatherless children.

THE BOOK WORLD.

STUDIES IN TYPOLOGY.

Several excerpts have appeared in our columns from the thoughtful book which Miss A. R. Habershon has prepared, The Study of the Types. (2s. 6d. Morgan & Scott.) From these it will have been inferred, and rightly so, that the pages do not so much deal with individual types as aim at arousing interest in the subject as a whole, and at emphasizing the importance of studying the types comparatively. Miss Habershon has made the subject her own by much reading—especially Bible reading—and independent thought, and many will peruse her volume to great spiritual profit.

After introductory chapters, in which Typology in general is opened up, and reasons given in defence of the study, this book deals with double types—two similar things in the same symbol, or two symbols closely connected with one another; and then with the grouping of types. These wide fields having been surveyed, we are at the heart of things, and read with sustained interest chapters on types of Calvary and the Resurrection. Then follow Tabernacle and Temple studies, and others on typical places and characters. In conclusion, we have chapters on types of Christ as the Shepherd, and types of the Holy Spirit; while in an appendix Miss Habershon works out most effectively the well-known analogy of Joseph and Christ, giving Old and New Testament passages to establish the marvellous comparisons and correspondences.

All Bible students will be aware that Typology has done much in days gone by to promote thorough knowledge of the Scriptures—alike in the Law and the Gospel. Miss Habershon cannot be said to err in the direction of fanciful generalisation or interpretation; her pages give the fruit of sober study, and those who follow her guidance will in the end be thankful for instructions which are uniformly clear in style and helpful in purpose.

NEW BOOK BY MR. MOODY.

A splendid illustrative aid for all who are engaged in Christian work, and a seasonable gift-book, replete with forcible appeal, thrilling incident, and profound spirituality, is Anecdotes, Incidents, and Illustrations, by the grand evangelistic veteran D. L. Moody.

"Are the stories true?" The prefatory note affords cogent reply. When Mr. Moody was preaching in Baltimore in 1879, an infidel reporter, aware of the preacher's anecdotal style, attended a meeting with the express purpose of "catching" a story and exposing it if untrue. After the meeting, however, the reporter inquired of Mr. Moody where he got such and such a story. "I said I had read it in a Boston paper. He told me that it happened right there in the streets of Baltimore, and that he, the reporter, was the person referred to in it. It made such an impression upon him that he accepted Christ and became one of the first converts in that city."

Mr. Moody's characteristic earnestness and humour appear in every page, so that it is a difficult matter, after taking up the book, to put it down without reading it through. Excellently simple and clear, suitable for any class of readers, these "Anecdotes, Incidents, and Illustrations" should find a place in every Christian home. It is difficult to conceive of a more helpful and satisfactory gift-book. As such, it might with advantage take the place of the commonplace tales which especially abound at this time of the year. It is a book, too, which, once purchased, would never be relegated to the back shelf, but would inevitably become popular in the family circle, since it is one that could always be re-read with pleasure and profit. (2s. 6d. Morgan & Scott.)

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

The Home Messenger was never better. The writers include some of the best known leaders in the Free Churches, and the general contents are entertaining and instructive. (Horace Marshall & Son.)

The monthly paper for young people, The Silver Link, is well designated "a magazine for home and school." The seventh annual volume is filled with good reading, and is admirably illustrated. (2s. Sunday School Union.)

Among papers for young people, a worthy place is filled by Our Own Magazine, issued by the Children's Special Service Mission. The year's parts make a capital volume, which, being admirably bound, is well suited for presentation. (2s.) The numerous stories are not merely readable and wholesome, but calculated to do higher service in the illustration of Scripture teaching and the enforcement of truths for life.

The monthly publications of the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals deserve hearty commendation. The Animal World for grown ups, and the Band of Mercy for the young, are not merely distinguished by wholesome and interesting contents, but remarkable for their illustrations, which are at once numerous and excellent. In the home circle such papers exercise a powerful and much-needed ministry. The annual volumes are handsomely produced, and will be welcome to many. (Office of the Society: 105, Jermyn-street, St. James's, S.W.)

It is a great pleasure to say a word now and again for that excellent little monthly, The Guide, which is, with precision and truth, designated "A Help to Present Progress and Future Well-being." The volume for 1898 (2s. Glasgow: William Love, 221, Argyle-street; London: W. Mackenzie, 69, Ludgate-hill) is a repository of good things. Young men who combine Christian principles with literary taste will find much to their mind in these pages. Among the various series may be mentioned articles on Victorian Poets and our National Shrines, also papers on the Mothers of Memorable Men.

A bright little book by Charles R. Parsons is Janet's Victory; a countryside love story (Marshall Brothers).

Footsteps to Peace, by W. Welby Pryer, is a booklet calculated to prove helpful to many. (8d. Stoneman.)

Messrs. Ward, Lock, & Co. have issued a cheap edition of Mr. Charles M. Sheldon's sermon-story, In His Steps, or What Would Jesus Do? (6d. and 1s.)

The Elector King and Priest (3d. Nisbet & Co.) contains the gist of a larger book, contending for more energetic effort on the part of the electorate in doing battle with Romish error.

The well-got-up volume, One Summer by the Sea (3s. 6d. Thomas Nelson & Sons), tells pleasantly enough a romantic boy and girl story of to-day. The book should afford satisfaction to many youthful readers.

In Dr. Therne (3s. 6d. Longmans & Co.) Mr. Rider Haggard appears as the champion of vaccination. Although the book is certainly a vividly-written piece of advocacy it appears to adduce no new argument.

Tales of a Tin Mine. By Rev. Silas K. Hocking. (2s. Horace Marshall & Son.) The reverend novelist is here on familiar ground. These sketches of mining peril and social tragedy in Cornwall are realistic in the best sense.

Most children love to hear stories of animal life, and such will be delighted to receive Stories from Lowly Life. By C. M. Duppa. (Macmillan & Co.) This book is full of pretty anecdotes of birds and animals, plentifully illustrated.

"One Thing Needful" Almanack (1d. or 3d. R. Brimelow, Bible Depôt, Southport) is a useful and spiritual little publication in convenient form, and the small verse cards issued by the same firm will doubtless secure a large circulation.

In a prefatory note to Needless Worries (1s. Marshall Bros.), a booklet of verse, by S. F. T., Dr. Handley Moule testifies that "the poems have carried to my own mind and heart many a message concerning the King and many a stimulus to his service."

The Chums of Old St. Paul's (J. F. Shaw & Co.), by Alice Lang, a piece of honest work, well planned and written, comes, with its pictures of old English life and its interesting sketch of Dean Colet, as a welcome change from the monotony of ordinary religious tales.

Grannie's Wondercity. (1s. Simpkin, Marshall.) A booklet giving interesting reminiscences of a lady whose memory goes sufficiently far back to enable her to say: "Queen Charlotte was one of my heroines of youth, so good, so true...and the dear Princess Amelia, how I loved her."

The White North, by M. Douglas (Nelson & Sons), gives us a very graphic and concise account of the fateful Arctic expeditions of Nordenskiöld and De Long, and finally the well-known triumph of Nansen. All who love stories of Arctic exploration will find here both entertainment and instruction.

Messrs. Jarrold & Co.'s latest volume of the "Adventure Series for Boys" is called The Son of a Hundred Fathers, the odd title arising from the adoption by a boys' school of a baby boy found in a meadow by one of their number. The book is replete with adventure, grim and exciting. The illustrations are excellent.

A specially interesting book for children is The Echo-Maid, and other stories, by Alicia Aspinwall (J. F. Shaw & Co.). The letterpress has fairy charms, while the illustrations are unusually fine. The scene of the title story is laid in Scotland, and the others, with Cornish and German elements, are equally full of attraction for the juvenile mind.

Dr. Gordon Stables' latest book for boys, 'Twixt Dawn and Light (5s. J. F. Shaw & Co.), is a splendid volume, charmingly bound and illustrated. It contains a great deal of English and Scottish history, including a vivid sketch of King Alfred and his reign, interwoven with the story, in conversational form. The book makes a useful and handsome present.

The first of a series of standard books on Reformatory work, Hints on Rescue Work (3s. 6d. Reformatory and Refuge Union, 32, Charing Cross), goes beyond its title, for it is, to all intents, a sound and practical handbook. In the suggested "inducements" to quit sin, later editions will probably contain a few more thoughts on such topics as sovereign grace and redeeming love.

Mr. David Baron gives very readable incidents from his missionary journeyings in many lands in his latest booklet, Israel's Mission to the World and the Church's Mission to Israel (4d. Morgan & Scott). An interesting feature is a series of illustrations, some of them portraits of typical Jewish rabbis. All who pray and work for Israel will be refreshed by a perusal of these pages.

Messrs. Bagster & Sons' facsimile edition of the Scriptures has been of great service to many. It is a general convenience to have a small pocket-Bible answering page for page with the larger one used in systematic study. This convenience is met by the Gem edition, which, though in very small type, is printed with admirable clearness. It is, of course, provided with the facsimile references. (Prices from 3s. 6d.)

Young people and grown-ups will appreciate the charming book entitled The Littlest Ones, by Maud Humphrey and Elizabeth S. Tucker (6s. Wells Gardner, Darton & Co.), not only for the simplicity of its letterpress, but also for the artistic delineation of child-life displayed in the illustrations both in colouring and design. It is a worthy successor to the volume of "Little Grown Ups," which came out last year.

Esther's Charge. By E. Everett Green. (3s. 6d. Nelson & Sons.) A delightful little story, showing the influence a child may have upon her companions. Pickle and Puck are regular boys, up to plenty of mischief, who come to live with their Aunt and Cousin Esther, and the book is full of their adventures, and tells how the loving, unselfish character of their little playmate wins them to higher things.

The Bible Reading and Prayer Union's Daily Reading List for 1899 is now ready (½d., 10 for 4d., 100 for 2s. 6d. Morgan & Scott). The Bible Readings are consecutive Daily Readings from the more doctrinal and devotional books of the Bible; and from each of these daily portions one verse is selected as the Golden Text of the day, upon which the mind may rest. Along with the communion in Bible Reading there is also union in prayer.

With the title The Church and the Bible Mr. W. C. Procter has published a paper, which he recently read at a branch meeting of the National Protestant Church Union, on the relations of the Church of England and the Holy Scriptures. (3d. J. A. Thompson & Co., 24, Elliot-street, Liverpool.) Mr. Procter quotes thoughtfully from the Articles and the Homilies, and maintains a position loyal to God's Word and consistent with sound Protestant principles.

The "Wesley Guild Library," edited by Rev. W. L. Watkinson, has given us some excellent little books, all of them well suited for the instruction and help of young people. The latest accession to the series, by Rev. Arthur Hoyle, is entitled Depth and Power of the Christian Faith (1s. 6d. C. H. Kelly). In the course of twelve chapters some great topics are considered in a manner admirably calculated to help inquiring minds. We would specially mention "Heredity and Sin," "The Mystery of Pain," "Why Should we Ask?" and "The Unchanging Christ."

The times in which we live are so anxious and ominious that the study of prophecy cannot but go forward among Christian people. "A Clergyman of the Church of England" gives us the results of his research and thought in a chart, which, like others, is curiously made, but leaves no doubt as to the author's meaning. The title is Mystical Babylon; and the secondary title, "An Object-Lesson for the Times: A Help to the Study of Prophecy and a Caution to the Church at Large." The chart represents the symbols of the Book of Daniel and the Revelation, and there is an explanatory key. The interpretation is historical. (3d. Banks & Son, Racquet-court, E.C.)

Rarely have we read a memoir more touching than that of Rev. Wm. Spiller Cox, missionary to Sierra Leone, compiled by his father, and entitled Early Promoted. (2s. 6d. Sampson Low, Marston & Co.) As a lad, then while at Oxford, and afterwards at Sierra Leone, the young man was lovely in his life—all too brief as men reckon time. It is not surprising that a second edition of the volume should be issued in the course of a year. Being beautifully illustrated, it will make a welcome present to anyone interested in foreign missions, and particularly to a young man or woman having a like spirit of consecration.

A volume of sermons of exceptional worth, alike in point of substance and suggestiveness, is In the Day of the Cross, by Rev. W. M. Clow, B.D., of Barclay Church, Edinburgh. (3s. 6d. Sands & Co.) Twenty-one in number, these discourses are descriptive of the men and women and some of the notable things of the day of the crucifixion of Jesus. Beginning with Caiaphas, and ending with "The Rent Veil," this book deals in a very interesting manner with the outstanding characters and events. The pages will prove helpful to such as contemplate a devotional study of the words and deeds associated with the great day to which they refer.

We have more than once called attention to Rev. J. L. Thompson's deeply interesting book That Glorious Future! Or, Key to the Revelation. (3s. 6d. Morgan & Scott.) That editions should have followed one another in steady succession is gratifying in view of the fact that the pages are not only calculated to impress great truths upon students of all schools of interpretation, but also to assist materially those who desire an introduction to the study of prophecy. Basal principles are asserted, outstanding predictions considered, and the more prominent points of the Divine programme, as revealed for our admonition and comfort, are lucidly indicated.

A peculiar interest attaches to work among the blind; and, if anything, such work is specially affecting to sensitive Christians when the subjects of its solicitude are found in the dark places of the earth. Miss S. S. Hewlett, superintendent of St. Catherine's Hospital (C.E.Z.S.), Amritzar, Punjab, is well known as an author; but she has written nothing more touching or useful than the volume of stories of God's grace in work among the blind and others in India, entitled "They Shall See His Face" (Oxford: Alden & Co.; London: Simpkin, Marshall, & Co.) The stories are deeply pathetic, and form a strong constructive appeal for an extension of work among the blind in our great Eastern Dependency. It is hoped that this book, which is a gem in point of literary style, and has several fine illustrations, will press home a great need, and result in more workers going out to spend and be spent for the good of such as, though now sightless, will one day assuredly "see his face."

Cards and Calendars.—Messrs. Marcus Ward & Co. have issued Christmas cards and calendars in great variety. In the former articles there are many choice designs in figures, flowers, and landscapes, reproduced by photogravure, chromo-lithography, and other modern processes; some bear Scripture texts, others poems from various authors. Some of the best are in sets, and the prices suit all pockets. The calendars are equally attractive, and at once artistic and useful. They may be had in the form of blocks for hanging, with daily texts from Scripture or mottoes from great writers. The "Day unto Day" and "Daily Guide" cost 1s. each; the "Daily Portion" and "Watchwords" 6d. each. Other calendars are named after the authors followed—Shakespeare, Tennyson, Dickens, and Scott, and then there is "The Boudoir," all 1s. each. The fine art leaf calendars include the "Pansy" and the "Floral Year" (1s. each); also the "Mizpah," with Scripture texts, and "The Varying Year," with floral designs (1s. 6d. each).

Mr. W. Lancelot Holland has collected in volume form a number of his criticisms of the writings and sayings of men prominent in various sections of the Christian Church at the present day. The book is entitled The "Archbishop" of Canterbury and "Modern" Christianity. (5s. Lucas Collins, 319, Oxford-street, W.) That much modern teaching is open to serious objection is beyond doubt. On the one hand, there is disparagement of Scripture authority combined with the dissemination of rationalistic ideas; on the other hand, there is contempt for Reformation principles and coquetting with Romish doctrines and practices. These things have vexed many souls, and we have not ceased to expose their perversity and counteract their influence. Mr. Holland's point of view is distinctive; he speaks in the language of Mr. Benjamin Wills Newton. His style, moreover, is declamatory rather than persuasive; and herein lies the weakness of his book. There are notes on "Brethrenism" and various prophetic topics; and at the end of the book there is given a map of the ten federal kingdoms into which the Roman Empire will, our author maintains, probably be divided in days yet to come.

THE EVANGELISTIC FIELD.

Mr. Lane at Weston-super-Mare.

A WAVE of special blessing has passed over Weston-super-Mare as the result of Mr. W. R. Lane's mission in that town from Nov. 26 to Dec. 5. It was held under the auspices of the local Free Church Council. All the Nonconformist churches united in the invitation, and were joined in the actual work of the mission by representatives of other Christian bodies in the town. For weeks before much prayer had been offered individually and unitedly for a special manifestation of Divine power. And God richly answered. From the first it was evident that unusual interest had been awakened, the house-to-house visitation having been thoroughly done, and Mr. Lane's former visit ten years ago being still remembered; but on the closing nights hundreds were turned away from the Victoria Hall, and arrangements had to be made for overflow meetings at the Methodist Free Church.

The most striking meeting of the series was that of Sunday afternoon, when the Hall was filled with a great audience of men, many of them only too evidently churchless and Christless, but none of whom could fail to be impressed by an address on Purity, which was as remarkable for its faithfulness and directness of statement and appeal, as for the balance and restraint of its language, and the skill of the evangelist in handling difficult and searching truths.

Many professed during the meetings to have received definite spiritual blessing, and it is certain that additional names will be added to the list, which is drawn from practically all denominations in the town.

The dominant note in Weston just now is that of professed thankfulness to God, and deep gratitude for the visit and work of his servant. Many are remembering him prayerfully for his mission this week at Liverpool. May there be much joy in that city. T. J. L.

Mr. McNeill at Stornoway.

A further article on the visit of this evangelist to the island of Lewis (not Skye, as stated in our last issue) appeared in last week's Northern Weekly. Our contemporary says:—

The mission in Stornoway closes to-day (Dec. 8), after a season of powerful preaching, and not a little fruit it is to be hoped. A pleasing feature at all the meetings was the presence of large numbers of young men, among them many of the Royal Naval Reserve. The ministers, town and country, were also present in force.

The interest in the meetings deepened as the nights went on; on one occasion there was an attendance of nearly a thousand people.

As well as a passionate belief in his message, the evangelist has a passionate earnestness in declaring it. There is no hum-hawing, no compromise, no smooth word. He cares not whose corns he treads on. He cares not whose prejudices or susceptibilities he blisters. Scathing are his denunciations of sham and cant, worldliness and intemperance. He is evidently in keen sympathy with the man, "impulsive, warm-blooded," who without any preamble said, "I will follow Thee whithersoever Thou goest." He is just suited to the office he holds—a wandering evangelist, and his "queerness" brings him within reach of the net-fishes who give the ordinary fisherman a wide offing. Humour, ridicule, denunciation, appeal, anything to make us stop and face eternal realities. There should be no hesitating in wishing him godspeed in his work. It may require some magnanimity to do this, for he has been sledge-hammering us with zest. We will try to forget hits, and, I hope, be profitably exercised by the castigations we in the Highlands, as well as our friends in the Lowlands, deserve to get con amore from John McNeill. God bless him in leaving our Hebridean shores for the present, and long may his bow abide in strength.

Mr. McNeill is now at Cromarty, and goes to Nairn on January 15 for a fortnight's mission.

Mr. W. Forbes at Llandrindod.

THROUGH a committee composed of the representative men of the various Nonconformist places of worship of this town, Mr. W. Forbes was invited to hold an eight days' evangelistic and temperance mission. For the occasion the Assembly Room was engaged. The mission began Dec. 4 with afternoon and evening services, when Mr. Forbes spoke on "Heaven as a Home."

For the following five evenings he discoursed eloquently, humorously, and pathetically on the great evil of intemperance, and re-introduced the Blue Ribbon movement, so that by the end of the week, as he himself stated, "the town looked pretty blue." The pledge was taken by some as to whom we once were in despair. He also gave Bible-readings in the afternoons. Mr. Forbes spoke no less than four times on Sunday to crowded congregations. Congregational Minister.

Shankill Road Mission, Belfast.

The fine new pile of buildings whose opening was recorded in our columns two weeks ago have been resounding with Gospel songs every night since. The Weaver Brothers began special services last Sunday week, and the Lord has encouraged them, not only by large attendances, but by the spiritual quickening of the dead in sin. Mr. Bewley Weaver is a forceful and effective speaker, and his brother sings with sweetness and power. Their visit ends on Sunday next.

Evangelists' Movements.

Mr. H. Collins, of the Evangelization Society, has conducted a fourteen days' mission in the Mission Hall, Bishopsgate, Surrey, with blessed results. Many have testified to decision, and believers have been greatly cheered.

Mr. W. D. Dunn has concluded a very fruitful mission at Partick, Glasgow. One glad feature has been the blessing among men. Mr. Dunn is accompanied at present by Mr. McAusland, who sings the Gospel with great power. The evangelists are now working in the City Temple, Glasgow.

A Gospel evangelistic mission has recently been conducted by Mr. E. P. Telford at Spring Hill Baptist Chapel, Birmingham. Some 300 men and women were dealt with in the inquiry-rooms, and to the church there has come a gracious quickening. T. E. Titmuss, Pastor.

Rev. John Jameson has concluded three months' Gospel work under the Yorkshire Congregational Union, and each mission has been instrumental in leading many to religious decision. Not the least blessing has been the increase of spiritual life in the churches. Noonday addresses to crowds of working people have been an interesting feature of the missions. Numbers of young men have received the truth.

During the past six weeks, with little intermission, Mr. J. Walker, of Hawick, has been prosecuting evangelistic work with great earnestness in the Ettrick Valley, N.B. At the various centres in the district there has been much interest shown in the meetings, many travelling long distances to be present. Testimony has been given of real impression and good resulting from the labours of the evangelist.

A fifteen days' mission has been held at Headington Quarry Wesleyan Chapel by Mr. J. Harris, of the Evangelisation Society. The interest of the people was aroused from the beginning, and large congregations assembled nightly to listen to the earnest and faithful appeals of the preacher. Much spiritual good has resulted. Men and women who are seldom seen in church or chapel have come to the services, and some have been brought to Christ. A. E. V.

Mr. Henry Thorne has concluded a ten-days' mission at Lymington, Hants, arranged for by the Free Church Federation. The Sunday services were held in the various Free Churches, and the week-day services in the Town Hall. Very interesting and helpful Bible readings were given. There were special services for the young, for men only, and women only. The last meeting for praise and thanksgiving was taken part in by a large number of Christians, as well as young converts who had received blessing during the mission.

In connection with Broad-street Mission, Stirling, there has been held a fortnight's special evangelistic services, conducted by Mr. J. A. Smith, Superintendent of the Gordon Mission, Aberdeen. The mission works among the slums and tramps' lodging-houses, and has been carrying on this work for over twenty years, with many blessed results. The services conducted by Mr. Smith were held in the Old Court House. The workers were gladdened by the decision of several for Christ. Mr. Smith's addresses were characterised by great simplicity and clearness.

Obituary.

MR. J. GORDON SMITH.

The large circle of friends who esteem Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., for his great personal worth, and for his eminent public services, will deeply regret to learn that he has recently suffered a more severe bereavement. His only child, Mr. James Gordon Smith, died after a very brief illness on Sunday, Dec. 4, aged twenty-eight years. He was following in his father's steps, evincing great interest in spiritual and philanthropic work. He was taken suddenly ill with typhoid fever on Wednesday, Nov. 30, and succumbed four days later. He knew that he was dying, and faced death with the fortitude born of a simple faith in Christ. The great respect in which father and son were held was manifested by the immense concourse of Liverpool citizens who were present at Smithdown Cemetery on the occasion of the funeral. Gracious words were spoken by Rev. F. F. Muir, of Waterloo, concerning the high character of the deceased young man, his consideration for others, his amiability and kindness, which had won for him universal respect. The deepest sympathy will be felt for the bereaved and honoured father.

Personalia.

George Muller.—Dr. Pierson's Memoir of the late George Müller, of Bristol, will be published in March.

Mr. Wm. Joseph Lewis has removed from 54, Swanmore-road, Ryde, to 40, Weeks-road, Ryde, I.W.

Dr. John Smith, of Edinburgh, has been compelled to cancel all engagements, owing to illness. He is now somewhat better.

Two Nonconformist ministers are purposing to stand as Parliamentary candidates—Rev. Silas Hocking, for a Cornwall division, and Rev. G. Hay Morgan, for Tottenham division.

Countess Schimmelmann.—All those who have taken an interest in and followed with their prayers the missionary work in the hands of Countess Schimmelmann, will be rejoiced to hear, from a letter lately received from Herr F. W. Von Viebahn, dated Chicago, November 29, that the Countess is steadily recovering from the effects of her immersion and all but drowning twenty-nine days previously. She is, however, still weak and subject to slight feverish attacks.

Rev. Dr. Alexander Robertson, of Venice, has received a special honour at the hands of King Humbert, who has created him de motu proprio Cavaliere of the Order of St. Maurice and St. Lazarus. In a letter accompanying the decoration King Humbert said: "His Majesty intends in this way to demonstrate his goodwill towards you, and the singular consideration in which he holds your literary work, in which you have always manifested a lively affection for the city in which you reside and loyal sympathy for the House of Savoy."

Church of England.

CANON RAWNSLEY has declined the offer of the Bishopric of Madagascar.

By the resignation of the Bishop of Bangor, the Bishop of Bath and Wells becomes entitled to a seat in the House of Lords.

The Bishop of London has inducted Rev. Eric M. Farrar, a son of the Dean of Canterbury, to the living of St. John's, Hoxton.

An anonymous donor has sent a cheque for £300 to Rev. W. Carlile for the purpose of converting a building in Star-road, Kensington, into a Church Army lodging home.

Twenty-five men and twenty-nine women lately entered the training homes at the Church Army's headquarters in Edgware-road to complete their training for evangelists, mission-nurses, rescue and slum workers.

Addressing a meeting at St. Helens the Bishop of Liverpool dealt with the habitual practice of auricular confession, which, he said, was absolutely futile as a means of giving religious rest, and had no authority in the Anglican Church, the clergy of which were preachers and not confessors.

A scheme has been launched in Cape Town for building a new Anglican cathedral there. The Archbishop of Capetown explained the project last year and secured several large donations. The entire cost of the new cathedral is estimated at £150,000, and the eastern portion, which will first be built, will cost about £50,000.

Rev. J. W. Balding, of Baddegama, Ceylon, has informed the C.M.S. Committee that he has himself, in the course of seventeen years' missionary work, baptized no less than 530 heathen. Other missionaries have baptized even larger numbers—all carefully examined, prepared, and kept under probation. In all, there are 75,000 Protestant Christians in Ceylon.

A new society, entitled "The Church of England Men's Society," is being formed for the development of Church work amongst men. Its chief objects will be to promote and deepen spiritual life; to provide opportunities for social intercourse among members; and to band men together in a common effort to promote the extension of God's kingdom.

Congregational.

Rev. Dr. Berry hopes to be able to resume his pulpit work on New Year's Day.

A site has been secured for the erection of a new church and lecture hall at Wrexham, which, it is expected, will cost about £2000, towards which £400 has been already subscribed.

Rev. R. J. Campbell's church at Brighton proving too small to contain the rapidly increasing congregation, it is proposed to erect a new building, to seat 2000, with suites of rooms, etc., the total cost being estimated at £40,000.

Following the example of Mr. Perks, M.P., Dr. J. Guinness Rogers has decided to make a similar appeal to the Congregational churches for a fund of £250,000, to be raised by subscriptions of one guinea, payable in two years. He proposes to publish the details of his scheme next week.

Baptist.

Rev. Abel Parry, D.D., is taking charge for six months of the Welsh Church, Moorfields, London, which has for some years been without a minister.

Rev. H. E. Barrell, who has spent seven and a half years in India as pastor of churches at Bombay and Calcutta, has accepted the pastorate of Ceylon-place Church, Eastbourne.

Rev. W. J. Harris, who resigned the pastorate of Ceylon-place Church, Eastbourne, last July, in order to take a prolonged rest, is now able to accept engagements. Address, Brockenhurst, Hants.

At the re-opening of Bloomsbury Chapel, large congregations attended the special services, conducted by Rev. B. J. Gibbon. At the morning service the pastor dealt with the history of the chapel. On the Monday evening Mr. Augustine Birrell presided at a special meeting, and Rev. J. Morgan Gibbon spoke.

Methodist.

The Wesleyan churches of Cardiff contribute over £1500 a year for their foreign missions.

At the recent Wesleyan Convention at Manchester over £240,000 was promised towards the Century Fund.

The Wesleyan church at Leith lately celebrated its anniversary under bright and prosperous circumstances.

The new Wesleyan church in Leeds cost, including the site of schools, £6590. Rev. C. Garrett preached the opening sermon.

The Primitive Methodist church at Leith, which has been struggling for years amidst much difficulty and discouragement, purpose building a church of their own.

Rev. H. P. Hughes, speaking at Hanley, said he regarded the Free Church Movement as the greatest since the sixteenth century, and the only antidote to the Oxford Movement.

The work at Oxford-place Wesleyan Chapel, Leeds, has greatly prospered ever since, in 1894, it was turned into a mission. The building is crowded every Sunday night, and conversions are frequent, in the classes, the Sunday-school, and the homes of the people, as well as in the meetings.

Mr. Perks, M.P., Dr. M. Randles, and others addressed a meeting held in Manchester yesterday in aid of the Wesleyan Twentieth Century Fund of a million guineas. Contributions to the amount of £24,500 were promised on behalf of circuits in Manchester and the neighbourhood.

During the past year the Primitive Methodists have erected fifty new churches. Forty-seven are in the United Kingdom, one in Australia, and two in New Zealand. The value of these new churches is £68,522, and more than half of the cost has been paid. The extra sittings provided number 12,235.

It is intended to commemorate the death of Rev. Alexander Kilham—founder of the Methodist New Connexion—which took place Dec. 20, 1798, at Nottingham, at the premature age of thirty-six years. The President of the Conference is to preach at Epworth, Mr. Kilham's birthtown, in the afternoon, and speak at a meeting in the evening.

Of the twenty million dollars which it is proposed to raise throughout the Methodist Episcopal Church, by way of a Twentieth Century Thank-offering, ten millions are to be for the benefit of universities, theological seminaries, colleges and other schools, and ten millions for hospitals, orphanages, and homes for the aged, and for payment of debts on church properties.

The practice of "tithing" is finding favour in some of the Methodist Episcopal churches. Formerly, says an Ohio pastor, my church was largely dependent on other Methodist churches in the city, money that could not be begged from them being raised by entertainments, lectures, and concerts. The pockets of members contributed very little. Tithing has altered all this. "We now have about thirty 'tithers,' and our income from them alone is sufficient to meet all our expenses."

Presbyterian.

Rev. W. F. Macdonald, who returned recently from India, has been appointed additional chaplain to the Presbyterian troops now stationed in Egypt.

Edinburgh Free Presbytery has contributed one-seventh of the whole revenue of the Sustentation Fund of the Church for the past six months.

An affecting farewell sermon was preached in Blackburn Church, Aberdeen, by Rev. J. J. Tindall, who has resigned his charge on account of blindness.

Rev. Alexander Connell, B.D., of Regent-square, has been called to the pastorate of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Toronto. His decision is not yet known.

Dr. McGregor has celebrated his twenty-fifth anniversary as minister of St. Cuthbert's, Edinburgh. The doctor's eloquence draws great crowds to hear his sermons.

The Kirkcaldy Free Presbytery has approved of union with the Free Church, believing that it will be a decided step towards the union of the three great Presbyterian bodies in Scotland.

Rev. T. B. Nicholson, B.A., was inducted to the charge of the congregation recently formed in Cricklewood. The iron building, which will probably serve as a church hall when the permanent church is erected, was crowded.

In the English Presbyterian Church an effort is to be made to start, during the next fifteen or twenty years, at least 100 new congregations in the large towns of England. A new Church Building Fund has been started, which already amounts to £30,926.

Salvation Army.

General Booth will leave for Australia next month, returning in June next.

The social work in South Africa is receiving increased public and official recognition. Many of the foremost citizens are unanimous in declaring that the work is a boon to the community.

In Germany the Army has eighty-one stations, seven slum posts, a rescue home (which is always full), a maternity home, and 300 officers, all of whom, with the exception of thirty, have been raised in the country.

The General has just conducted the first Salvation Army meeting held in a public building in Geneva for sixteen years. Perfect order was maintained, and much blessing resulted. Geneva was formerly the scene of fearful violence against Salvationists.

Fallen Asleep.

Rev. E. GEOGHEGAN, Vicar of Bardsea, near Ulverston.—Rev. G. H. KIRWOOD, M.A., for thirty-six years Vicar of St. Martin's, Hereford.—Rev. D. Notes & Comments

THE fact that Christmas falls on a Sunday this year should make its celebration specially devout and spiritual in tone. The anniversary of the Birthday falling on the memorial of the Resurrection of the Lord Jesus gives the day a double significance, and calls for a holier rejoicing. To forget Him who "brought life and immortality to light by the Gospel" on the day thus doubly devoted to the consideration of holy things, would be an act of sad ingratitude.

Yet we hear of the intention of many religious people to keep their "usual" reunion and festival next Sunday. If this meant a time of more prayer, of deeper meditation on the great mystery of the Incarnation, of more earnest consecration to the Lord, it would be well. But if, as is likely, it means a secularisation of the Sabbath to the level of the average Christmas day, and the neglect of public worship in favour of feastings and the usual "recreations," the celebration of Christmas this year will tend to weaken the observance of every Lord's Day during the coming year on the part of the young people who indulge in it.

How far the practice of making presents at this season of the year has sprung out of a recognition of God's great gift to man—the gift of his Beloved Son—it would not be easy to say; but it is here, and it is almost universal. Observed in a right spirit, it "blesses him who gives and him who takes." The worth of the gift, its preciousness in the sight of the receiver, has little to do with its monetary value, the very smallness of which may give it a spiritual charm. In every home there are trifles which would not be worth half-a-crown in the market, and yet no money could buy them from their owners. May these proofs of tender love and wise thoughtfulness carry gladness and thankfulness into hearts all the world over.

We have heard of a fairly well-to-do minister who has been cheered by receiving from a wealthy lay friend the sum of £100, to be distributed in Christmas gifts among Baptist pastors not so liberally provided for as himself. It is not difficult to imagine the joy of him to whom the money was entrusted for distribution, that the power is his of ministering to so many of his brethren; and their quiet gladness who receive the welcome benefaction it is beyond words to tell.

The extraordinary growth of "light Christmas literature" during the last few years is a remarkable sign of the times. We are told that at least three monthly magazines will sell well over half a million of their extra Christmas numbers; about a dozen weeklies will reach that figure, and one firm this year hopes to issue three million copies of its various Christmas numbers. The vast majority of this class of reading, if it is on the whole fairly innocent, is at least extremely shallow and pointless in character. It can scarcely be called "literature," and has little to do with Christmas, except that it is published at this season. It is growing less and less religious in tone. Its aim being altogether commercial, no effort is made to maintain its tone. There is great peril, indeed, lest the spiritual atmosphere of Christmas be altogether swamped under this mass of ephemeral and aimless output of printed matter. To resist such a calamity should be the purpose of all who have the spiritual lessons of the time at heart.

We do not deem it necessary to append to every notice of work which appears in these pages the statement that contributions will be thankfully received, &c. Our readers may take this for granted, and also that we are pleased to receive and acknowledge in our donation list all sums which may be entrusted to us on behalf of the various missions which find a place in our columns.

On a succeeding page we give some particulars as to the approaching course of Bible study to be conducted by Professor White in different parts of London, beginning early in the New Year. In a recent communication to us, Mr. D. L. Moody takes pleasure in introducing Professor White to his friends in London. The Professor, he says, is held in great esteem in America as a spiritual man and as an able Bible student. Mr. Moody trusts that his ministry in London may be helpful and profitable to those who shall attend his classes.

Perhaps no one has a better or even so good an opportunity of discovering authentically the romantic and dramatic phases of individual religious experience as the tried evangelist. Rev. W. H. M. H. Aitken is now the doyen of English evangelists; he has compiled a book which he entitles "The Romance of Christian Work and Experience," and which contains a remarkable variety of striking facts relating to the results of mission work. We hope in an early issue to give an adequate review of the volume, and content ourselves meantime with saying that it is likely to become classic as a repertory of noteworthy examples of the power of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. The publishers are Messrs. J. F. Shaw & Co.; price 6s., with portrait of author.

It is very suggestive to observe how men of different churches are affected by the thoughts one of another. For example, it is well known that Dr. Dale's work on the Atonement was a standard authority among High Churchmen, and it is equally well known that Nonconformist ministers of all denominations were diligent readers of Canon Liddon's "Lectures on the Divinity of our Lord." In like manner, all down the generations men of various views have read Augustine; and in more recent times Wesley's life and writings have been the educational heritage of Calvinists as well as Arminians. A still more noteworthy instance of spiritual oneness among Christians is exhibited in the fact that all sections of the Church sing hymns which have come from the hearts and pens of men and women belonging to every communion—ancient and modern, orthodox and unorthodox. Underneath external differences, which as individuals we may not overlook, there is in the breasts of true Christians a measure of universal and eternal truth which combines them all in one.

How much can be done by a hearty and united effort in the direction of liquidating debts on churches has been finely illustrated during the past month at suburban Beckenham. In October last the amount of the debt was £4,500. A wealthy friend of the cause offered £1,000 on condition that the rest was contributed by the end of the year. The pastor, Rev. T. Eynon Davies, threw himself into the work, and by to-day not only is the whole amount cleared off, but £500 more has been found for structural alterations. Here is an example for rich and poor. By earnest effort and a holy emulation, and an abounding faith, how the word impossible recedes, and barrier after barrier of difficulty melts away. The great need of our times surely is faith, and ever more faith.

General Booth, on the last evening of the recent gatherings at Exeter Hall, preached from the words, "The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and we are not saved." An old-fashioned sermon from an old-fashioned text. The congregation was largely composed of Salvationists and other Christians, but out of the remainder 112 came forward seeking rest of soul. A registration room had been arranged, into which these were afterwards taken and their names registered for subsequent inquiry and visitation. Method and organisation are necessary to a thorough accomplishment of the work of winning souls.

Mr. Bramwell Booth has issued his "Personal Impressions of the Social Work of the Salvation Army" in an eminently readable pamphlet of a hundred pages. Its startling information, indignant protests, wise counsels, benevolent suggestions and spiritual exhortations commend it to every one who seeks to tread in the steps of Him who went about doing good.

Mr. W. T. Stead has returned home from his visit to the European capitals and from his interviews with the Czar of Russia with a great idea in his mind of a "Pilgrimage of Peace." He believes that America will send some of its foremost citizens to the conference to represent the peaceable desires of its people. To this number Great Britain and other nations will add contingents, and the combined representatives are to visit various European capitals. The whole body are to lay before the Czar the expression of the civilised world's wish that his splendid conception of disarmament may become an actual fact. We sincerely wish God-speed to such a Pilgrimage. But we will not forget that above peoples, princes, kings and emperors is the Eternal God who worketh all in all; our hope is in Him. Thankful as we are for all that the churches have done to promote the Czar's desire, we believe that still more might be done by Christians in every town, irrespective of denomination, coming together for united prayer and supplication. While public men act in their way, let Christians act together as Christians.

The Protestant clergy who took part in the Kaiser's pilgrimage to Jerusalem, are voicing their deep dissatisfaction with the treatment they received in the Holy Land as compared with that shown to the "non-Evangelical clergy." "The whole apparatus of Evangelical Christendom, for whose sake the festival was originally said to be instituted, was thrust into a secondary place." This is the complaint of the Saxon Kirchenblatt. The root of the evil lay in the fact that the motives controlling the festival were political throughout, whereas they were supposed to be religious. Here is another significant illustration of the mischief wrought by mixing up politics and religion. The latter becomes a stalking-horse for the former. "Diplomacy" takes the place that should be occupied by simple faith. God is worshipped with a view to political ends. The one remedy for this gigantic evil, which has infected most of the great historic Churches, and blighted much of their influence, is to act on the principle laid down by our Lord: "To Cæsar the things of Cæsar, and to God the things of God."

The reception which the Empress of China gave the other day to several Western ladies who went to offer her birthday congratulations sets at rest the question of the fate of the Emperor; he still lives, and was present and took part in the ceremony. This is some pledge that the progressive ideas associated with his name may yet have an opportunity of revival. We see that Dr. Griffith John believes that the "present reaction cannot last, and that before long there will be another start." One of the Emperor's chief friends and co-workers, Kang Yu-wei, still lives, and Dr. John says that the seed which he and the Emperor have sown is also safe, and the harvest will come. Should the life of the Emperor, who has come through such a serious crisis, be lengthened out beyond that of the Empress, then we may expect some great and beneficent changes. The hopes of two of the greatest nations upon earth, China and Russia, humanly speaking, depend upon the lives of two young men.

Deaf and Dumb in Ireland.—The mission to these affected ones continues to do a good work in "providing them with ministers, who travel all over Ireland, visiting them in the most isolated country districts, collecting them into meetings, and preaching to them the glad tidings of salvation in the finger and sign language." Their temporal wants are not forgotten; the mission-[illegible] employment for them whenever possible.—The Hon. Treasurer of the Mission, Mr. E. Allworthy, 86, Donegall Street, Belfast.

THE REVIVAL.

1859—1899.

GOD is always ready to revive his work, and to answer the prayer of his people —"Wilt Thou not revive us again that thy people may rejoice in Thee?"

There has been much prayer for Revival, and our columns testify that in many quarters there is a fixed belief that the Hearer of prayer is already answering that cry.

In order to create or increase interest in this all-important subject, we are preparing a sheet entitled THE REVIVAL, containing accounts of the Revival of 1859, Revival hymns, extracts from Finney's writings on Revivals, and other matter of the same character.

The paper will consist of eight pages quarto, and will be supplied at 6d. per dozen copies, post free. A reduction on larger quantities for distribution direct from the publishers.

The first issue will be 100,000, and in order to make it known, parcels will be sent to Pastors, Evangelists, Superintendents of missions, Sabbath-school Teachers, Tract Distributors, and others interested, at the cost of the postage only, which will be at the rate of one penny for every eight copies. Early application is requested.

We hope that all our readers will co-operate in this endeavour.

THE REVIVAL will be continued occasionally, or monthly, or weekly, as the interest it excites and the orders received may indicate.

The Divine Challenge.

By W. MONRO COLLINGS.

IT is our decided and profound conviction that a wave of revival is already rolling in upon us. It has come; it has touched us; these eyes have beheld it; and silence would be a crime. Without a doubt our God has manifestly appeared; the quickening spirit is once more powerfully at work, and many hearts are being awakened to the consideration of the all-important claims of eternity. And this means that the doctrine of revival is "the present truth" which the Holy Spirit is forcing upon the heart of the Church to-day. This is indeed a solemn thought, and one that should command universal attention. For we can never get away from the fact that power and blessing always flow along the channels which God has Himself prepared.

But when we tell men this, some will reply that they do not see any signs of an awakening in their own immediate neighbourhood, and will go on to ask how they can obtain "a little reviving" and "times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord."

The answer to this question is found in the Divine challenge:—

"Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove Me NOW herewith, said the Lord of Hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing that there shall not be room enough to receive it."

Such is the challenge, but who is ready to accept it? Look at it closely, and consider what it means. There are two parts to it. First, what we have to do; and then, what God will do. In other words, if we want revival, we must prepare for it, and get ready to receive it. There is a condition attached to the promise of revival, and as soon as we observe the condition God begins to work. Ask, and ye shall receive. Draw nigh to God, and He will draw nigh to you. Bring in all the tithes, and put Him to the test, and God will empty out a blessing that there shall not be room enough to receive it.

When the three kings ask for water they are told that God cannot send it until they have made the valley full of ditches. When God is about to work a miracle in the woman's pot of oil, she is told to go and borrow other empty vessels from her neighbours. And when the ascended Christ was about to pour out the Pentecostal gift of the Holy Ghost, the disciples had to wait and tarry and pray in the upper room according to the word of their Lord.

"Behold, I send the promise of my Father upon you; but tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high." "And when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all, with one accord, in one place. And suddenly there came a sound from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting. And there appeared unto them cloven tongues, like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them, and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues as the Spirit gave them utterance."

These illustrations of the philosophy of revival, all go to show that, if there is to be a genuine and widespread awakening which will reach out to the uttermost parts of the earth, you and I and all of us must do our part and take our share in prayer and preparation for the work of God. Brethren in Christ, and workers everywhere, what will you do with your Lord's challenge? Will you heed it and pay in your tithes; or, neglect it and bind the arm of Omnipotence with unbelief?

God forbid! God forbid! At this moment, and on this spot, here I am, Lord, and all that I have, for thy service and kingdom and glory!

A Tour in South Africa.

OUR friends Mr. T. B. Miller and Mr. H. W. Maynard, who are respectively the chairman and treasurer of the South Africa General Mission, have recently paid a visit to some of the principal stations of the Mission. Arriving at Cape Town they visited our Soldiers' Home and Sailors' Rest before visiting Dr. Andrew Murray at Wellington. Leaving Wellington, they travelled through the Great Karoo, the Orange Free State, to Johannesburg. They were greatly interested in this city of gold, one of the modern wonders in rapid city building. The work of the mission amongst the natives working in the mines was witnessed, and addresses by interpretation given, while services in our large hall there were held and addressed by our visitors. Passing on by the Netherlands Railway they crossed into Natal, visiting our Zulu Girls' School (now numbering thirty-four) at Maputa, and from there they were driven on to our new mission station in the Ingogo Valley, a most needy spot.

Maritzburg was visited, and a very happy evening in our Soldiers' Home much enjoyed. In Durban they had plenty to do. Native services in our two churches and in the native barracks took up a good portion of their first Sunday, while in the afternoon they had the privilege of witnessing the baptism of thirty-two Zulus, the first of our work in Durban. Large open-air meetings were held in the town, when many of our countrymen heard the Gospel faithfully preached.

Our first Indian station at Phœnix was visited as well as the Indian location. A journey by train and cart was made to a new district called Dumisa. We had a large gathering of Zulus on the Sunday they were there, when several addresses were given. Some idea of the need was gathered by the dozens of native kraals which were seen on all sides nestling amongst the hills.

Returning to Durban, we had a good public meeting on behalf of the Mission. Durban was left for Delagoa Bay, where the work of the Swiss missionaries was seen. Sailing round the coast again, East London was reached, and a very happy visit paid to our mission station at Nkanga, in Pondoland, where services were held and the workers much encouraged.

W. Spencer Walton.

A Bequest and a Gift.

A CHRISTMAS HOMILY.

A FATHER is dying. It is hard to pass away from wealth, and luxury, and love: and he is leaving a home where all these have abounded. But a gleam of satisfaction rests on the wasted face, with the thought, "My wife and children are comfortably provided for." And he dies in peace; for he was a good man, trusting in the atoning sacrifice of Christ for eternal salvation.

But was he a good steward? We are taking a case partly imaginary, partly real, but a case typical of thousands of professing, and no doubt real, Christians, who are living and dying to-day. Riches have increased, bringing power for blessing, but with their strange, magnetic attraction they have drawn the heart to set its affections upon them. They can do so much in improving the social position, in creating an atmosphere of luxury, and alas, too often, of effeminacy as well; "Men will praise thee, when thou doest well to thyself;" and so the accumulation, and the expenditure over self-gratification go on. Wife, children, friends are thought of and cared for without stint, but how about Him "who giveth all"?

Let unfortunate collectors answer. I have been earnestly assured by one of this class that it was impossible for him to give the small sum of a sovereign to a case of need, as times were not so good, and he felt the necessity of "retrenchment"; but the retrenchments never affected anything but his charities. He died soon afterwards leaving nearly a quarter of a million to his family, and without a single legacy to Christian or philanthropic work!

"Leaving"—ah, that is it! No riches of earthly metal are current coin in the Heavenly Kingdom; and so it is left to the children—an act most laudable in itself, and referred to in Apostolic writing as a duty, but to be observed

WITHIN DUE LIMITATIONS.

Is it likely that wealth will descend to them laden with blessing if it has been amassed selfishly and with no true regard to the claims of Christ and of his representatives, the poor? On the contrary, the training in thoughtless, selfish habits of luxury has been no fit equipment to the heirs for a wise use of great possessions; they have missed even the discipline of honest toil in its acquisition, and we know, by continual observation, how little happiness or usefulness comes in its train.

This leaving of immense fortunes that have never been purified and consecrated by systematic and liberal gifts to God is an evil of our times that pleads our apology for its mention here. But it also serves as a marvellous contrast to another bequest dictated by "greater love" than that of any earthly father or friend. The Lord Jesus was dying. He had emptied Himself of all that man or angels could call riches, and had become poor; so poor that He had no home, nor any provision for the rites of sepulture when the greatest "decease" that had ever taken place in the world was accomplished. But He gathered around Him his close personal followers—his children truly—and uttered in speech his last will and testament. He to whom the universe would have yielded its choicest treasures asked of it nothing for his chosen ones. He drew rather on his own wealth of character—"My peace I leave, my peace I give."

When the day of Pentecost was fully come the Divine Spirit administered that legacy, and we see the superiority of the moral over the material nowhere more strikingly than in the grandeur with which the lives of these poor, and, until then, ordinary men were invested, when the power from on high

BECAME THEIR HERITAGE.

Only a few days afterwards, Peter, with his prompt outspokenness, had to confess to an entirely empty purse in presence of great need, but he and the beloved disciple met that need as the riches of Nero himself would not have enabled them to do. Paul similarly proved that Christ had made no mistake in his manner of "providing for his own," for though he summed up his financial position as "having nothing," yet, by a strange paradox, he declared his possession of "all things."

Is this Christmas Homily apparently wide of the mark in presence of the exigencies of modern life and the increasing value that in many quarters is put upon wealth, so that even good men seem to think the greatest proof of fatherly affection is to leave a considerable fortune to their children?

It may be opportune if it draw attention, however slightly, to the dangers and responsibilities of wealth. There is no doubt that it can do much when used in stewardship for God; but surely it was not without significant meaning that Christ Himself spoke of the deceitfulness of riches and of their terrible power, if not closely watched, to choke the spiritual growth of their possessors.

So, whilst the Advent season is filling the air with gladness and expectation, let wealth find its truest and happiest use in "providing for the sick and needy." Let young people be taught, by example as well as by precept, that if they would have a happy Christmas, it will be by making it happy for someone else, and that the Lord Jesus Christ, whose birthday they are keeping, will say of any kindness shown to some lonely-hearted one for his sake,

"YE HAVE DONE IT UNTO ME."

No one is yearning with such infinite desire for our happiness this Christmas-tide as the Lord Jesus Himself. Young or old, rich or poor, He has a gift for each—a peace that will make us unselfish and considerate in prosperity, contented and trustful when the shadows of adversity fall; and that will give calm heroism of spirit as we look onward into the unknown future, or around on the circle that has contracted, and the home that has been emptied since last Christmas. Christ's peace can suffice. Only let the hand of faith quietly grasp it, and it will bring, wherever it comes, a happy Christmas.

Percy Park, Tynemouth. M. C. F.

Tunis.—Mr. A. V. Liley (10, rue de la Medressa Es Slimania) writes:—"It is not permitted me to record multitudes brought together to listen to the Gospel, or many instances of conversions; but the way of the Lord is being prepared, and his kingdom is more in evidence in North Africa to-day than it has ever been before. It is a work of some sameness, but not devoid of interest; of plodding, but not without encouragement. Conversations with a large class of Arabs lead me to believe there is a general dissatisfaction with Mohammedanism and a desire for better things."

Hermann Warszawiak.—The New York papers of December 7 report that Hermann Warszawiak has filed a petition in bankruptcy, placing his liabilities at 29,167dols., of which 27,892dols. are classified as secured to creditors. Of the secured creditors Madame Nicolas, of San Remo, claims 25,952dols. for money lent. There are no actual assets. By way of explaining his position, the debtor says he was put to great expense in defending the charges made against him by the New York Presbytery and in carrying on his mission work among the Jews.

The Demon of War and the Prince of Peace.

By J. F. T. HALLOWES, M.A.

HOW terrible this armed peace of the nations is, this parody of peace, especially at Christmas time, which is so naturally associated with "Peace on earth, goodwill to men!" What a spectacle is Europe! The dividing lines of great states are marked out by fortresses which frown at each other across their frontiers. Their ports are thronged with war vessels; their best manhood is uniformed, trained, and armed, or has been, or is about to be.

The military and naval incubus of immense armaments ever increases, and the long-suffering taxpayer has to give a large and still larger proportion of his hard-earned gains. Some of the best modern science is always plotting how it can put into the hands of the naval and military Apollyons of the day weapons yet more deadly than those it has before invented. Retail slaughter is not sufficient, the war-fiend demands wholesale destruction; and a perverted science obligingly comes forward to aid this infernal purpose. There is but little hunger after righteousness, but the earth-hunger of the European nations seems greater than ever, and having divided Africa among themselves, China apparently awaits the same destiny. One of our dailies quotes Emerson, who tells us that "love has never yet been tried as the basis of a state," and the editor goes on to say, "We have tried well-nigh everything else, and

ALL HAS BROKEN DOWN.

But, thank God, an end will come and soon it may be. The reign of the god of War will be suddenly terminated by the advent of the Prince of Peace. Scripture knows no millennium gradually introduced by the combined influences of Christianity and civilisation. Scripture knows no millennium of Evolution, but rather one of Revolution. The "stone cut out of the mountain without hands" is suddenly to descend upon the great composite image, seen in the vision by Nebuchadnezzar, representing the world's empires, and, dashing them to pieces, is to take their places, to enlarge to a mountain and to fill the earth.

Many voices have spoken to the nations of Europe—"Lay down your arms!" Christianity, Commerce, Socialism, all have commanded, all have pleaded. But the warriors have gripped them more tightly, or have laid them down merely to take up more deadly weapons.

Only He who once laid down his life on earth has power to say effectually to the nations, "Lay down your arms," and He will say it so effectually that "nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." The world is awaiting this great commanding word. The rival schools of prophecy, Futurist and Historical, amidst minor diversities of interpretation agree in this, that the Son of God will come to inaugurate universal peace.

Then shall the hideous weapons of destruction adorn the museums of the millennium to show the madness of the nations, and to be a perpetual reminder to men of a happier age that they continue in full subjection to Christ, Who has delivered them from the accursed war spirit—the abomination of desolation.

His Son—Born of a Woman.

THE Incarnation is, without doubt, the very soul of Christianity. It explains the person of Christ; gives absolute authority to His teaching and infinite value to His Sacrifice. To minimize the truth of the Incarnation is to imperil the whole Christian Faith. If Jesus was not "God manifest in the flesh," then his person was a living falsehood, his teaching was unreliable, and his death was a pitiable exhibition which served no good purpose.

The dilemma is absolute—strict logic compels us to accept Jesus Christ as our Lord and God, or to reject Him altogether. That compromise which salutes the humanity of our Lord, while it reprobates his Divinity, has abundantly demonstrated its untruth and want of vitality, by its lack of the power of expansion. All healthy living things possess, in their spheres, the double power of endurance and expansion; the negation of our Lord's Divinity has neither of these properties, for the simple reason that its heart is sterile.

At this Christmastide, however, Christians are more concerned in rejoicing in their faith than in repelling the falsehoods of their adversaries. God is with us—He has come in our flesh, we can do no other than sing our Gloria in excelsis. But the mind as well as the heart rejoices in the Incarnation, for the more deeply we ponder over this mystery the more clearly do we perceive in it

THE SUBLIME WISDOM OF OUR GOD.

1. First we perceive that the idea of the Incarnation is sublime, reasonable, true. It is needful for the contentment of man's heart. The cry of man has ever been for his God. One of the earliest words in the Bible voices for us the cry of all hearts in their profoundest depths, "O that I knew where I might find Him!" Man, when enlightened by the Spirit of God, desires his God to be near to him. He wants to know that his God can really enter into his human life, understand it, and purify it. He wants his God to redeem him by a real personal contact with him. God Himself has placed that ineradicable passion within the creature's nature. The Incarnation is the Divine answer to it. The heart cries out, "Will God dwell with man upon the earth?" and when the Spirit points out Bethlehem and its consequences, it changes its cry to an exultant "Emmanuel, God with us."

The idea of the Incarnation is also worthy of God. God is love, and the great property of love is to seek out objects and overwhelm them with affection. Love must be near its object: the love of God comes near to us—the creatures made in his image and likeness. When love is joined to Omnipotence, any question of ways and means is instantly resolved. He who wills to communicate Himself to man can do it, simply because He is God. The very idea, therefore, of an Incarnation is sublime because it meets the requirements of a Divine expansive love, and the implanted

YEARNING OF THE HUMAN HEART.

2. Next we perceive that the lengthy preparation for the Incarnation is also sublime, reasonable, true. Such an event as the coming into human conditions of the Second Person of the Most Holy Trinity demanded a suitable preparation; for the Incarnation is God's perfect work, and as such it exhibits, in the most perfect manner, those characteristics of preparation which mark all God's work. The material world, upon whose surface we live, was slowly fashioned in far off ages by fire and water ere it was fit to be the theatre of man's activity. The revelation of the Divine character was also slowly given. In inorganic matter God revealed his power; later, in organic matter, God revealed his life; later still, through his Word, He revealed his heart. And that last revelation was progressive through prophet and priest, all in preparation for that final and perfect Word—the Divine Son. The unthinking ask why Jesus came not into the world earlier than He did. St. Paul answers them in one comprehensive phrase—Jesus came "in the fulness of times"—not a moment too late. So far, then, from the Incarnation contradicting science and reason, it is in magnificent accord with God's universal law of

PREPARATION AND PROGRESSION.

3. Further we perceive that the human expectation of this event is in keeping with the fitness of things. If the Incarnation had been prepared for on the Divine side, it had also been anticipated on the human side, and since the desire for a God "near at hand" has been implanted by God Himself in the human breast, this anticipation of God's response to the creature's craving is perfectly natural. As the time for the manifestation drew near, the human expectation became more keen. Even the heathen, through their poets, hailed the unknown, coming Emancipator. All the world was expectant.

The Hebrews, instructed by God Himself, were in possession of all details of the coming of the Saviour. Their prophetic books bore unmistakable testimony to the grand event. The Coming One was portrayed in advance. his race, his family, his epoch, his mother, his adorers, his residence, his works, his manner, his death, his resurrection, and his reign, were all depicted. This is unique. Jesus stands absolutely alone in being saluted before his birth. His is the one cradle at which human spirits knelt centuries before a human eye beheld it. For four millenniums He had been expected—the expectation is in strict keeping with the sublime character of all the facts. Let the freethinkers reserve their derision for some outworn superstition; the crib at Bethlehem merits their profoundest reverence.

4. The manner of the Incarnation is also sublime, befitting, and true. Is Jesus "God in the flesh"—both Divine and human? Then the human mother is necessary to Him. Is He the Son of Man—the true representative of all men? Then there must be no restricting mark of nationality or of race placed upon Him.

Is He an extraordinary person, born for an extraordinary work? Then an extraordinary entrance into human affairs is demanded for Him. Is He to adequately represent mankind in all phases? Then He must commence at the very beginning, and embrace our condition from infancy onwards.

5. Finally, the surroundings of his coming are sublime, befitting, and true. The Incarnation was a self-emptying—a becoming poor—a laying aside of glory. The kingdom which our Lord came to found was not of this world. The doctrine that He preached was self-denial—his manifestation, therefore, must be in accord with his design. State and splendour

WOULD BE OUT OF HARMONY.

Poverty, obscurity, rejection, cold and exposure—these were the accompaniments of his coming. Ah, how Divinely fitting they were! He also came quietly, and at the dead of night, when men were asleep. The Bethlehemites rose the next day and were not aware that anything out of the common had happened during the night. And yet the world had commenced a new life while they slept. This quietness is in keeping with God's methods. He rarely speaks in earthquake, fire, or whirlwind: his is the still, small voice. Light smites the earth so quietly that the lightest sleeper is not awakened when the shaft falls. Wheat grows without noise, hidden and soundless springs feed the river whose swelling flow announces itself to all. Jesus Christ is Light, Bread, Water. He came in these higher capacities as do his material emblems in the lower world.

Behold then this chain forged of five unbreakable links. The idea of the Incarnation; the preparation for it; the anticipations of it; the manner of it; and the surroundings of it—are all sublime, befitting, and true.

Let us then who are Christians, with the plenitude of our reason and the fulness of our hearts, salute the God-Man this Christmastide; confessing with Simon Peter "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." And, adoring Him, let us also, like the Magi, open to Him our gifts, laying at his feet with gladness of heart whatever riches He has endowed us with. FREDERICK C. SPURR.

Johannesburg Compounds.

IT is some time since I sent you any notes on our work; and as we prize the prayers of God's intercessors, I am constrained to send you a few lines. Our openings have increased, and our staff correspondingly; and no denominational differences have divided us, although our workers have come from seven different sections of the professing Church. Our stations now dot the reef from its east and west extremities, at about four miles' distance apart, and out of about a hundred compounds there are only three or four into which our workers are not permitted to enter. Still, we are only touching the fringe of this dense mass of heathenism, gathered from every part of South Africa. Each of our workers has a parish of from ten thousand to fifteen thousand souls, and we shall not feel that the work is being efficiently overtaken until we have an evangelist and a school at each compound. The Lord is encouraging us, and every week souls are being added to the Church, an encouraging number have lately been publicly baptised.

We do not prescribe a set period of probation nor a special theological preparation before baptism, but we insist on repentance, as an essential to salvation, and fruits meet for repentance as an evidence of true repentance, prior to baptism. One of the evidences of sincerity in abandoning the old life for which we look is renunciation of tobacco in all its forms, and intoxicating drink, native as well as European; another is restitution to and reconciliation with all fellow men as far as possible; and it is surprising how the hidden things which would otherwise have lain buried and festering in the soul are thus brought to light and cleaned out preparatory to the full incoming of the Holy Ghost. If this Gospel were fully preached in the home churches, what masses of hidden corruption would be exposed and cleansed out of the bodies which should be "temples of the Holy Ghost."

The value of this field as a seed-bed for South Africa may be judged in measure from the following incident. At a week evening service at one of our halls last month there were eighty natives present; sixteen of these came to the penitent form, and these represented eight distinct tribes. This is virtually repeated at every one of our stations. Last year some Basutos returning from these fields to their homes in Basutoland were used of God to start a work of revival from which the missionaries traced

OVER THREE HUNDRED PROFESSED CONVERSIONS.

At our last conference of workers, in September, we resolved to endeavour specially to instruct our congregations in the blessedness of giving, and to interest them in the work of the Lord in other fields than our own, by holding missionary meetings amongst them once a quarter. As if to set his seal on this resolution, the Lord rejoiced our hearts by sending one of our baptised converts (who had returned to his home in the north of the Transvaal) one hundred and thirty miles to Johannesburg to tell us that he and others had started evangelistic work in the villages up there, and the people had now sent him down to ask us for an evangelist. We have promised him one, and are now encouraging the congregation where this man was converted to undertake to support their own evangelist.

The law prohibiting the sale of liquor to natives has again been before the Second Volksraad, and, notwithstanding herculean efforts on the part of the licensed victimisers and influence in high places, it has been re-affirmed. It is now definitely rumoured that the First Raad will not confirm the law, but will attempt to introduce the Government's proposal for the Gothenburg system. We believe that as prayer has prevailed so far in preventing the opening of these floodgates of iniquity, it will yet prevail, in spite of the executive and the First Raad. Brethren, pray for us.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, December 25.

Exodus xiii.

THE first for God! The first-born moments of the day; the first-born day of the week; the first-born of strength and thought and love; the first fruits of our increase! Would that we might add, the first-born of our children! These gifts on the part of his children emanate from God's great gift to us. It is not that we love Him, but that He loves us. We do not procure his tender pity, but He steps out of the infinite to redeem; and having redeemed, asks us to remember the great price of our redemption, and its appeal for our consecration.

Four times over we are told in this chapter of the strength of hand with which God redeems; and repeatedly the people are bidden to keep this ordinance in its season from year to year. His strength calls for ours.

How tender it is that God should lead us about! It is He that precedes us in the pillar of cloud by day and of fire by night. The cloud is his chariot; the light in it, the Shekinah of his presence, invisible by day, but apparent against the background of darkness. The Angel of Jehovah is said to have led the pilgrim hosts, and we know from many passages, especially from Stephen's words, that this was none other than our Saviour Christ (Acts vii. 38). But He leads us about.

We are impetuous. We desire to be led straight to the realization of our hopes. We would make a bee-line for the land of Promise. But God knows the formidable difficulties that beset that route, and so takes the circuitous path which must needs include the Red Sea, Sinai, Elim, and Marah.

MONDAY, December 26.

Exodus xiv.

You have put God between you and your sin. The blood of the Lamb intercepts the incidents of deserved punishment; now be sure to put Him between you and adverse circumstances. Let the Angel of God in his pillar of cloud stand between you and Egypt, brightness for the one and midnight for the other. The carnal Christian puts circumstances between himself and God; the believer places God as a belt of protection around him, through which he views the battalions of Egypt with composure.

When such a relationship is adopted, we must stand perfectly still until we receive our marching orders. Stand still, though every moment incites to action. Stand still, though friends urge you to take some step. Stand still, though to do so is adjudged to be fatalism. You positively have no other course. If you do not know what to do wait till you do know. To act in a panic is to make mistakes, the consequence of which you will sadly rue.

Presently the second command will be heard, "Go forward." Forward, though the ocean waves furiously forbid. Forward, though it seems to inevitable destruction. We live by faith not by sight. By faith Israel passed through the Red Sea as on dry ground. Only those who are willing to stand still are bidden to go forward; only those who go forward can see God's salvation, which unfolds a step at a time; only God's people can see his salvation. The Egyptians essayed, but were drowned.

TUESDAY, December 27.

Exodus xv.

This sublime ode, sung by a redeemed people on the shores of the sea, out of which they had been born on that memorable night, falls naturally into three divisions.

(1) What God is. Strength in the day of battle; song in the hour of victory; salvation always. The God of our fathers and our own; the mighty champion of his people as He girds Himself for war. Let us praise Him. Notice that the Holy Ghost mentions the sighs and tears and prayers of Israel in a sentence or two, but He records the song of praise that rang out over the waves with elaborate care. Praise is comely for us, and dear to God.

(2) What God does for his foes. They are cast into the sea, and covered by the deep. It is ill for man to set himself against God; as well might thorns fight the fire. Thus Philip of Spain saw his navy shattered on the shores of the North Sea, and Elizabeth engraved the medal struck to commemorate his defeat with the words, "Thou didst blow with thy wind, the sea covered them, they sank like lead." If you will not have God as Saviour, you must encounter Him as sovereign.

(3) What God does for his friends. He leads forth the people which He has redeemed. He guides them in his strength to his holy habitation. He brings them in and plants them in the place which He had made for them to dwell in. Claim that He should do all this for you. He who has brought you out from Egypt can bring you into Canaan. Be not discouraged, however, if on the way to the land, you have to pass through the wilderness of Zin, sometimes without water, and at others standing on the margin of Marah's brackish pools.

WEDNESDAY, December 28.

Exodus xvi.

Bread of Heaven, on Thee we feed. Too often we have turned from thy simple strength for the luxuries of Egypt. Our depraved appetites have sought the leeks and onions of the land of our captivity! Too often have we forgotten all the wonderful dealings of the past, and supposed that we must perish of hunger! Now teach us to be content to be fed on angel's fare, and to find our true nourishment in the Bread of God, which came down from heaven, of which, if a man eat, he cannot hunger or die.

Baptized with the dew of the Holy Ghost, the Bread of God fell on the face of the wilderness world. Men knew Him not, whom God had given for their hunger, but as many as received Him, to them He gave the right to become the sons of God.

There must be a daily appropriation of Jesus Christ. Every man must gather it morning by morning according to his eating. It is a mistake to postpone this holy exercise until the sun has waxen hot. Nor should we gather for ourselves alone, but "every man for those that are in his tent;" and here is the perpetual marvel that those who have but little time for perpetual fellowship, owing to necessary duty, but who in some brief space take to themselves the blessed provisions of God, have no lack, whilst those who take the most can never obtain more than they actually need.

But even our gathering must never interfere with the perpetual rest of the soul. In our inner life, the gathering and the sabbath-keeping may be combined as they could not be in the era of shadows and types.

THURSDAY, December 29.

Exodus xvii.

The preceding chapter gives us in type the human life and words of Jesus; this tells of the Holy Ghost, Who was not given till He was glorified. The smitten rock is the Crucified Saviour; the issuing water is the Holy Spirit, which they who believe on Him receive.

One day in Jerusalem, when all the city was decked with greenery, and the housetops covered with booths to commemorate the desert march, the priests brought up from the Pool of Siloam a brimming vessel, and poured its contents on the marble flags. Jesus saw in water that flashed from that pitcher an emblem of Himself, and cried, "If any man thirst, let him come unto Me and drink." He is not a pitcher, but a River; not exhaustible, but perennial in his fountains of supply—not for one age, but for all time. His prerogative extends beyond the satisfying of thirst. He is able to make each soul that comes to Him a channel bed through which to pour Himself; for, speaking of those who have quenched their own thirst, He goes on to promise that if they will open their hearts before Him He will shed through them not one river alone, but many, to transform the wilderness into the garden of the Lord. The river which goes out from the believer parts and becomes four heads, as did Eden's.

Those who eat of the Living Bread and drink of the Water of Life must be prepared for conflict. Then comes Amalek and fights. Elevated spiritual experiences prepare us for the battle which God foresees.

FRIDAY, December 30.

Exodus xviii.

The inner life of Moses shines forth on this page. The pilgrim spirit of his people, first expressed by Abraham, and to be taken up and reiterated in after years by David, Hezekiah, and Peter, found expression in the name of his first-born; while the sources of his strength are unfolded in the name of the second. Gershom and Eliezer, in one form or another, these names are constantly on our lips.

Jethro belonged to another type of religious life. He was not one of the chosen people, nor did he follow the methods of Jewish worship. But Moses made obeisance and kissed him, and inquired of his welfare. Holy souls recognise their kinship the world over, and in loving embrace disregard the barrier which caste and custom erect. "Grace be with all them that love the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity."

The humility of Moses shines forth conspicuously. He tells his father-in-law all the Lord had done for the people, and Jethro is so carried away by his statements that he rejoices greatly in the Lord's goodness, and blesses Him, and acknowledges his supremacy. Oh that we could so speak of God to men that when we had finished they would feel themselves bound to take a burnt offering and offer sacrifices!

Such a man was fit to be the medium between God and the people, inquiring of God on the one hand, whilst he made them know the statutes and laws of God on the other. What though the day was long, with untiring diligence he bore the heavy burden until he learnt the happy art of associating others with himself, and training them to the responsibility of privilege.

SATURDAY, December 31.

Exodus xix.

It is inevitable that we should pass under the discipline of Sinai. The natural heart is intent on doing. All the people answered together, and said, "All that the Lord hath spoken we will do." We have no doubt that we can do. We are prepared to accept with perfect equanimity the most exhaustive demands that God can make. We make these braggart boasts because we do not know ourselves. We have a zeal of God, but it is of the flesh, the striving of creature energy—like the fruits which Cain cultivated and laid upon the altar, with no doubt of their acceptance.

We must be cured of this, and probably there is no medicine or remedy but woful and disastrous failure. This is the experience of Sinai, not for an elect nation alone, but for all elect souls. But we know not what we say. We hardly realise the majesty and purity of God, into whose presence we come.

If in the strength of creature energy we protest our ability to obey all that God enjoins, we immediately find ourselves face to face with a smoking mount, with lightnings and thunders, with brooding clouds, and with the voice of a trumpet sounding long—so much so that even Moses, the saintliest and humblest, trembles greatly.

There is but one way in which we can face the glory of the Lord. Being justified by faith, we have peace in view of the Divine holiness. It is by grace that we have access into a position of tranquillity, even amid the terrors of the law.

Protestant Demonstration in London.

THE time has arrived for the rallying of the forces of Protestantism. By common consent in Evangelical circles, there is urgent need for a vigorous campaign, having for its object the instruction of the people in the facts and principles of the Reformation. This means the exposure of Romanism, whether properly so-called, or whether veiled under the more tolerable designation of Ritualism. With this combined object, a demonstration was held on Wednesday last week in Exeter Hall. There were three main gatherings, with a prayer meeting between the morning and afternoon proceedings. The speakers represented several societies and organisations engaged in the maintenance of Protestant principles and practice.

In the morning the meeting was, in its earlier stages, devoted to prayer, several friends leading in petitions pertinent to the general subject about to be considered. Rev. C. A. Fox asked that Christian witnesses might be brought to deeds as well as words, to action as well as combination. Rev. D. J. Stather Hunt followed, pleading for forgiveness for those under authority, as well as for those in authority, for all had let things "slide" when they should have been strong in their testimony for Christ who is Head over all things to the Church. The Chairman was whose opening words were few. He deplored the fact that in the Church of England, as well as in the Church of Rome, there has come to be a hiding of Christ under the name of Christ. Among the poor there are influences at work which should stimulate to immediate and vigorous action, that the population may be saved from infidelity and religious delusion. The upholding of Protestantism in the nation is the urgent need of the day. The rapid progress of error and the inflow of the tide of evil must be stemmed. Though a Church authority had spoken for consubstantiation, the Word of God is a higher authority, and to that we must address ourselves in search of the simple truth.

MISS HELEN GRAHAM

spoke of work in connection with the East London Training Institute, Bow. Training by mission work at home for mission work abroad, the Institute gets some idea of the condition of the poor in Bow and Bromley; and there, as elsewhere, Ritualism is met with. Ample opportunity is found to take the Gospel to the people, and there are many homes in which fathers and mothers are as dark as the inhabitants of Central Africa. The deaconesses and nurses tell the story of Christ to people previously quite ignorant of the Gospel. The work extends to the common lodging house, and among veritable moral wrecks she had witnessed marvellous things in the way of transformation of life. To turn out the tide of Romanism and Ritualism, we must turn in something else; positive truth must be disseminated, and not merely negative assertions made. Miss Graham intimated that the workers in Bow and Bromley intend acting on the suggestion thrown out in The Christian of December 8, that the best time to get at working-men is between eleven and one o'clock on Sunday mornings, when they lounge about in large numbers in their familiar haunts. In conclusion, it was shown that nurses have many opportunities of Christian service. Ritualist workers find people in the slums, and keep them there; but Protestant workers, dealing with the minds and hearts of the people, find to their joy that those who come under their influence, soon put on a black coat, and leave the slums for more respectable and wholesome surroundings.

MR. W. DAVID NEWTON

spoke as representative of the Evangelical Protestant Deaconesses' Institution of Tottenham. The Institution was founded in 1869, when the stimulus of the Revival of 1859 was still holding the land. On the other hand, however, the Tractarian movement was making itself felt, and it was becoming evident that many of the Hospitals and Convalescent Homes were under the control of Rome or influenced by persons of Romish principles. The Institution accommodates about a hundred patients, and undertakes the nursing of hospitals in Ireland as well as at home. There is no reason why it should not do much more in this line. Rome has been diligent in capturing such institutions. Why should Protestantism not assert itself in the same direction, so that the Gospel might go hand in hand with healing the sick and caring for those in suffering?

Speaking of the need for such work as that undertaken by the Institution, Mr. Newton remarked that in one house near his own residence there are thirteen Jesuit priests using every endeavour by scholastic agency to extend Romanism. The work of the Deaconesses' Institution has been Protestant and Evangelical from the first, and God's blessing has rested upon it, many having been brought from darkness to light through its testimony. With reference to the scheme recently adopted by the Charity Commissioners for the carrying on of the work, Mr. Newton said that it provided for religious services in the wards of the hospital, and the new deed incorporated the words "Evangelical Protestant." Many missionaries had been helped by the Institution, especially ladies who had been trained for nursing.

REV. GEORGE HANSON, M.A.,

of Marylebone Presbyterian Church, delivered a vigorous address. He held that it was high time for Protestants to awake from sleep. Concerning "false brethren unawares brought in," the injunction is, "give them place by subjection, no, not for an hour." Moreover, should Peter or his supposed successors obscure the doctrine of free grace, it was time that Paul or his modern representatives should "withstand him to the face." If that attitude was ultra-Protestant, then he was not ashamed of the designation, for it stood for fidelity to a free, full, and everlasting salvation through Jesus Christ. Proceeding, the speaker referred to the manner in which politicians and others had recently obscured the significance of the departure from Gospel truth and Protestant practice; and he commented upon Dr. Lee's article in the November issue of the Nineteenth Century, contending for the blankest Romanism, without incurring a word of rebuke in consequence from archbishop, bishop, or any other authority. Why are such men allowed to ride rough-shod over Articles and Rubrics, and the entire spirit of its Prayer Book? The undermining of the Protestantism of the Church of England involves detriment to Protestantism throughout the world.

Adverting to tolerance, which so many people regard as synonymous with indifference, Mr. Hanson asked if it was nothing to him that men calling themselves Christians should rob the Saviour of his priestly and kingly prerogatives. If men interpose a mediator between Christ and the sinner, was it not his duty to repudiate such teaching? The Word of God is so plain that, without any help beyond that of the loving mother, the merest child may learn of the Saviour without the intervention of a teacher; and yet millions of our fellow creatures, called Roman Catholics, know nothing of Christ,—the priests keeping them in dense ignorance. The Bible is free as the air we breathe; so also is the way to Christ, and salvation, and eternal life. Yet all these blessings are hindered by the intervention of Romish and Ritualist priests. By degrees Christ is being put further and further away, and the Virgin Mary is put in his place. Typical of this is the inscription on the door of a chapel at Rathmines, Dublin—Mario Peccatorum Refugio:—

"TO MARY, THE SINNERS' REFUGE."

Passing from this instance of blasphemy, Mr. Hanson called attention to the fact that in an encyclical of Pope Leo XIII. the statement was made:—"No one can come to the Father but by Jesus Christ; and no one can come to Jesus Christ except by his Mother." He proceeded to refer to the superstitions of Romanism, as shown in the dogma of Papal infallibility, by which synods, councils, bishops and priests are brought into subjection to one man, and tradition is brought in to the displacement of the Scriptures, as authoritative in regard to doctrine and practice. Not without reason has Romanism been declared to have two idols—a male idol, in the person of the Pope, and a female idol in the person of the Virgin.

In conclusion, Mr. Hanson dwelt upon the heroic exertions of the Reformers in breaking away from the bondage of Rome, and securing liberties into which we have been privileged to enter. We should be faithless sons of noble sires if we did not stand by the principles which they so worthily asserted, and for the maintenance of which they laid down their lives. We must maintain Scripture authority against Papal tradition; we must keep the Church in its proper place. We enter the Church through Christ, and therefore we do not come to Christ through the Church. We must not allow a priest to come between the penitent and Christ, nor regard sacraments as anything more than signs and seals of grace.

Prayer Meeting.

Colonel Wellesley Robinson, C.B., presided over a prayer meeting, held immediately after the morning session. Several friends engaged in prayer, and an address was delivered by Rev. H. J. R. Marston, of Belgrave Chapel, W. He found a keynote for the proceedings in the words of the Psalmist, xlvi. 4, 10. His points were Gladness, Quietness, Knowledge. He showed the place of each of these, and particularly urged quietness, and peace, and confidence in the present time of stress and conflict. Mr. Marston afterwards led in prayer, specially asking that God would send a revival of enlightened Biblical Protestantism in our land.

The Afternoon Session

was presided over by Mr. Augustus Churchill, and several societies had an opportunity of setting forth their operations. Again, place was given to prayer. In the course of some opening remarks, the Chairman spoke of the grave importance of the questions under discussion. Things cannot remain as they are; and when we face the subject of remedying the evil, we cannot but go back to the Reformation, whence date our liberties and many things which have made our country great. Those who hold by distinctly Protestant principles, are looking for the time when Romanising clergymen shall be ejected from the livings they now hold, and their places shall be supplied by ministers who are willing to stand by the Protestant standards of the Church. The speaker thought it was quite fitting that such a demonstration should have been promoted by the Y.M.C.A. This remark was echoed by several other speakers in the course of the day.

MRS. W. R. ARBUTHNOT, of the Women's Protestant Union, rejoiced at the awakened interest throughout the country. Christian workers have long felt the influence exerted by Romanism and Ritualism in undermining their work. By the steady pegging away of Christian people in favour of Protestant principles, a great deal has been done. During the few years since the formation of the W. P. U. many prejudices have been worn down, and now there is no difficulty in introducing "Lawlessness in the Church" as a subject of conversation. Protestants are prepared to show a united front to error, and their testimony will assuredly tell.

The W.P.U. is in two sections—Education and Nursing. The magazines of the Union and other publications help forward education on Protestant lines. Another phase of this subject was brought to light by the statement that extraordinary favouritism is shown to the children of Roman Catholic schools in connection with the University local examinations, nuns and teachers being allowed to attend the children in a manner not permitted in other schools. As to nursing, the convalescent homes throughout the country are riddled with Romish influences.

Those of the inmates who do not yield to the sisters and nurses in the matter of confession and other practices are put on short commons and subjected to annoyances of various kinds. The Union has been able to get many girls into safe and good homes, and thus to bring them under definitely spiritual teaching. To advance this work, more funds are required. In conclusion, Mrs. Arbuthnot recommended those who had anything to do with convalescent homes to look well to the way they are worked.

REV. T. H. SPARSHOTT, M.A.,

delivered an address on the work of the Church Association. He traced the growth of Romanism in the Church of England during the past sixty or seventy years. The C.A. was founded in 1865 to withstand the movement and teach positive Christian doctrine. The bishops said they did not know the law, and the Association set itself to ascertain it at the expenditure of about eighty thousand pounds. When, at length, the law was ascertained, the bishops went from their avowed purpose of acting on the law and became law-breakers themselves. This is shown by the now celebrated Indictment published a few months ago by the C.A. The bishops are using their influence against Protestantism: the most timid thing in creation is a candidate for orders before his bishop! Mr. Sparshott maintained that the C.A. does not believe in a negative Protestantism, but in positive teaching, and this is shown in its publications, and in the work throughout the country of its colporteur-evangelists. In conclusion, he spoke of the spiritual desolation prevailing in many rural and other parishes, where clergymen of the Church of England are preaching the doctrines of Rome and following the practices of Rome. Moreover, the C.A. is endeavouring to move the House of Commons, and to organise in every constituency a force of men who will vote in a direction favourable to the Protestant cause.

REV. PHILIP C. JOHNSON, M.A.,

spoke for the Society for Irish Church Missions. He pointed out that while England is allowing Romanism so largely to have its way, in lands where Rome has long held her own the number of adherents is steadily declining. The speaker thought the best possible thing to do was to circulate the Scriptures among Roman Catholics; Rome cannot stand before the Scriptures. This is largely the endeavour of the S.I.C.M., which has two thousand scholars in its schools, and has teachers, evangelists, and many other agencies always at work. National education has taught the people of Ireland to read, and thus the country has been prepared to learn of Christ. The itinerant evangelist goes into the markets and fairs, and offers for sale a cheap edition, without notes, of the Rhemish version of the New Testament. Another little book which has been widely circulated is "The Glories of Jesus"—as distinct from the Glories of Mary, which Rome circulates. The priests do the best they can to interfere with the sale of the books, but very often the interference is turned to the account of the Gospel. In some cases the people insist upon buying the Scriptures, and in particular instances the bishops have introduced the Scriptures to the laity, but always editions with the Romish notes, which are seriously misleading and neutralising in their effects. During the last few years some two hundred converts have publicly come out of the Church of Rome in Dublin alone.

MR. W. WALSH,

author of "The Secret History of the Oxford Movement," was the last speaker. The great popularity of his book invested his appearance with considerable interest, and he was greeted with much warmth. He spoke on individual effort in support of the Protestant cause, reminding those who were at liberty to do something that much requires just now to be done. First of all, however, those who would work must study and undergo some training. Rome has a great deal to say for herself, and so have the Ritualists; and unless we know how to meet the arguments we cannot do much to advance the contrary cause. The work must begin in our families; and although the controversy should not be made nauseous or repellent, suitable books and papers should be at hand for the instruction and interest of the young people. Moreover, there is need for care in the education of the children; we should inquire regarding the principles of the school teachers as well as look to the moderation of the scale of charges. Convent schools, and those worked by sisterhoods, should be carefully avoided.

Proceeding, Mr. Walsh urged ministers to preach about the matter sometimes, also to give lectures thereon; or get them up on behalf of one or other of the Protestant societies. In young people's societies the subject should find a place for discussion, and more should be done in the way of circulating Protestant literature. Keeping an eye on the correspondence columns in the local newspaper is important; and it is desirable that those who get up meetings should see that reports are promptly sent to the papers. Mr. Walsh also advocated the joining of one or other of the Protestant organisations, so that the strength of people who are one in principle may be combined for the good of the country. In conclusion, Mr. Walsh asked his hearers to have a hand in exposing Ritualistic intrigue and duplicity, and to hold their votes for the next election, as only and solely at the service of such Parliamentary candidates as are true to the Protestant cause.

Evening Meeting.

The evening gathering, held in the Large Hall, was of a most enthusiastic character throughout. Lord Kinnaird presided, and after emphasising the need of imparting instruction in Reformation truth to young people, said that politicians must increasingly recognize the fact that action must now take the place of mere comment in dealing with the lawbreakers of the Church. After a passing allusion to the thorough-going Protestantism of Her Majesty the Queen, the speaker dwelt on the evils resulting from Romanism, pointing out that under Rome national progress is impossible. Both Churchmen and Nonconformists must unitedly work strenuously, to prevent Great Britain from falling under the domination of the Pope.

PREBENDARY WEBB-PEPLOE

began a vigorous address by remarking that we are engaged in a most difficult work, and the Holy Spirit must be our guide. Let us adopt a humble but dignified attitude, for we have not assembled captiously, but to defend the bright privileges for which our fathers bled—a free England and an open Bible. We are only at the threshold of a great struggle, which we must conduct in a chivalrous manner. After adducing many figures, published by Ritualists, as demonstrating the enormous increase in recent years of illegal practices, the speaker pointed out that those practices have important doctrinal meanings. Sacerdotalists are not contending for mere ceremonies or externals. It is admitted by Lord Halifax and his friends that the priest is to affirm, and the people are to admit, the intermediary character of the priesthood. If we heard these things to-day for the first time, how staggered we all should be! They have been introduced gradually and stealthily, but as we now face all that would lead us back into the thraldom of Rome, we declare that we will have none of it. The clergy are the humble servants of the laity for Christ's sake, and we declare that there is only one mediator—Jesus Christ.

Alas! that we should have to blame our leaders—first of all, if you will, our political leaders who appointed the bishops; and secondly our ecclesiastical leaders, who, as Bishops of the flock and leaders of the Church, ought to have taken care o the blessed inheritance which God bequeathed to them, but who, in many cases, have shut their eyes and done nothing to lessen the position of peril. They declare the trouble to be small and magnified by bigots, and that while there is a slight transgression of the law, the transgressors have only to be patted on the back in order to persuade them to alter. They will not so easily alter, however. Coming to the morality of the subject, Mr. Webb-Peploe said: Clergymen sign their names in all solemnity to stand by certain truth, and they cannot with honesty go back on that contract. Should Ritualism proceed at its present pace, our liberties, rights, and dignities as Englishmen will surely pass from us ere long, and we shall revert to a position of bondage and dark superstition. We must go to Parliament and insist on the adoption of more stringent methods by which the Church's lawbreakers may be dealt with as other lawbreakers, only substituting deprivation for imprisonment, so that Ritualist clergymen may step out and find a father, if they wish it, in the Pope of Rome.

REV. E. C. BRITTON, M.A.,

described the work of the Protestant Alliance. We must not, he forcibly declared, undervalue the indomitable courage and skill with which the Jesuits are working. They have made up their minds to bend or break the great Anglo-Saxon race. In order to meet them with success, we must organise and strengthen the hands of those who are so vigorously opposing the enemy.

DR. C. H. H. WRIGHT, representing the Protestant Reformation Society, gave a vivid sketch of the rise and progress of the work, and urged the desirability of increased effort for the conversion of Romanists, many of whom, he considered, were open to hear the truth as it is in Jesus. After exposing several instances of Romish superstition, the speaker said that controversial classes are needed, so that Protestants may be better enabled to deal with the fables and specious arguments of Rome. He advised the use of the too often-neglected works of the great English reformers. Y.M.C.A.'s and Y.W.C.A.'s should take up the question of training young men and women in the knowledge of Protestantism, by which method, more perhaps than by any other, sacerdotalism could be successfully combated.

REV. F. S. WEBSTER, M.A.,

of All Souls, Langham Place, expressed pleasure at the revival of a wholesome dread of Popery. If anybody wondered how that dread came to be part of the Englishman's nature, let him turn to Kingsley's "Westward Ho!" He might use the word "hatred" for "dread," for he believed we might honestly and before God, hate a system of sacerdotalism, and that there was nothing narrow or un-English in such hatred. The enemy has been skilful in deceiving us, has merely desired to "educate" us in artistic decoration, and not to lead us to Rome! But we are waking up; the British lion takes a lot of stirring, but when stirred he knows what to do.

Englishmen have a right to insist that those who draw the Church's money should interpret the Prayer Book in a straightforward, common-sense, honest way. The Prayer Book does not teach the mass and the other abominations which have been creeping back into the Church. Romanism does not tend to any sort of goodness; it is allied to unmitigated worldliness; it is permeated with unmitigated untruthfulness; it leads not to holiness, but to impurity. For proof of this we have only to look to South America, where Romanism has entirely had it own way. There the lives of the clergy are awfully immoral, and in many parts there is as much moral iniquity as there was in England prior to the Reformation, and as there may be again if convents are allowed to exist without government inspection.

Protestants must stand together in this dark hour. He held a devoted Methodist, or Baptist, or Independent, or Presbyterian, to be a better Churchman than the sacerdotalist, for such men, though Dissenters, hold the doctrine of the Church more truly. In conclusion, Mr. Webster appealed to Nonconformists—"Come and help us to get rid of this plague; and may God bless you!" Let us put our trust in the Lord, and the preaching of a full Gospel, and we shall surely triumph over sacerdotalism, that insidious foe of true religion.

To the end, the meetings were in harmony with the prayerful tone with which the morning gathering commenced.

The Gospel in Porto Rico.

THE first preaching of the Gospel in Spanish in Porto Rico must be of interest to every lover of the cause of Christ. We had not received any special human appointment to that service, our particular field being the Baptist Mission in the city of Mexico: but an impulse from on high, deepened and intensified by the conquest of the island and its subjection to American rule, moved us to undertake a several months' missionary tour in the country. Some twenty thousand tracts were sent forward by mail, and these were supplemented by several hundred illustrated copies of the Gospel by John that had been sent us by Mr. Walters, of the Scripture Gift Mission. These proved of priceless value. They were the first Gospel seed sown in Porto Rico, and they will not fail to bear glorious fruit.

We landed in Ponce on October 27, and preached on the 29th to a large and interested crowd. We found that the Church of England had an English service on the island, and that chaplains of the American army had done some work among the soldiers, but so far as we could learn no Spanish preaching to the natives had been attempted until our arrival.

The Lord has abundantly blessed us. We have gone over almost the entire island, and have found the famishing people eager to listen to the truth. The priests have very little control of them, and they tell us they will be glad to see the Protestant faith established in the country.

In Juana, Diaz, Aguivre, Guayama, Cayey, Cagnas, San Juan, Rio Piedras, Arecibo, Manati, Camuy, Aguadilla, and Mayagüez we have been astonished to find the populace so ready to receive tracts and hear preaching. No Protestant denomination has yet come to the island, an oversight greatly to be regretted, as the field is white to the harvest.

We have about reached the end of our tour, as our literature is exhausted and our work in Mexico is calling us back; but we turn away with a heavy heart that we must leave unanswered so many petitions for tracts and Gospels. If such were sent us (printed in Spanish) to the city of Mexico (Humboldt Street) we would see that they were re-mailed to hundreds of people here who would distribute them.

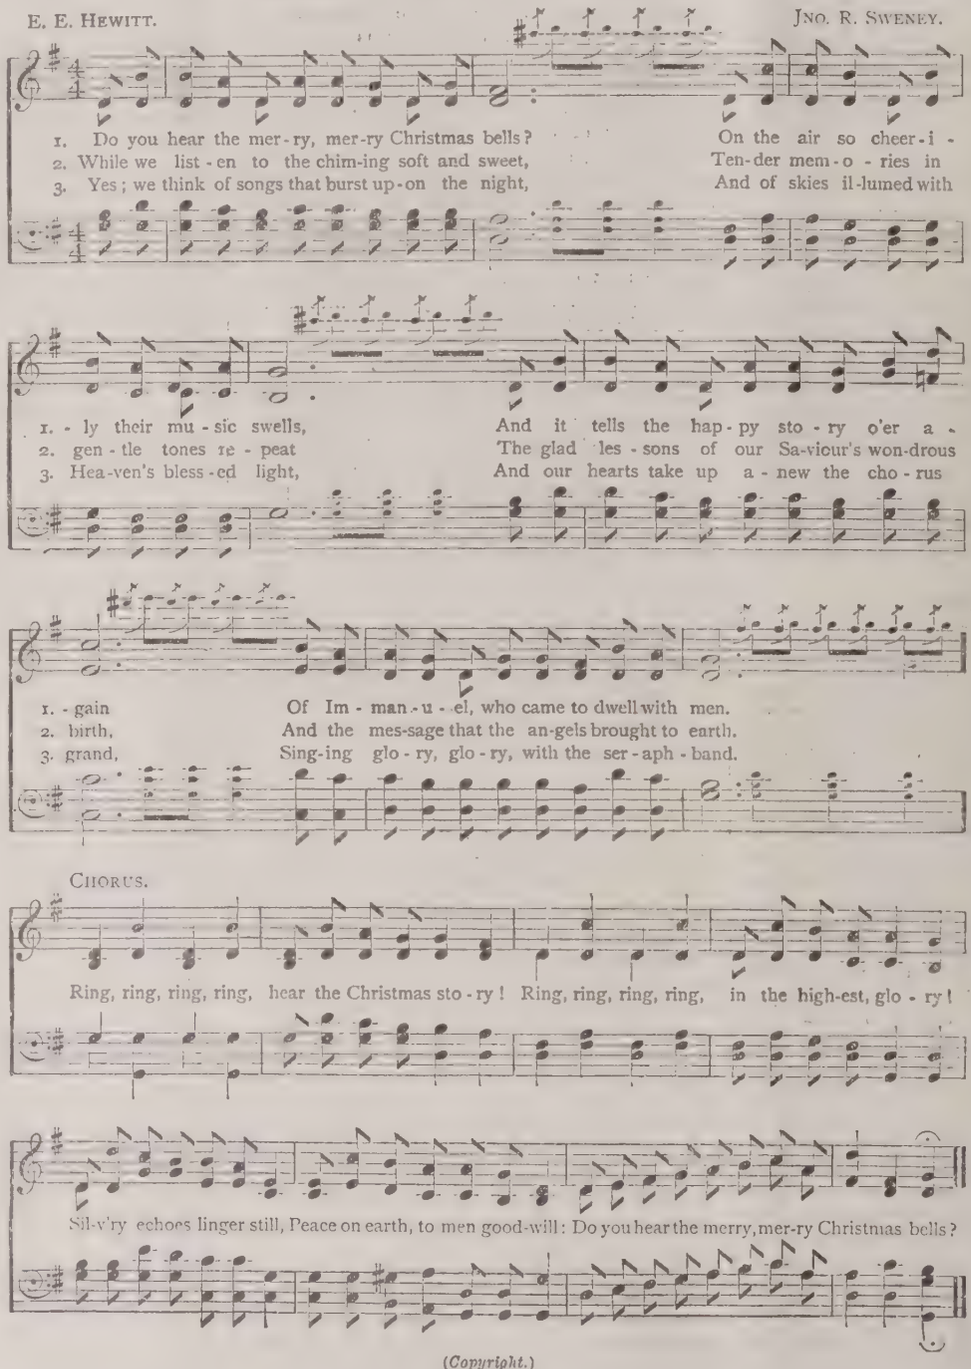
Korea Unfolding.



KOREA is unfolding to civilisation after centuries of apathy, and without prejudice or opposition is receiving Christ. The Government of this land is favourable to civilisation, and believes that Christianity is necessary to the raising of their nation to a higher standing. All Koreans agree that Christianity must be followed in their land, and the nobility are receiving the Truth. The Korean Government, to forward these principles, is sending some of their best students to this country for study, and several of these are to be found in the colleges of the land. Four young men of high birth were at Harley College, Bow, and have done exceedingly well. One of them, David Yer, is fulfilling his second year of study at that college, and has the highest recommendations of his teachers.

Rev. S. A. Moffett has written to the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, 155, Fifth Avenue, New York, that the spread of Christianity in Korea is by leaps and bounds; and he says he must have trained Koreans to help in the work.

Notes from Tasmania.

SPRING-TIME is with us in all its beauty. The Sunday schools throughout Launceston have their anniversaries at this time, and the season lasts from near the end of October until about the middle of December. During this period the work of the churches is "demoralised." Small congregations and small offerings are the order of the day, except for the one church in connection with which the anniversary is held. It is not surprising that many ministers regard this season with dread.

In the Churches there are indications that the spiritual tone is rising. But there is still a dead weight of worldliness and indifference which it is hard to lift.

Another Endeavour Convention! This time not in Melbourne but in this city, and representing not the whole of Australasia, but this little colony of Tasmania. We have here one hundred societies, senior and junior, with a membership of over 3,000, of whom over 300 are associates. These were well represented at the convention, and the meetings were instructive and inspiring.

The Tasmanian Baptist Missionary Society is making progress. The new house at Serajgunj is already in course of erection, and the income from the churches here is steadily rising. Our Prayer Union scheme is taking hold, and is a blessing not only to the missionaries who receive but also to the people who give.

The Soudan.

AS the result of an interview between a deputation from the Church Missionary Society and Lord Kitchener of Khartoum, the Committee of the Society have unanimously adopted the following resolution:

"That the committee of the Church Missionary Society, having long intended to send a mission to the Eastern Soudan, and especially to Khartoum, in memory of the late General Gordon, regret to find that, through circumstances beyond their control, it is not possible for them to open, at present, a Medical Mission at Khartoum. As, however, they have received permission and encouragement to go to Fashoda and the district south thereof, they believe that God has opened to them a door to preach the Gospel among the pagan tribes of the Soudan, in whom General Gordon felt an especial interest, and they direct that steps be taken towards the occupation of that district. To this end offers of service and further funds are earnestly invited. They believe, however, that the religious feeling of the country justly demands that an effort to perpetuate Gordon's memory shall include the direct proclamation of the Gospel of Jesus Christ to all the races inhabiting the upper basin of the Nile, which has recently been brought under the control of England. They will therefore continue to strengthen their base in Egypt, with the intention of extending their mission to Khartoum and surrounding districts, as soon as it may be possible, in the providence of God, to go there also."

Gordon Memorial College.—In a letter to The Times the sister of the late General Gordon agrees with Lord Kitchener that there should be no denominational teaching at the proposed Gordon College, but adds that a deep love of the Bible pervaded his whole life, and any memorial to him with that omitted seems inconsistent with his principles. The Bible should be studied for educational objects only.

Miss Annie Macpherson.

WE present to our readers this week the portrait of one who has long been a familiar figure among Christian workers in London, and who we are glad to realise is still with us.

Born in bonnie Scotia, in the village of Campsie, Miss Annie Macpherson was educated in Glasgow. Her father being an educationalist, and one of the pioneers of that movement which has led to National Education, naturally took great care that the best schools available should be selected. Through the influence of the late Professor D'Orsey, Mr. Macpherson was called to England to undertake the superintendence of the Ockham Industrial Schools. Acting as his secretary, Miss Annie gained an early insight into educational matters, which has ever since then stood her in good stead. In this and in many other ways God was evidently preparing her for the great work of her life.

The father, after five years of suffering, passed away, leaving his widow with five sons and daughters, all of whom have now gone home, save the two sisters—Mrs. Birt of Liverpool, and Miss Macpherson herself.

Removing after this to a little village in Cambridgeshire, her earnest soul was drawn out by the neglected condition of hundreds of navvies employed in coprolite digging, that being a fossil deposit useful for manure. Reading Miss Marsh's book on "Work among Navvies," she was led to attempt, in fear and trembling, to reach them by giving tracts and reading to them at their meal hours. This resulted in an evening school, and by-and-by the opening of a small mission hall, where many men were converted to God. Not a few of these are still labouring for Christ, one being a missionary in China. The perusal of Mr. George Müller's Life and Testimony taught her the secret of faith in God, and of doing His work in simple dependence on Him. Even then, she confesses, she knew little of the faithfulness of God in this respect, and "it was quite a surprise to us when God definitely answered our prayers." One of the first to respond was "a dear invalid who denied herself a mutton chop, three times in one week, to send a shilling." The second gift was received at the third Barnet Conference, while the next gift was £10 from an unknown friend. Thus the lesson of simple trust in God for every need, was learned, and on this principle the work of all the subsequent years has rested.

During these seven years in Cambridgeshire, Miss Macpherson was wont to spend annually a couple of weeks with Mrs. Pennefather at Barnet, learning from her many precious lessons, but particularly the glorious hope of our Lord's personal return.

But a wider field began to open. Rev. W. Pennefather came to St. Jude's, Mildmay, and, visiting here, Miss Macpherson was introduced to Lady Rowley, then working in the East End. Further, she attended the Theatre Services which were held by Mr. Reginald Radcliffe. There she met Miss Clara M. S. Lowe, who took her to visit the homes of some poor match-box makers. Never had she witnessed such a sight. In one miserable garret she found six little girls, pale and thin, working on the match-boxes at 2¼d. per gross. Their condition was deplorable. "From that time my longing was to live among and care for these suffering little ones."

A little later she crossed the Atlantic for the first time, and saw much of New York Missions, finding in a Destitute Boys' Home, conducted by Mr. Van Meter, seed thought which proved to be the germ of her future emigration enterprise.

Returning to London in 1866—"the cholera year"—she found the plague ravaging the East End, and sorrow and distress resting like a pall on the poor homes. Widows and orphans were in despair, and publicity being given in our own pages, a fund of £22,000 was raised to meet the special need.

On behalf of the helpless women, a widow's sewing class was formed—still one of the leading features in the Home of Industry—special endeavours were made for the little match-box makers, while the neglected corner boys, many being cholera orphans, aroused concern. Wishing to get hold of these lads Miss Macpherson made bold to ask a group to come and take tea with her. This was then an unheard-of thing, and they refused, while one said, "We chaps don't like religion licked down our throats." Eventually they agreed to come if the tea was given in "George Holland's place." That first tea to 200 Arabs is described as a strange sight—they seemed ravenous as wolves. "From that night," says Miss Macpherson, "my life was consecrated to the reclamation of such castaways."

A small house was taken, and thirty homeless boys were admitted. Then two other houses—one for boys and one for girls—were opened. Finally a warehouse in Commercial Street, in the heart of "the thieves' quarter," formerly used as a cholera hospital, was taken and opened in February, 1869, as the Home of Industry. This was the famous "No. 60"—a sacred spot to the earlier friends of the work. The Home was speedily filled with destitute children, and moreover became the centre of a busy and far-reaching Mission organization.

Circumstances led Miss Macpherson to seek an outlet for her rescued boys across the ocean. Such an idea was scouted by many. It was unheard of, and a mere tempting of Providence! Still, she felt it was of God, and definite prayer was made that funds should be sent, if it were his will the attempt should be made. In the spring of 1870 a thousand pounds came in, and on May 12 the first party of boy emigrants set sail, under Miss Macpherson's personal charge, for Canada. At Quebec she was well received, and sent rail free to Toronto. All the boys were quickly placed out. Two parties—one of boys, the other of girls—followed in that year. Since then over seventy bands have gone across the Atlantic to "the land of plenty," making a total of 6,500 children. Through the goodness of God, and in spite of storms and perils, no serious accident has happened, save one explosion off the coast of Ireland. This emigration scheme has proved rich in reward. Difficulties and misunderstandings have arisen, but the good conduct of the little emigrants has won recognition, and now a warm welcome awaits each fresh band from the Home of Industry. The most careful and solicitous watchfulness is maintained over the planted out children.

On the experiences in Canada and the opening of various Distribution Homes it is unnecessary here to enlarge. The outcome of the whole work has exceeded the most sanguine expectation. The young people have thoroughly assimilated with the Canadians. Large numbers are now living godly lives and working actively for Christ. Some are ministers; others missionaries to the heathen; many are prominent professional men; while the majority are quiet, thriving farmers—often the strength and support of the local churches.

Apart from this—which may be regarded as Miss Macpherson's special burden—a very large circle of active service has grown up around the Home of Industry. With this, however, our readers are familiar from frequent notice in these pages. The aged and feeble, the sick and the dying, the poor widows, the mothers, the men of the district, factory girls, young working men, and the children, all find special attractions at this busy beehive. The round of happy fruitful service is incessant. Its results, in changed lives, have been beyond the power of pen to describe.

The fearless testimony maintained in Bird Fair has alone won many of the worst possible characters — pugilists, gamblers, drunkards, and blasphemers have been among the witnesses to the power of the Gospel. The Bible Flower Mission idea, moreover, originated in the Home of Industry; and among its earliest trophies was a foreigner lying in an East End hospital, saved through the visits of a lady who is now the wife of the superintendent of the Figueras Mission in Spain. Then, also, the Welcome Home, the Bridge of Hope, and other well-known institutions found origin in the Home of Industry; while thousands of workers and missionaries from afar have realised fellowship and help in the famous monthly workers' meetings, which were among the earliest of that united type of gathering.

Thus in many ways the work which has grown up around Miss Macpherson has set its mark on Christian enterprise; has stimulated and started many in this and other lands; and has trained hundreds of faithful workers now doing useful service at home and abroad. Indeed, the knack of setting other people to work is one of our friend's special characteristics. Her own intense devotion, shrewd perception of the thing needed, and boundless energy, seem to inspire all who come closely in contact with her.

She herself, however, is profoundly anxious to record to the glory of God that any success attained is due to the grand company of workers He has called around her. Besides the inner band, who have long been the centre of the whole operations, there have been such as Mr. and Mrs. Merry with their family. Mr. Joseph Merry has long been the right-hand man in the work on this side and in Canada, while two of his sons have borne the burden of training, placing out and watching over the boys and girls on the other side. One is now in charge here, while the other is in full charge in Canada. Hosts of honoured names might be mentioned who have lent effective aid; but their record is with God—"they seek not the praise of man."

Miss Macpherson herself, in permitting this personal record, trusts that it may be to the help of many in magnifying the faithfulness of God, who has given the strength and power for the work, and has led and guided every step. She desires simply to exalt his love and sustaining grace, and to show how possible it is for a weak woman to live and work among the teeming masses of the East End, drawing them by sympathy and help, and seeking above all the salvation of sinners and the glory of God.

Requests for Prayers.

For an outpouring of the Holy Ghost upon speaker and people at a week's mission in the Tolborth Mission Hall, Glasgow, December 24 to 29.

For a great revival of pure religion in Ipswich and neighbourhood.

For blessing on the distribution of tracts and Scripture texts on the observance of the Sabbath, and for the upraising of men who will exercise an influence for the defence of the day of rest and worship.

For the Holy Spirit's blessing on a mission now in progress in Convoy, co. Donegal, conducted by Mr. Wm. Cowden, Belfast.

Obituary Note.

MRS. GRAY.

On Tuesday, December 15, there passed away at her residence, 274, Clapham Road, S.W., Mrs. Gray, formerly matron of "The Carter Home," High Street, Clapham. Since the death of her husband, Mrs. Gray had been a great sufferer, but, amidst all pain patiently borne, she was never so happy as when writing to, or receiving visits from, "her dear boys," as she delighted in calling the lads who had once been under her care, and in whom she continued to take such a tender interest. Many of those lads are now in distant lands, and can trace their conversion under God to the influence and Christian teaching of their dear friend now called home.

Soldiers' Christian Association. — The authorities at Aldershot have granted a prayer room for the use of the members of this association. This, it is hoped, may lead to such provision being made for the men in all our large home garrison centres. We ask for prayer that the Aldershot room may be made the means of great blessing. Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland.— The claims of this Society were advocated from the pulpits of upwards of twenty churches in different parts of Ireland on Sunday week. The Society was established in 1822 for the purpose of employing Christian men, well versed in the Scriptures, to read the Bible from house to house throughout the country. These Scripture Readers are placed under superintendents, who send in periodical reports to the Committee in Dublin. The system is under the control of the secretary and treasurer, Captain James Kearney White. There has been a serious falling-off in the income this year.

Ten Weeks' Bible Study.

It is possible that many who have read the widely-distributed appeal for daily prayer on behalf of Professor White's "School for Bible Study," to commence at the New Year, have wished for further information as regards both the school and the professor.

One who recently had the privilege of acquiring the information is anxious to impart his impression of both lecturer and lectures, in order that so rare an opportunity of pleasure and instruction should not be missed by those who could attend the course offered.

Professor White is an American, and comes from Mr. Moody's Bible Institute in Chicago; but he is M.A., D.D., and Ph.D. of Yale University, has been Professor of Hebrew and Old Testament Literature in Xenia Theological Seminary, U.S.A., and is Missioner from the International Committee of the Y. M. C. A. among young men in India. An Indian paper has lately paid a high tribute to the value of his teaching and the charm of his speaking; while among Christian students of Great Britain and Ireland he is known well as one of the most appreciated and impressive speakers at their last Summer conference.

His lectures are not mere helpful gleanings from any given chapter, and are not directed to vexed questions of controversy or criticism. Professor White believes in the necessity of a close acquaintance with the whole Bible, and to this end he gives comprehensive outlines of individual books, their chapters, topics, words, characters, and periods, and shows the advantage of contemporaneous study by these methods. For example, he will take the book of Amos, and give a graphic picture of the political situation of the book, and an outline of its construction, that stand out full of new power and interest.

Taking the book of Hebrews, Professor White may seize upon one of its keynotes, such as "better than," and condense the epistle thus:—"A better revelation, a better High Priest, a better ritual and offering, a better life—motive." Instances might be prolonged indefinitely, and if anything has been said to induce a visit to the "school," the writer has no doubt of the enthusiasm and steady attendance at the course of lectures that will follow, or of the lasting appreciation of a new and living interest that will be aroused.

Programme of Meetings,
To commence January 16, 1899.

Tuesdays, 5.30., King's Hall, High Holborn; 8.30, Kensington Town Hall.

Wednesdays, 12.0 and 3, Morley Hall, 26, George Street, Hanover Square.

Thursdays, 4.30, Hampstead Conservatoire; 7.30, Mildmay Conference Hall.

Fridays, 3.30, Eccleston Hall (Belgravia); 8.30, Polytechnic, Regent Street.

Saturdays, 3.0, 186, Aldersgate Street (men only).

Believers' Meetings, Bristol.—The circular of invitation to these meetings at the Gospel Hall, St. Nicholas Road, on January 10 and 11 is issued. The subject proposed for consideration is "The Priesthood of Christ" and "The priesthood of Believers." The bold pretensions advanced by the advocates of a human sacrificing priesthood call for the exercise of spiritual watchfulness on the part of all whom God in his rich grace has entrusted with his truth; and diligence in obedience to the Holy Spirit's exhortation to contend earnestly for the faith once for all delivered to the saints.

Charitable Appeals.

We give a further instalment of these seasonable requests for help in meeting special needs at this time.

Mr. George Goodman, of Lambeth Walk Missions, wishes to distribute coals, meat, groceries, clothing, &c., among the very needy. Address, 128, Kennington Park Road, S.E.

The Mission of Help to the Suffering Poor (Miss A. F. Perram, 90, Darenth Road, Stamford Hill, N., Hon. Sec.) seeks to relieve the sick and aged who are visited in their homes.

The Society for the Relief of Distressed Widows are doing good service among a specially-deserving class, and are in need of fresh help. Secretary, Mr. S. Rayson, 82, Sackville Street, W.

Mr. G. T. Hunt (20, Blandford Street, Baker Street, W.,) of Lisson Grove Mission, desires to take a part in relieving the necessities of the many poor of that populous district, and seeks help.

The Chelsea Children's Mission are anxious to give a good tea and some clothing to poor children in that district at Christmas. Hon. Supt., Mr. C. H. Connor, 73, Pulford Street, S.W.

Mr. Wm. Chorley, 6, Clephane Road, Canonbury, N., or of North East London Gospel Mission, says they have 1,500 children looking for a Christmas meal, besides hundreds of poor families.

Mr. E. H. Kerwin, Great Assembly Hall, Mile End Road, E., writes on behalf of the Tower Hamlet's Mission, which supplies many East End poor with Christmas meals at their own homes.

Mrs. Welin, of the Scandinavian Sailors' Temperance Home, Poplar, wishes to entertain at Christmas time as many sailor lads as possible, and appeals for the co-operation of friends. The City office is 24, Fenchurch Street, E.C.

Mr. John A. Groom, of the London Flower Girls' Mission, 8, Sekforde Street, Clerkenwell, E.C., wants to give, as usual, a thousand Christmas dinners to these street toilers and those connected with them; he will be thankful for help.

The Walworth Crèche is a very popular and much-needed institution in that poor neighbourhood. The hon. superintendent, Mrs. Kinghorne, 26, Dagmar Road, Camberwell, S.E., appeals earnestly for help in maintaining the work.

Messrs. T. and J. Young, of the Working Men's Mission, Collingwood Street, New Cut, have many calls for help in food, firing, &c., and ask that contributions should be sent to their address, 33, Nelson Square, Blackfriars Road, S.E.

The Union Hall Mission will be unable to carry on their customary relief work, so much needed among the poor of Marylebone, unless help is forthcoming. The treasurer is Mr. William Holmes, 156, Alexander Road, St. John's Wood, S.W.

The Benevolent or Strangers' Friend Society has 167 visitors engaged through the year in visiting the sick poor at their homes, and they want at this time to supplement the usual weekly relief. Sir J. C. Dimsdale, 50, Cornhill, E.C., is treasurer.

Mr. Wm. Sly, secretary of the Domestic Servants' Benevolent Institution, 32, Sackville Street, W., says they have ninety-five pensioners on the roll of the society, and temporary relief is also granted. There are many applicants, and funds are low.

The Wesleyan Seamen's Union, with centres in Limehouse, Canning Town, Poplar, and East India Dock Road, helps men of many nationalities. At the present time of year gifts of money, food, and clothing will be gratefully received. Rev. David Roe, 18, Stainsby Road, Poplar, E.

London Street Mission (Percy Hall, Dockhead). — The workers wish to distribute seasonable gifts of food as in previous years, and Madam Annie Ryall (Mrs. Bustin) is anxious to give about seventy women connected with her meetings a free tea. W. Bustin, 13, Prior Road, Bermondsey, S.E.

Mr. W. J. Orsman, J.P. (Milton House, Shacklewell Green, N.E.), asks for contributions on behalf of the general and benevolent work carried on at the Hoxton Costers' Mission. Some 500 poor children will be given a large parcel of food on Christmas morning. During the wintry weather breakfasts are given to 350 half-fed children.

We have also received urgent pleas for the sympathetic co-operation of our readers in this relief work, received from the following workers among the poor of London:—

Rev. S. A. Griffiths, Vicar, Christ Church, St. Giles, W.C.

Rev. R. Loveridge, Vicarage, St. Philip's, Bethnal Green, E.

Rev. Wm. Cuff, of Shoreditch Tabernacle, Hackney Road, E.

Rev. J. Edwin Jackson, Christ Church, Reedham Street, Peckham, S.E.

Pastor T. Maycock (1, Rainham Road, Kensal Rise, W.), of the Kensal Rise Tabernacle.

Rev. Philip Gast (12, Noel Street, Islington, N.), of St. Luke's Church, Clerkenwell, E.C.

Rev. E. P. Connor (37, Bittern Street, Borough, S.E.), of Borough Road Baptist Church, Southwark.

Pastor S. J. Jones (Kent House, Bow Road, E.), of East London Tabernacle.

Pastor T. J. Hazzard (52, Addington Road, Bow, E.), of the Lighthouse Church, Bow Common.

Pastor D. M. Cameron (515, Wandsworth Road, S.W.), of Union Tabernacle, Wandsworth.

Mr. W. T. Russell (11, Manor Place, Paddington Green, W.), of John Street Chapel, Edgware Road.

Mr. John Wm. Weston (31, Park Street, Southwark, S.E.), of the Grove Mission, Great Guildford Street, Southwark, purposes to supply deserving poor with a good Christmas dinner and tea, also warm clothing, blankets, and coals.

Mr. T. M. Wintle, of the Undenominational Christian Mission (Pontymoile, near Pontypool, Mon.), is hoping to give two thousand Christmas dinners and a thousand "Santa Claus" stockings for the children at the Christmas season. The people, he says, are still suffering from the effects of the great coal strike.

The Christian Instruction Society and Deaconess Mission appeal for help in their work of sending Deaconesses into the homes of the London poor, where they relieve the destitute, nurse the sick, and in various ways care for both body and soul. The committee are very anxious to respond to some of the many applications for workers. The secretary is Miss Neuman, 35, Memorial Hall, Farringdon Street, E.C.

Workers in Paris.—We had great cause for praise at our evening prayer last week. About fifty were present, some coming from long distances. We came to meet the Lord, and He graciously revealed Himself to us. Pastor Theodore Monod and one or two others pointed out that we must be ready even for persecution and suffering. We were strengthened for battle and separated with songs of praise and anticipations of victory. We are to meet again at Le Rue Roquepine, Saturday, January 7, at 8 p.m.— Radstock.

His First Kiss.

By Dr. THOS. J. BARNARDO.

THE crowd was gone. The streets were nearly deserted and silent, save for the rushing noise of the downpouring rain and the clattering rumble of the carts which passed over London Bridge almost without intermission the whole night. My great-coat was sopping, and even my boots were saturated. Finally I sought shelter in a narrow staircase leading from King William Street to Billingsgate and Lower Thames Street below. My work was evidently done that night, I thought.

But first I went down the steps. Two or three poor half-clad creatures below were huddled together for shelter in one corner. But they were "grown-ups," and my quest was for waif children only. In the opposite corner, however, there seemed to be just a little heap of rags. I turned on full the light of my lantern, and put down my hand to raise the bundle. It moved—it arose! It was not a bundle but a boy—a little chap, a wee hunchback—with pale, worn, thin face and sopping, ragged raiment! Rubbing his eyes in which my light gleamed, he took me for his natural foe, the "Bobby;" so, in a moment, he ducked under my hand, and, darting out into the street, was soon making his way amid the downpour. I quickly overtook him—not a difficult thing to do, for one could not but see he was too feeble of step to go fast.

Then I did my best to reassure him. I was no policeman; he need not fear; indeed, I wanted to help poor boys like him. "Come back to the shelter of the stair and talk." He slowly and wearily returned—a hopeless, dejected, little automaton. With a start I drew back: the little dirty hand was burning hot! Fever, if ever I had known it! A more careful examination revealed that the poor waif was suffering from pneumonia, the result, no doubt, of cold and wet, homelessness and starvation. Before I had finished my examination,

HE HAD UTTERLY COLLAPSED.

I gently laid him on one of the stairs under shelter, and bade him rest there quietly until I returned. A night cab was slowly wending its way home. At first unwilling to come with me, the driver quickly changed his tone and volunteered his help when I told him who I was and why I needed him. "Pore little feller!" he said, with genuine sympathy in his rough, weatherbeaten face, as he helped me to gather up the child from the steps where I had left him. We placed him tenderly and kindly in the cab, having first arranged the cushions, so as to let him lie at length. Then I too got in, and away we drove to Stepney Causeway, that little narrow lane leading out of the Commercial Road, filled with dingy houses, and having no feature which distinguished it from the mean streets all around, save the presence of the two great buildings, one on either side of the street, facing each other, which had proved harbours of refuge to hundreds (not then, as now, to thousands!) of little, tempest-tossed and weatherbeaten barques.

It was about two a.m. when we drew up at the door of Her Majesty's Hospital. The night nurse was soon there helping to lift the little patient out, and then, the cab dismissed, we had our work before us to cut away with scissors the fœtid sodden rags which invested the warm body of our little waif, and make him fit for bed. Was there a cot vacant? Oh, yes, in the Gordon ward, fitly named after the hero who loved his "kings" in Greenwich, and who, when administering the vast Soudan, had always an eye for the brown-faced, bright-eyed boys of Arab extraction. Edward, or "Little Ted"—for that was the name we called him by—was indeed very dangerously ill.

At first I thought he could not live through the night; then gradually hope dawned, and although the boy had the vital spark, though it flickered, did not, as I feared, at once go out. He lingered on, got better of his pneumonia, and I began to hope that he would perhaps live. And so he did—long enough to make us all love him. I delighted to go over to the Hospital when I could spare time to sit by his side for a few moments while his worn little hand was stretched out and placed in mine. We did not say much, for it hurt "Little Ted" to speak loudly, as he had to do, on account of my deafness. But our friendship was very real, and I could tell by a look at his face whether Little Ted was happy or had something he wanted me to know, or was restless, longing, as he sometimes said he was, to be up and out and at work. Bless his poor heart! "At work" meant selling matches. To be "up and out," meant to be in the streets once more; but Little Ted was never to go out again.

We all loved him dearly. There was one, however, whose affection was greater than mine, and that was the nurse who had special charge of him. "Nurse Jones," we call her: a softhanded, warm-hearted, loving woman, who never felt more in her element than when with gentle words she was comforting some poor child who had drifted under her care into the hospital. I often came in and found her sitting down by Little Ted's bed crooning to him some familiar tune, while he, with eyes half closed, stroked her hand lying on the counterpane. Nurse Jones found from the night nurse that Little Ted did not sleep very well; that, especially towards morning, he became restless, and would toss from side to side; and, although her hour for duty in the ward was not until seven, she often came down an hour before hand to comfort him.

And how he watched for her! how the great dark eyes that were now getting so sunken kept a wistful watch on the door opposite his bed, where the welcome face of nurse might first been seen! At the sight of her a look of love, and gladness, and satisfaction, and complacency, and content, and all pleasurable feelings, fluttered like glimpses of sunlight

ACROSS HIS WORN FEATURES!

One morning Little Ted looked particularly ill and weak. She had heard of his spending a bad night, and, coming over, she caught the wistful look in the eyes of the little waif who had never known home life or a mother's love, and irresistibly overcome she stooped down and tenderly kissed the child. Instantly the great eyes of the poor boy looked up at her with a wonder greater than he had ever shown. "Nurse," piped his little squeaky voice; "Nurse, why did you kiss me?" Before the answer could be given, he himself repeated: "It was nice; but why did you, nurse?" And the good woman, who had been trying to keep the tears back, simply stooped down and whispered to him: "Dear Little Ted, you are all alone; you have no mother; you have no one to visit you and to love you. But I love you, that is why—" and she kissed him again. The child's worn face became irradiated with a light of love, to which it had hitherto been a stranger! But presently the boy, looking at his nurse, heaved a deep sigh. "But—but" (there was a but) explained the little chap; and then his eyes were closed again, and his hands clasped firmly the kind hand of his new-found friend.

"Not much in the incident," some one will say who reads these simple lines. But very much to us who live and labour amongst the waifs and strays of the streets! How these few words of the dying street boy told out the tragedy of a young life which had never known love, but which had infinite capacity for the knowledge it was ignorant of! Little Ted slumbered on peacefully, still holding his nurse's hand; and only a few days after that he closed his eyes wearily for ever. Yet it was something to have soothed his pain and smoothed his pillow even for a while, and to have whispered in his ears during the last few weeks of his barren life, of the great love of the Heavenly Father, a love that earth cannot defile, that is unending, and that awakens human love as nothing else can.

"Christ the True Light."—John i. 1-14.

Golden Text.—"In Him was life; and the life was the light of men."—John i., 4.

The Apostle John

WAS born about the year 4 A.D. at Bethsaida in Galilee, and his home was at Capernaum. His father (Zebedee) was a master fisherman, and his mother (Salome) was one of the women who were faithful to Jesus to the last.

Jerome says that John spent his latter days at Ephesus, as the Elder of the Church there, and that he died there in 98 A.D.

The character of John was passionate, gentle and loving as a rule, but bold and fearless in defence of his Master. He was the special friend of Jesus, for he could, from his disposition, appreciate Christ more than any other of the disciples.

The Gospel of John.

This was written at Ephesus about 85 A.D. It consists of the Gospel story as John used to preach it. Teacher should compare and contrast the four Gospels. It is the same story in all, but coloured by the character of the writer.

Illustration.—River coloured by the bed over which it flows, or the sea by its rocks and sands. Thus—Red Sea, Yellow Sea, &c.

The Gospel was written in Greek.

The Word (1-2).

This name refers not to the man Christ Jesus, but to the Spirit and mind of God which were in Jesus. If the teacher can get his scholars to remember that all through this lesson it will be much easier to understand. The Spirit was with God (just as our spirit is with us). The Spirit was God (just as we cannot be ourselves if robbed of our peculiar spirit).

The Work of the Word (3).

"All things" not merely material, such as sun, moon, earth, trees, animals, but things spiritual—men's thoughts, love, hope, the Spirit acting upon the minds of men prompted them to every right thing they have ever done, written, or said. He was working for the salvation of men before the time of Jesus, and is working for the same still.

Life and Light.

"The wages of sin is death." Righteousness is life. All righteousness is of God. All life, of every form, is due to the activity of God.

And every virtue we possess,
And every victory won,
And every thought of holiness
Are his alone.

This life is the light of men. As men with the desire to do and be right were groping their way on up the steep of goodness and truth, the Spirit of God was their light. That was before the day of Jesus; since that day all progress and growth in knowledge and virtue have been by the light of Christ's character and under the influence of his present spirit. "Lo, I am with you alway." That light is so bright that the darkness of sin could never overcome it.

John the Baptist (6-8).

John was the morning star which comes to herald the dawn of day. Every Christian man should be a witness that Christ has come.

Illustration (1).—The best evidence of the sun's power is in the life which it imparts to animals and trees, &c. So good men are proofs of the existence of Christ.

The moon, by reflecting the light of the sun at night, proves that the sun is still shining, although we cannot see it.

Our dear Lord's best interpreters,
Are faithful human souls,
The gospel of a life like theirs,
Is more than creeds or scrolls.

The Purpose of the Word's Work (10-13).

To make men children of God. In body, men are already his children, but they need to be born of his spirit before they can become his children in this sense. Christ was the Son of God, because He possessed the Spirit of God beyond measure.

FOR YOUNG PEOPLE.

A Christmas Story for the Children.

By Rev. MARK GUY PEARSE.

TO-DAY, when our thoughts and hearts are full of Christmas joy, I am going to tell you a story of long ago about a man who sought and found the Holy Child. The story has come down to us through hundreds of years. How far it is true nobody can tell us; but this much I know full well, that the truth is in it for everyone if we have only eyes to see it and grace to learn it.

Not far from the Holy Land, where Christ was born, there lived one who has come to be thought of as a giant. Certain it seems that he was big and strong, foremost in the frequent fights of those wild days; caring for neither right nor wrong, nor ever bending his knee in prayer, for he was a heathen and had never heard of the Saviour Christ. To him the only good and glory of life was to be strong, and he vowed he would never serve any king upon earth unless it were the strongest he could find.

So Offor—for that was his name—went on his way, but found none that was great enough to please him until he chanced one day to reach the palace of a king where all proclaimed the might and splendour of the monarch. His soldiers were never beaten when he led them in battle, and far or near there was none so great as he. And the big Offor gloried in his service.

Now it came to pass one day that there arrived at the palace a minstrel who sang of good and ill, of brave knights and fair dames, of the gods that were of old and many a stout battle. But as the king listened he suddenly started as if in fright. Then Offor, lying at the king's feet, watched him, and wondered since the music moved him thus if the minstrel were not mightier than the king. And listening more carefully he heard the minstrel sing of some lost spirit who wrought such misery and ill that all men dreaded him; and at the mention of that name it was that the king crossed himself.

Then said Offor, "Who is this, O king, of whom the minstrel sings? and why dost thou so fear him since thou art thyself so great? Wherefore shouldst thou lay upon thyself this charm?"

But the king turned away and said nothing.

Then Offor asked the king again, and in his simplicity pressed him to answer. And the king told him how that he feared the Prince of Ill, who was stronger than any man, and that he crossed himself to break his power and to drive away his presence.

Then big Offor rose up and went his way, and sat him down to think of this new thing. "So then," said he within himself, "there is one at whose very name the king doth start in terror. How mighty must he be! I will go forth and seek him, and he shall be my master."

Forthwith Offor journeyed for many a day over lonely hills, and through the gloomy forests, where the wild beasts crept; and over lonely mountain heights; until one day he chanced upon an armed host who marched along their way, and behind them came one so proud and strong, that he seemed to claim the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them for his own. As Offor came near, the proud Prince of Ill bade him stand, and asked him, "Who art thou, and whither dost thou go?"

Then Offor, seeing him to be so strong, and that he directed such forces, made answer joyfully, "I am Offor, and I would fain enter thy service, for I have heard that thou art of all the strongest, and before thee kings do start and tremble."

Thus it was that Offor, thinking only of his strength, and caring nought for goodness, joined the ranks of this great king, and marched beside him and his troops, and listened wondering as they boasted of the victories they had won and of the thousand evil things they planned.

So Offor went for many a day until this Prince of Ill came suddenly to a place where stood a cross, and thereon hung the Crucified. Instantly the ranks were thrown into confusion, and the King of Evil turned away and trembled from head to foot.

The simple Offor stood and wondered, "Why dost thou fear if thou art so great?"

The king said nothing, but strode away into the darkness. Offor followed him, persistent.

"If thou dost not tell me why thou fearest I will follow thee no more," he cried.

Then saith the King of Evil, "It is the cross of Jesus Christ. I feared Him who hangeth thereon, for that He carried the sins of the world."

"But He is dead," said simple Offor.

"Nay, verily," said the king as he trembled, "He liveth and reigneth for ever and ever."

Then Offor turned back, and stood beneath the cross and gazed into the face of the Crucified—into those eyes that looked down on him with infinite pity. Offor could do nothing else but look and look, softened and melted until he worshipped. Here was something stronger than strength. Here was love. "This," he cried, "is the King of kings; this is the Lord of lords. Him will I seek until I find Him, and Him only will I serve."

Again he journeyed over lonely hills and through the gloomy forests, where wild beasts crept and howled, and across the barren places where the fierce storms raged. And ever Offor went, asking if any could tell him of the King of kings, one Jesus Christ, who died for all men on the cross, and liveth for ever and ever. At last one day he reached the cell of an old hermit, and to him the simple Offor came, and asked if he knew where the great Prince could be found, and how?

Then said the hermit, "My son, this Jesus, whom thou seekest, is indeed the King of earth and heaven. If thou wouldst find Him, thou must fast; if thou wouldst find Him, thou must pray."

"Fast and pray," said Offor, scornfully, "why that were to lose all my strength; and then what if I found this King? I could not serve Him." And Offor turned away angry and sorrowful, for he was very strong. "Fast I will not," he said, as he went along, "and pray I cannot." Then he stopped and asked, "Is there no other way of finding Him whom I have sought so long?"

The hermit thought awhile, and then made answer tenderly, "My son, dost thou know the river yonder?"

Yes; Offor knew it, and he knew how wide and deep it was, and how the floods came sweeping down when it was swollen by the mountain torrents, and he knew how many a one had been swept away in trying to cross it.

"I know it," said Offor, wonderingly.

"Go there," said the hermit, "and dwell by the riverside, my son, and use thy strength to help those who cross it. Rescue those in peril. In helping others thou shalt find the King of kings, and He shall come Himself and pay thee for thy service."

Henceforth Offor dwelt beside the river. Day and night he held himself in readiness to help those who journeyed thither. In his great strength he had plucked a palm tree from the banks, and used it as his staff. He knew every stone in the depths, and could guide the wayfarer into the shallow places and where the currents ran most lightly. And all his toil was glad; for that he served the great King of Heaven, and all were welcomed and helped in his name, the greatest King of all. And Offor was proud of his great Lord and Master, and sought for Christ's sake to keep himself ever at his best.

Now, one wild night in winter, when there was neither moon nor star, Offor lay in his hut listening to the howl of the winds and the roar of the swollen river. Then it was that from the other side he fancied he heard the faint cry of a little child. He lifted himself and listened. There was only the sweep of the wild winds and the thunder of the flood, and he lay down again. Then again came that faint cry, or so it seemed to him. This time he lifted himself and went to the door of the hut and looked out; but he could see nothing and hear none. Again he turned and lay down, and again there came that faint cry as of some little child in peril.

Then Offor seized his club and hurried forth in the darkness. The wild winds that beat and the raging floods had no terror for him. He plunged in and hastened to the other side; and there he found a little child sitting in all the fury of the storm.

"Wilt thou carry me over?" said the little one, reaching up helpless hands to the giant.

At once the big man stooped, and tenderly he sat the little one upon his shoulder, and holding him safely with one strong arm he grasped with the other hand his club and stepped into the river.

But as the blinding rains beat upon him, and the fierce winds blew, and the angry floods swept and surged, the weight of the little child grew more and more, until he felt as if he could go no further. He would suffer no complaint to pass his lips—was it not done in the service of the Great Lord and King of Heaven?—and he struggled on as best he could. But presently he lifted his patient eyes in wonder, and there he saw the child all glorious and shining. And the child said, "Offor, thou carriest Him who carried the sins of all the world."

Then Offor knew that he had found the King, and worshipped Him. And henceforth he was known no more as Offor, but Christopher—the Christ-bearer. And all his life was full of pity for all and gracious helpfulness. He bore not only the burdens on his shoulder for Christ the King, but that which is harder still to bear: when once some angry one struck him a blow in the face, he only wiped away the blood and said, "If it were not for my dear Master's sake, I would be avenged of that!"

Such is my Christmas story—surely for every one of us it is the Gospel for the day. We, too, must learn that life is but a poor thing until it is used for the service of others. To help any on their way, to befriend those in peril, to be pitiful and kind, is to serve Jesus Christ. To listen to the voice of the little ones is to hear his voice. Love's least and lowest service is ever the service of the high and glorious King of Heaven; and still, as of old, He comes to reward that service. "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these, ye did it unto Me."

The Empty Stocking.

Alas for the empty stocking,
Hung up in that garret bare,
By its pale little owner, rocking
A babe in the corner there.

Little May was a cripple maiden,
Scarcely ten summers yet;
But the days when their stockings were laden
She could not, poor child, forget.

Once there were four wee stockings,
All hung in the firelight glow;
But they came now as phantoms mocking
Of a dream dreamt long ago.

Last Christmas they played together,
Lily, and May, and Flo,
Nor minded the winter weather,
That this year had brought such woe.

Since father that autumn only,
Striken with fever lay;
And had died whilst his widow, lonely,
Lost all but wee Bert and May.

Whilst little May, fair and tender,
When father was ill in bed,
Fell down from a chair on the fender,—
And injured her hip, they said.

And to-night she was extra weary,
Since mother from work was late;
And the room seemed yet more dreary,
As the fire burnt low in the grate.

Then thought she, "I've heard of Jesus,
He died for our sin they say;
And still is alive and sees us,
And will hear what we have to say."
So with Him she gently pleaded
That Santa Claus that same night
Might bring them the gifts they needed
To give them a Christmas bright.
Nor was it in vain the yearning,
Or prayer of that childish heart,
For nigh by a bye-way turning
Came there a carrier's cart.
And in it a hamper laden,
To the full, with such good things
As unto the boy and maiden
The season of Christmas brings.
Oh! how they flushed with gladness,
And dear mother's eyes grew bright,
Forgetting her toil and sadness,
As she filled their stockings that night.
O darlings, so fondly dreaming
Of home-going holiday glee,
Holly and mistletoe beaming,
Party and Christmas tree;—
Whose stockings on Christmas morning
Will burst, laughing from top to toe,
For many that day is dawning
Whom Santa Claus does not know.
Say who, to earth's wee ones lowly,
His part, for Christ's sake, will play,
Or go as God's angels holy,
With love-gifts this Christmas day.

An Announcement.

Owing partly to the illness of one of my helpers, and partly to the irregularity of postal deliveries at Christmas time, I have decided to set

NO BIBLE SEARCHER THIS WEEK.

Therefore the children eligible to go in for the Prize Competition next week will be those who have been correct eight times out of eleven during the quarter, instead of nine times, out of twelve as is usually the case.

I am giving an acrostic for you to do on Sunday which can be examined at home, but no answers are to be sent in to me.

Bible Acrostic.

(1) The elder of two men, whose sin was great,
Their punishment was swift, sad to relate.—Mim.
(2) The father of a prophet of the Lord,
Predictions were despised, also his word.
—2 Chron. xv. to xx.
(3) What city did a chief of herdsmen slay,
Where men and beast in dire confusion lay?—1 Sam.
(4) How was it said God wrought in two good men,
Apostles, who did good by word and pen.—Gal. ii.
(5) An instrument of music—what's its name?
The prophet says the singers shall have shame. —Amos.
(6) This people saith, "We will return and build"
The God of heaven, otherwise had will'd;
Take the two vowels from the name that's here,
And in due order make them to appear. —Malachi.
(7) A wicked man designed one's overthrow,
In his own net the Lord did make him go.—Esther.
The whole.
Two cities names now traced can be;
Destruction was their destiny.

ISABEL AND GLADY PHIPPS.—Many thanks for the warm knitted cuffs, mufflers, &c. I am sending them to the R.S.U. Cripples' Home, Southend; and there are very many other institutions which would be very glad to receive similar articles if others of my young friends could spare some of their holiday time to make them.

A. J. MARSOM AND GLADYS CALVERT.—Many thanks for the "blotters" and pincushions. I am sending them to the "Soldiers' Home," Winchester.

SEVERAL of my "nephews and nieces" forgot to stamp their envelopes this week. I hope they will be more careful in future.

B. and J. MACONCHY.—Thank you so much for sending me your photo. I am very pleased with it.

ANNIE G. MACNAIR.—I have not forgotten you. So very sorry you have had such bad health, but hope you are now stronger. I know your cousins by name very well.

FRANCES FIGGIS.—Your bicycle accident must have shaken you. It is a good thing it was not more serious. Many happy returns of your birthday.

ALINE BAZETT.—Please write direct for the name of a little girl to Hon. Sec., C.P.A. "Recruits," Falcon Court, Fleet Street, London, E.C., I should have written you, but you did not write your full address.

DOROTHY HEWER.—I hope you are now better. It is a very good idea of yours to dress your old dolls up afresh, and send them to the Hospital for the Sick Children.

JESSIE K. STEWART.—I am pleased to welcome you as a new "niece." Please number your answers to correspond with the questions, and it would look better if you left a margin in which you could write the number of the answer and the chapter and verse; and between each answer leave a space.

K. OLIVER.—Hope you will be feeling better by Christmas.

KEITH W. DRENNAN.—Your paper was very neatly done, but please give chapter and verse as well as the answer.

CATHERINE BARBER.—Your envelope this week was addressed 12, Paternoster Row, instead of 12, Paternoster Buildings.

GLADYS M. YOUNG.—Papers must reach me by first post Thursday morning at the latest. I did not see your brother's paper. I hope he will be very successful in the coming examination.

The Children's Home.

DEAR SIR,—The turn of the year is always an anxious time with us at the Children's Home. A large part of our income is then received, and should that fall below the usual amount, the result would be calamitous. For months past we have had to steel our hearts to refuse children whose condition was most pathetic and distressing, because we had not a corner into which to put them nor the means to provide one additional plate at table. If the income of the year should be deficient, still more cruel measures of retrenchment may be necessary. To me, laid aside and under imperative orders to abstain from any work, the urgency of the moment is specially distressing.

Two things are of pressing importance. 1. That the Special Fund of £5,000 for the reduction of the debt should be completed forthwith. £1,450 are still needed. I am sure that there are many friends who intend to respond to this appeal; they have overlooked it in the rush of many concerns.

2. That the ordinary income should be well sustained—I wish I dare say "increased." But the best I dare ask for is that it should be kept up to last year. There is a serious peril in the way through Christmas Day falling on a Sunday. We may lose many hundreds of pounds which usually come to us from the Christmas morning collections. I beg, my brethren, and the officers of our churches generally, in the ingenuity of their kindness, to see that by some arrangement the interests of our cause shall be protected. This may easily be done in one of several ways. The collections in the Sunday Schools, and by the Christmas table boxes, are also of great importance; but I must be content with merely mentioning them.

Yours faithfully,
T. B. STEPHENSON.

San Remo.

Helpless, Homeless, Hopeless.

SIR,—At this season may we be allowed a corner to plead the cause of the starving, the destitute, and the outcast? The Church Army has over seventy homes and kindred institutions in the Metropolis and throughout England from Newcastle to Plymouth. In these over 13,000 cases—men, women, and boys—were dealt with last year wholly irrespective of creed or character; 58 per cent. of all received obtained by this means a fresh start in life. The strain upon us at present is very severe. Money and old clothes of every description are urgently needed.—Yours sincerely,

W. CARLILE,
Hon. Chief Sec. Church Army.

The Children of the Poor.

SIR,—The sixteenth annual report of the Board School Children's Free Dinner Fund is now published, and the committee appeal for aid to carry on the work fully described in the report.

The condition of the poorest children in our schools, for whom alone this fund provides, viz., the children of widows, of parents sick or disabled, or out of work, is now so well known that it is unnecessary to make any long pleading on their behalf. In many districts the work at least for a small number of children is carried on throughout the year. Copies of report will be gladly sent and help gratefully received by,—Yours obediently,

ANNA PENNINGTON, Hon. Sec.

THE EVANGELISTIC FIELD.

Mr. Aitken at Newcastle-under-Lyme.

THIS evangelist has concluded a deeply interesting and encouraging mission at St. George's Church, Newcastle-under-Lyme. St. George's was built in the early part of this century, Charles Simeon preaching the opening sermon. It has been fortunate in its clergy, and the Gospel has been faithfully preached in it for a great many years. It is, however, twenty years since the last parochial mission was held in the parish, and therefore this effort had something of the charm of novelty about it. At any rate, it has produced a very great impression on the place, and on the Sunday nights the church proved far too small for the crowds that flocked to hear the Gospel message; hundreds had to go away.

Mr. Aitken adopted the method of inviting those that felt their need of help to meet him in the gallery. Night by night a goodly company of seeking souls gathered there and were conversed with by the missioners and the local clergy and their helpers. More than 400 memorial cards of the mission have been given away to those who have been helped during the mission, and of these a very large proportion professed to have been brought out of darkness into light.

Mr. Aitken was ably supported in the work amongst the children by Mr. Harpur, while Mrs. Crouch laboured not without marked appearances of happy result amongst the women. Few that attended it will easily forget the last evening. The sermon, which was specially designed to comfort and strengthen the young Christians who were just starting on the heavenly race, was followed by a distribution of memorial cards to those who had received a spiritual blessing, and it was after eleven before all the applicants obtained one of these mementos of the happy occasion. A few words of help and cheer were spoken to each, and their names and addresses were carefully taken, so that they might be helped and looked after subsequently. It has indeed been a time of spiritual visitation, and "there is great joy in that city."

Evangelistic Movements.

We desire to thank God for blessing received during a fifteen days' mission in Morton by Mr. A. Knight, of the Evangelisation Society. There have been many anxious inquirers, and some have been brought into the fold of Christ, while believers have been revived.

T. P. A.

The Weaver Brothers closed last Lord's day a very busy fortnight in Gospel work in connection with the Shankill Road Mission, Belfast. Several hundreds of persons have been personally dealt with during the mission, and some of these with the brand of sin very deeply impressed upon them. Men under the influence of drink came in freely every night to be dealt with regarding a better life, these cases often engaging attention until a late hour. There are many in Belfast who will have cause to remember the visit of the young evangelists through all eternity. Their ministry has been full of blessing to many. It may be added that the large audiences, both as to their extent and character, have been a great encouragement to Rev. Henry Montgomery and his helpers in their efforts to reach the non-church-going. Rough men without collars, of the rowdy type, and numbers of the corner-boy fraternity have found their way to the services. They have found that these classes are being reached, and so they go forward with fresh courage and hope.

I desire to record with much gratitude our experience of a ten days' mission held at the St. Alban's Tabernacle by Mr. Newton Jones. The meetings have in every instance been fraught with evident blessing. Quite a number of those who before were indifferent to the Gospel have been gathered in, and the services have been the means of renewal of spiritual life and enjoyment among many believers. Mr. Jones' Bible readings were especially prized.

Henry W. Taylor,

St. Albans, Herts.

Mr. George Hunter, of Aberdeen, for the last four months has been conducting missions in the towns of Berkhamstead, Watford, Rickmansworth, Chesham, and High Wycombe, where many have been brought to Christ. He has lately concluded an eight days' mission at Leigh Chapel, near Tonbridge. Believers have been much blessed by the evangelist's message; several professed to have passed from death into life.

A. J. Fisher.

Mission services in connection with the Open-Air Mission were held in the Lecture Hall, Abergavenny, under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A., when Mr. Frank Cockrem and Mr. Barry Wake addressed large audiences. Mr. Gray accompanied the other brethren, and charmed the audiences with his sacred solos and earnest words of exhortation. Much blessing has accrued, souls being born into the kingdom.

A ten days' mission has been held in the Baptist Chapel, Launceston, Cornwall, by Miss Gill, of Devonport. Christians were helped, while many were deeply impressed with the power of the Word.

Christmas Poems.

Ring out again, sweet Christmas bells,
And tell the old, old story,
How long ago the Son of God
Did lay aside his glory,
And left his angel-home on high
For us to suffer and to die.

No earthly splendour marked his birth,
He came in guise most lowly.
A stable and a manger-bed
Received the Saviour holy.
And He, the Everlasting One,
Became a spotless virgin's Son.

Sweet Babe! Though earth denied its pomp,
Heaven's choirs thy birth were singing;
And though the voice of man was mute,
The sky with praise was ringing!
Thou did'st not want earth's gold and dross,
Thou did'st but ask from man a cross!

Then let us haste, with thankful hearts,
And greet the Heavenly Stranger!
And bring our costliest gifts to Him,
The King within the manger.
Dear Saviour come, and in us dwell!
All hail, all hail, Emmanuel!

M. G. M. S.

Long ago, when angels singing,
Lowly bent o'er this sad earth;
Tuned their harps, good tidings bringing
Of the King of kings' glad birth.

Midst the cattle meek and lowly
There was born a baby boy;
Pure and perfect, fair and holy,
His sweet virgin mother's joy.

God, in human nature moulded,
In those loving arms there lies;
To that gentle bosom folded,
Soothed by infant lullabies.

O Thou Babe above all others,
Would we might have seen thy face;
Shared the joy, alone thy mother's,
To have felt thy first embrace.

Yet the Christ-child ever liveth—
Now as yesterday the same;
Joy to all who find Him giveth,
Bearing still our sin and shame.

In our grand and mighty city
He in many a form doth roam—
Strange to love, and care, and pity,
Friendless and without a home.

Listen, for He still is sobbing,
As in babyhood of old,
In yon tiny form, pain throbbing,
On a garret pallet cold.

Listen, for He still is weeping,
In yon weary crippled child;
Slowly through the alley creeping,
Whilst the winter storms blow wild.

Lo! He comes with every tender
Child into these hearts of ours;
Let us love unto Him render,
Through these happy Christmas hours.

Let us each, his word obeying,
Gild some shadowed life with glee;
We shall hear Him to us saying,
"Ye have done it unto Me."

Harriet Julia Evans.

Clear as the present, seen by eyes eternal,
Appears that olden day when Christ was born
And we, illumined by a light supernal,
Would so behold our Lord this Christmas morn.

We may; the Christ whose birth we sing of yearly
Bides with his people as the ages flow;
To-day his Spirit speaks to them as clearly
As his own lips, long centuries ago.

"Behold your King!" we see Him as He wended
His way to Calvary, laden with our sin;
"Finished!" He cries. His woe and ours are ended;
"See where He lay!" His joy and ours begin.

To her, the weeping sinner of the city,
Alone at Christmas with no friend but Heaven,
Lord, speak the words of thy unbounded pity
And blessedness—"Thy sins are all forgiven."

Thy hapless servants sailing home in sadness,
With empty boat, Lord, give them thy command
To cast the net anew; and they with gladness
Shall find, and feast with Thee upon the strand.

God gives us water from his own pure river,
His countless wealth He places by our side;
With Christ, Himself, to save our souls for ever—
His greatest gift, his gift at Christmastide.

Donegal. J. K.

'Twas not in rock-built Nazareth
Was born the Holy Child;
'Twas not on Galilee's blue lake
His Infancy first smiled.

'Twas not on Carmel's vine-clad slope,
Or Sharon's flowery plain
God's Son became Inheritor
Of human grief and pain.

'Twas not on Hebron's ancient site,
Or Shiloh's hallowed ground,
That room for David's Son and Lord,
And Israel's Hope, was found.

'Twas not on stately Zion's hill,
By town and Temple crowned—
Zion, the glory of the land,
In Sacred Psalms renowned.

Not there, the Child of Promise came,
Not there Immanuel lay,
Amidst the signs of earthly pomp,
Upon this natal day.

But 'twas in Bethlehem, where once
The fields of Boaz spread,
Which to the gentle reaper, Ruth,
Became a "house of bread."

In Bethlehem, where Jesse's son
His flock with courage led,
And, with adoring thoughts of God,
His youthful spirit fed.

In Bethlehem, from whose cool well
A draught the monarch craved;
But drank it not, for love of them
Who death for him had braved.

'Twas o'er the field of Bethlehem
The minstrel heralds sang,
And through the shining firmament
Their tones celestial rang.

In Bethlehem the shepherds saw
Within a manger laid
The King of angels and of men,
And wondering homage paid.

Above all other names most famed
Of mighty cities—thine,
Though least on Judah's royal roll,
Displays a light divine.

On thee a fadeless glory rests—
A peerless diadem;
Earth's Saviour first drew mortal breath
In thee, dear Bethlehem!

ONE THOUSAND POUNDS

Are needed this year for Robin, so many little hearts are pining in London for their Winter Treat. We are giving a well-organised Dinner and Entertainment on Jan. 9, 1899, one of the prettiest Dinners of the Season. Will you take Tickets? If you cannot come, will you send friends?

The idea of the Fund is not to provide relief Dinners, but to welcome the Children as guests, in the Name and for the sake of Him who loved little Children.

The 'Robin' Dinners.

WHAT IS THE ROBIN DINNER FUND?

A Fund, started twenty-one years ago, to give a Christmas Dinner and Evening's enjoyment to children of the great city, who have never known a Christmas party.

WHAT THE ROBIN DINNERS ARE NOT.

We cannot too strongly point out that the Robin Dinners are not pauperising Relief Meals. They are hospitable Christmas Parties. We ask the rich (are we not all rich compared with our Robins?) to follow our Lord's words and make a feast for those who can make no return. May this be the "cup of cold water" this Christmas.

HOW MANY CHILDREN DO WE REACH?

About 24,000 every year at present. But there are thousands on thousands more we could and would entertain right royally if you will help us with Christmas bounty.

HOW IS THE FUND ADMINISTERED?

By a Committee of well-known Clergy and Laymen working in the poorest districts. There is no rent of offices or payment of officials.

The whole work is voluntary, and every penny goes directly to the children through the agency of those who know best how to use it—either the clergy living and labouring in the poorest parishes of London, or through the Ragged School Union.

WHAT DO THE PRESS SAY?

The Christian this year said: "The children seemed immensely delighted, and evidently enjoyed a thoroughly happy evening. The Robin Dinner is a fund of delight."

The Daily Graphic said: "It is a touching and pretty sight to watch this gathering of the hungry clans. It is a grand thing to teach the ignorant, but it is a much grander, simpler, more necessary thing to feed the hungry; and to give cheerless lives something to look forward to and to look back upon is, perhaps, the most useful of all."

The Daily Telegraph said: "Nothing could be more satisfactory. The Robin Dinner speaks for itself."

WHAT DO WE WANT?

Your sixpence at least to entertain one child, and then the sixpences of your family and friends.

Come and Welcome the Children on January 9, 1899. See Programme.

Caroline's Translation.

A WAY by the sunny Sussex coast there stands, within a few yards of the sea-washed shore, an ivied cottage, whose front windows look over the merry waves, while from others the undulating South downs are followed as far as the eye can reach. In this cottage in the quiet old-world village of Lancing a resting-place is found for some of the enfeebled and aged "poor of the flock," widows and others, who, bent with age and tottering with infirmity, have been found either already in or knocking at the workhouse door.

"We shall not easily forget," writes Mr. Chorley (the founder of the Home), "calling upon an aged relative of one of our poor charges, after the latter had passed 'within the veil,' and learning a few more particulars of the pilgrimage of one whom it was our privilege for a short time to care for before her message came to 'arise and depart.'"

Caroline S—— was eighty-six years of age, and had been a happy follower of her Lord for very many years. Her brother was a devoted City missionary whom we well knew, and though for many years he had been entitled to avail himself of the Society's pension, and take his well-earned rest, yet he begged to be allowed to do what little he could; hence, with aged Caroline as his housekeeper, he retained his active sphere of labour till some six years ago, when, after having taken three services among the inmates of certain almshouses on the Lord's day, he passed away three days later, aged eighty-two; and poor Caroline was left with a small sum the departed one had saved, by carefully eking out which she had managed to keep from the workhouse till some twelve months since.

This kind-hearted friend said, "I am keeping another afflicted relative, which is more than my poor circumstances enable me to do properly, and when poor Caroline could not longer withhold yielding her room, and entering the workhouse, I had her here, and got a nice bit of hot dinner, and then we had a good cry and started for the workhouse, taking a cab; but I never shall forget the day, nor the trouble it was to me to see her go there."

However, Caroline was too full of joy in her Saviour to let the surroundings, harsh as they may seem to a less-yielding disposition, altogether crush her or hinder her finding "a branch of healing" for even this "bitter spring." Yet there was just one thing that our aged one could never view with other than grief and sorrow—that was her fear of dying amongst strangers and having no friend by her side who "loved her Jesus." The drawn screen, and the passing official, the death all alone, and the pauper "stretcher men" with their gruesome burden stoically taken down and deposited in "the dead house"—these things Caroline could never warm up to, and it was joy upon joy to find herself one day being actually helped to the waiting cab at the door, and transported to the terminus, and seated finally in the train, though so feeble that many halted and watched our movements with sympathy.

This was on Thursday, July 28, and with our aged friend we took another, a paralytic whom we had known nearly thirty years, a most grateful and happy Christian, whom we also took from the same East London workhouse.

It was truly a joy to listen to our dear friend Caroline's happy testimony. She found her harp tuned afresh as she gained the sunlit shore, and "she spake of Him" to all that came in her way. Nothing was allowed to pass—a bird, a flower, or even a blade of grass. The sunshine or the shade, the sea and the shore, all made music to our dear friend, and Jesus was found coupled with it all. Strangers who made her acquaintance, if only for a few days, felt the power of her gracious influence, and wept when they wished her good-bye, knowing that in all human probability they would see her face no more. She was evidently ripening for her translation, which was not long delayed, for she was "called home" before she had been with us many wesks. It was such a joy to her to realise she was going to end her days amongst Christians "who loved her Jesus." She would say to us sometimes, "My Saviour will repay you," with such touching emphasis, but we always assured her He had already done so many times over.

There are others remaining still with us for whose needs we prayerfully ask the fellowship of the Lord's purse-bearers, and there are also a [illegible] of beds waiting to be filled when funds permit. Contributions would be thankfully received by Mr. Wm. Chorley, 6, Clephane Road, Canonbury, London, N.

The Book World.

A GOOD BISHOP.*

THE late Bishop Walsham How was good in the best sense—not learned, but wise; not particularly keen-witted and shrewd, but uniformly gracious and of a sound mind. Those who knew him cannot but realise great pleasure in the perusal of the biography which his son has written; those who did not know him will be no less ready, after reading this deeply-interesting volume, to class the Bishop among those useful and diligent servants of Christ who are the true pillars of the Church, and who can ill be spared in an age when materialistic indifference is so widespread and deadening in its influence upon the spiritual life.

The son of a country solicitor, Walsham How was born at Shrewsbury in 1823. He died last year full of honours as a dignitary of the Church of England. He was not distinguished at Oxford, but he shone conspicuously in the practical work of a clergyman. He was nothing in the world of criticism and disputation; but those who are great there might well envy him the success which he achieved as a Christian exemplar and ecclesiastical ruler. A man of spiritual temperament, he ever maintained a high tone in life and work; and those facts, combined with many desirable qualities, almost from the beginning of his career marked him out for preferment and distinction.

After good training at Kidderminster, and devoted work at Whittington, we find Walsham How in East London in 1879, undertaking as suffragan Bishop of Bedford, what his friends regarded as a pious crusade in the midst of the Godless and hopeless masses of the population. Before this he had conducted missions and held retreats and quiet days in various parts of the country. Settling down to work among labouring people he found a sphere much to his liking, and very different from duties that he had declined to assume; he had refused, at least, one colonial bishopric and several "fashionable" offers and canonries. For nine years he laboured in East London; declining, the while, an opportunity to succeed Bishop Fraser at Manchester.

Subsequently, the death of his wife somewhat unsettled him, and he accepted the newly-created see of Wakefield, which he administerd from 1888 until his death, declining, in 1890, translation to Durham as successor to Dr. Lightfoot. His activity in the cause of temperance, purity, and rescue work will not soon be forgotten. He was a High Churchman of the unostentatious and law-abiding type; a philanthropist as well as a Christian. His life was an outworking of the legend, which, at his own request, was inscribed on the pastoral staff presented to him at Wakefield—Pasce verbo; pasce vitâ; ("Feed with the Word; feed with the Life"). By speech and example he was a good minister of Jesus Christ. His son may be congratulated on an excellent piece of work in the compilation of the very readable biography.

* Bishop Walsham How: A Memoir. By Frederick Douglas How. With portrait. (16s. Isbister & Co.)

Mr. Russell Hurditch issues his helpful annual, A Message for 1899. (1d. J. F. Shaw & Co.) which contains much good reading, and is well illustrated.

Three hymns, set to music by Ada Rose, are Jesus is the Only Way, Channels Only, and The Potter and the Clay. (6d. per doz., 2s. 6d. per 100. Marshall Bros.)

Ben of Friar Alley (1s. Jarrold & Sons) is a very readable sketch, in which the trials and sorrows of child-life in the slums are pathetically depicted. The volume forms one of the shilling "Reward Series." A new volume of the "Bairnie" Series (same publishers) is entitled The Hand of a Little Child (1s. 6d.), a simple story of child-life.

The January issue of The Baptist Monthly opens with "Questions for the New Year," by Rev. Samuel Vincent. There are also sketches of Sir Hugh Gilzean Reid and Pastor Archibald Brown. The general contents—brief articles fully illustrated—mark this monthly as admirably suited for localisation by Baptist churches. (Stockwell, 17, Paternoster Row).

The year's parts of The Converted Catholic form a substantial volume. The editor, Rev. James A. O'Connor, was a Roman Catholic priest for eight years, but for the last twenty years he has been a minister of the Gospel in New York, and has been instrumental in leading many Catholics out of the darkness of Romanism into the light of the Gospel. In a series of open letters to Cardinal Gibbons he gives an admirable survey of the causes and results, from a religious point of view, of the recent war with Spain. (1 dol. Office: 142, West Twenty-first-st., New York.)

The twelth annual volume of Rest and Reaping (2s. 6d., Morgan & Scott), Miss Mason's familiar monthly record of Christian work in many lands, makes a helpful and stimulating book. Among the chief features are papers on spiritual topics by Revs. F. B. Meyer, J. Wilkinson, G. H. C. McGregor, and Fuller Gooch; an instructive contribution on foreign missions, and a vigorous serial by Miss Maud Battersby. The accounts of the Finchley "Pillar Room" meetings are as varied and as readable as ever; and the poems, especially those of Mrs. Sangster, considerably above the usual level of religious verse. "Rest and Reaping" is essentially a book for the Christian home.

The monthlies issued by the Stirling Tract Depot continue their useful ministry; and in volume form are worthy of strong commendation for parish libraries. District visitors also will find these books of great service. The British Messenger (1s. 6d.) is biggest and fullest, and among the features this year we observe papers on the great missionary societies, and studies on Bible heroes and heroines, and on some famous Psalms. The Gospel Trumpet (1s.) is also fully illustrated, and its letterpress being in large type suggests special suitability for the aged. A still smaller book is made by the year's parts of Good News (4d.), the pages of which present the Gospel message with point and vigour.

The January issue of The Quiver opens with a paper entitled "The Queen's Wish," told from the recollections of a former Maid-of-Honour. In a word, her Majesty's desire, as communicated in a deeply interesting conversation, was that her name might be associated with peace and the amity that promotes the ends of justice and right. The pages are as timely as they are interesting; and, as might be expected, well illustrated. In another part of this issue the Editor of "The Quiver" invites his readers to join in a hearty and thankful endorsement of the sentiment of the Czar's manifesto in connection with an international league of peace. Friends of the cause—and what Christian is not?—should secure this issue of our admirable contemporary, and see how to promote the object in view. (6d. Cassell.)

The Bishop of Liverpool's Christian Leaders of the Last Century (3s. 6d. Nelsons) is a timely reissue in book form of vigorous biographical papers, contributed nearly thirty years since to a monthly periodical. Prefacing his sketches by a powerful indictment of the religious and moral condition of England in the days when "Archbishop Cornwallis gave balls and routs at Lambeth Palace until the King himself requested him to desist," when "sermons everywhere were little better than miserable moral essays, utterly devoid of anything likely to awaken, convert, or save souls," Bishop Ryle traces the subsequent revival in a series of graphic delineations of some chief leaders in that great religious upheaval, "familiar in our mouths as household words," when Whitefield's inspired oratory and rushing tears moved and startled the masses into conviction of sin when Wesley built up amid the crumbling ruins of worldliness and unconcern the ground work of the vast organisation of the people called Methodists. As might be anticipated from the character of the author, there is nothing wanting in effort to give a thoroughly characteristic, if compressed account, historical and analytical, of each of the leaders dealt with. Grimshaw of Haworth, William Romaine, Daniel Rowlands, the eccentric but spiritual and gifted Berridge, Henry Venn, one of the fullest of the series, and James Harvey of Weston Flavell are among the great names, besides those of Wesley and Whitefield figuring in the book. A clear-cut, kindly-critical note of that fiery controversialist, the author of "Rock of Ages," is especially interesting. In a summary of the work accomplished by the revival Dr. Ryle introduces some pregnant remarks upon the weaknesses and needs of the present times and insists once again not only upon the duty of standing boldly for Evangelical truth, but of earnestly seeking that power from on high without which the most learned and cultivated intellectualism is as sounding brass and tinkling cymbal.

Mrs. Gorges, of Kingstown, sends out her customary selection of New Year and other cards, neatly got up, and with very choice contents in comforting verse. They are published by Mr. C. Caswell, of Birmingham.

Home Missionary Work.

I.—OUR MEDICAL MISSION.

No thoughtful reader of the Gospels will ask us to justify Medical Mission work. It is not a modern or human invention. It is both primitive and divine. "As ye go, preach . . . . heal the sick."

Our Medical Mission was commenced last May. It has grown rapidly, and is now one of the most important branches of our Home Missionary work.

The present staff consists of a qualified Christian doctor, a sister superintendent, a dispenser, and a trained nurse, with about a dozen Christian workers, several of whom are preparing themselves by home missionary work for service in the foreign field. They go in and out of our darkest slums and most wretched one-room homes to nurse the sick poor.

I have put the word nurse in italics to distinguish it from "visit." It means to do whatever is necessary for the comfort and to ensure the recovery of the suffering one—poulticing, bandaging, bed-making, &c. There is no romance in this. It means to hear, and see, and smell, and handle with many a shudder and quiver what all one's nature recoils from—it means to be amongst the poor a "servant for Jesus' sake."

It is a beautiful service. For what is most menial in itself becomes most beautiful in co-relation to the King. I have in my mind as I write Ruskin's exquisite illustration of this from London mud, in which he shows that its component parts are sand, clay, and soot, the elements of which, re-arranged in a certain order, would make the opal, the sapphire, and the diamond, while the water distilled would form the dewdrop in the heart of a lovely rose. Will not such lovely deeds of mercy "for his name's sake" be, by-and-bye, shown into the consulting room, where the doctor diagnoses their case and prescribes accordingly, giving each a short word of spiritual counsel or comfort. Meanwhile some of the nurses have sallied out on their rounds to visit those who are too sick to leave their homes, while the remainder sing to the patients in the hall or converse with them individually.

The dispenser is busy by this time preparing the medicine which those who have been seen by transmuted into jewels in the crown the Lord will give to each that "hast borne, and hast patience, and for my name's sake hast laboured and hast not fainted?"

The doors are open at 9.30 a.m., and the patients continue to arrive till 10, when the doors are closed. A short service is then held for about twenty-five minutes or so. Then the patients are the doctor are waiting to receive as soon as she can get it ready for them.

Our invalid kitchen is now in full working order to supply, nicely cooked, nourishing dinners, soup, beef-tea, jelly, &c., in cases where wholesome diet (wisely selected and appetizingly cooked) is absolutely necessary for recovery. Here every day the poor come to fetch nourishment for their ailing ones—all portions of hot food being taken away in specially constructed apparatus lined with hot water, so that the food reaches the invalid piping hot.

By our Samaritan Fund we are able to give milk daily for, say, a week to a baby pining away, or a fresh egg daily to a delicate girl, or coal to a poor mother who has not got a scrap to warm a poultice. This relief is only given in cases under visitation recommended by our sister superintendent as really urgent.

This loving care and these tokens of sympathy touch the most obdurate hearts, and have a softening influence over whole families. Many a rough man, many a degraded woman, has got in this ministry of mercy a first glimpse of the Christ-life which has brought a sense of need and sin that can only be fully satisfied by the Saviour Himself revealed to the heart in the Holy Spirit's power.

This Medical Mission is in itself a great undertaking, but it is only a branch of our new home-missionary work. We are in the thick of the winter's struggle against poverty and sickness. Really the strain is as much as we can all bear. We are here to respond in Christ's name to every case of sickness and need. As our dear nursing sisters go in and out amongst the poor they are "the epistle of Christ . . . known and read of all men." Every little comfort, every little article of clothing they take with them sets forth "the love of God shed abroad in our hearts." Will you not try to strengthen their gentle testimony and help them to get an access to many more poverty-stricken homes and sad, weary hearts? Many who are now calling for their loving offices will soon be in eternity.

Any gifts in kind, tea, sugar, rice, arrowroot, meat extract, &c., or garments (new and old) for men, women, and children will be most gratefully received. Also letters for hospitals, convalescent homes, surgical aid societies. No relief is given without careful investigation.

"If thou forbear to deliver them that are drawn unto death, and those that are ready to be slain; if thou sayest, Behold, we knew it not; doth not He that pondereth the heart consider it? and He that keepeth thy soul, doth not He know it? and shall He not render to every man according to his works?" —Prov. xxiv. 11-12.

Church of England.

Dr. Handley G. C. Moule has been appointed hon. chaplain to the Queen.

The Bishopric of Bangor has been conferred on Very Rev. Watkin H. Williams, D.D., Dean of St. Asaph.

The Bishop of London has revised all the additional services that have been brought into use of late years at St. Alban's, Holborn.

The Archbishop of York has issued a pastoral entitled "The Present Distress," in which he deals exhaustively with the questions which are agitating the Church.

Princess Christian visited Brixton last week and laid the foundation-stone of the new church which Rev. W. R. Mowll is having built to replace the present structure known as Christ Church.

The Marquis of Salisbury, who is High Steward of Great Yarmouth, has contributed £50 towards the erection of the Missions to Seamen Church and Institution on the South Quay at Yarmouth, for the sole use of sailors and fishermen frequenting that port.

The amalgamation is announced of three Church societies—namely, the Men's Help Society, the Young Men's Friendly Society, and the Church of England Young Men's Help Society. The Archbishop of Canterbury is to select the governing body of the new society.

The Bishop of London, at a special service in Fulham Palace Chapel, last Friday morning, admitted thirteen students of the Church Army Training Homes as Lay Evangelists in the Church. All of the students had previously been examined and passed by the diocesan examiner appointed by the Bishop.

An interesting and helpful mission has been conducted by Captain Hanson of the Church Army in Strangeways Goal. Those of the prisoners who had had good fathers and mothers the missioner earnestly besought to remember early days. When he struck this note, and dwelt upon it, there was among some of the younger prisoners a certain commotion, and a number were in tears.

Prebendary Barlow is this week issuing his invitations for the annual conference of Evangelical clergy from all parts of England, which will be held on January 10 in Islington. The subject for discussion is the teaching of the Church respecting the Holy Communion. Among the prominent Evangelicals who will take part in the conference are the Dean of Norwich, Canon Girdlestone, Dr. Moule, and Dr. Wace.

The Church News for South Africa says:—"The Bishop of Lebombo, a former curate of St. Peter's, London Docks, writes a letter to his old parish, now under 'Father Wainwright.' He carries about with him a 'portable altar'; sings mass in Zulu; and is trying hard to make the natives 'confess to him.' He writes: 'I am going off to stay for a few days at Hlambankulu . . . to put the people together spiritually, if I can, by having a daily mass there and some classes.'"

Archdeacon Kaye, speaking at the annual meeting of the Lincoln Auxiliary of the British and Foreign Bible Society, said the Churches of Christ at this moment might be divided into two, viz., those which maintained and those which rejected the idea of a human mediator. Those which favoured the system of a mediatorial priesthood would, he contended, sooner or later fail, for they would not stand the fiery test of God's word. He was thankful to say that in the articles and offices of the Church of England there was nothing of that mediatorial priesthood.

Congregational.

Rev. J. Hilton Stowell, M.A., has commenced his ministry at Mount View Church, Stroud Green, N. Large congregations were present at each of the initial Sunday's services.

A special effort to clear the debt on Plymouth Church (Rev. W. Harvey Jellie) has been crowned with success, the entire amount raised showed £100 in excess of the sum asked for.

Mr. George A. Mackenzie, formerly of Spensley Hall Mission, Stoke Newington, in connection with Abney Church, has accepted the pastorate of Christ Church, Stratford, Ontario.

On Sunday last, Dr. Berry was able to offer prayer at the service in his church, and announced two of the hymns. We trust this is a sign of return to permanent health for years to come.

Rev. Thomas Lord, of West Bromwich, recently occupied the pulpit of the newly-reopened church at Wollaston, Northants. Mr. Lord, who is ninety-one years of age, was pastor of the church 1835-45, and two of his children are interred in the burying-ground.

The £4,500 mortgage upon Rev. T. Eynon Davies' church at Beckenham has been cleared. A friend offered the minister £1,000 conditional on the balance being raised by Christmas. Mr. Davies set himself to raise this sum, and has succeeded. Indeed, another £500 needed for structural alterations has also been raised.

Dr. Lyman Abbott, in resigning the pastorate of Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, wrote:—"So reluctant am I to sever my pastoral connection with Plymouth Church, I should still have hesitated and delayed had not a warning been given me this fall which scarcely needed the doctor's interpretation. He leaves me no option but to withdraw from the pastoral work, and devote myself to the equally responsible but quieter work of the pen."

Baptist.

For a branch established by the Baptist Tabernacle Church, Nottingham, in Herbert Street, a new church is about to be erected at a cost of £2,000.

Rev. J. E. Bennett was taken seriously ill in the pulpit at Mare Street Chapel, Hackney, during the Sunday evening service. He is now somewhat better.

Thanksgiving meetings have been held in celebration of the completion of the freehold purchase scheme at Borough Road. At the meeting in the chapel addresses appropriate to the occasion were given by Dr. Dawson Burns, Rev. A. B. Middlemitch, and Rev. E. Poole Connor (the pastor).

The request of Rev. Canon Cremer, rector of Keighley, to be allowed the use of the baptistery at the Albert Street Baptist Chapel, Keighley, for a candidate who wished for admission into the Church of England by the ancient forms of the rite, was courteously acceded to by the pastor and deacons.

Methodist.

Rev. William Crawford, pastor of Carlisle Memorial Church, Belfast, has been appointed principal of Wesley College, Dublin, vacant by the death of the Rev. Dr. Hollingsworth.

The President of the United Methodist Free Churches (Rev. E. D. Cornish) has requested the members of the churches to make a self-denial effort in aid of the Mission Fund early in the new year.

The Wesleyan Chapel Committee has sanctioned an expenditure of £27,820 upon the proposed new mission premises in connection with the London Mission (south), and also an expenditure of £38,515 upon the proposed new mission premises at Edinburgh.

It will be of interest to many of our readers to know that the number of Wesleyan ministers who have already authorised their names to be appended to the Memorial to Lord Salisbury in favour of closing public-houses on the Lord's Day is 1,876. Only ministers in England have been asked to take part in this effort. The work in Scotland, Ireland and Wales will be done separately.

Irish Methodism is to benefit by the Wesleyan Methodist million-guinea scheme to the extent of £50,000, and the Executive Committee has agreed to recommend to the Conference the following allocation:—To the fund for church extension, but assisting in the purchase of sites and the erection of places of worship, and to work amongst soldiers and sailors, £25,000; for home mission purposes, especially the strengthening of Methodism in the Irish smaller towns and villages, £10,000; general mission work, &c., £5,000; to the orphan fund, £3,500; for educational purposes, £3,500; for foreign missions, £2,000; and for supernumerary ministers' fund, £1,000.

Presbyterian.

Rev. D. Stuart Dodge, has been elected by the American Board of Home Missions as President, in place of Dr. John Hall.

The Presbytery of Liverpool has granted Rev. Dr. John Watson leave of absence for three months, for the purpose of enabling him in the spring to visit the West Coast of America.

In the Free Church Presbytery of Glasgow the Rev. Dr. Duff, St. George's, was welcomed on his return from a nine months' voyage round the world, including a special visit to the Australian Colonies.

There are more Presbyterians in Pennsylvania than in any other of the States. They amount to 211,498, or nearly one-fifth of all the Presbyterians of the United States. Their annual contributions average £2 per member.

Rev. Dr. McMurtrie, after nineteen years' service, is retiring from the editorship of Life and Work, the parish magazine of the Church of Scotland. Rev. Archibald Fleming, M.A., Tron Parish Church, Edinburgh, has been appointed his successor.

Mr. W. C. Gray, son of the late Sir William Gray, the well-known Presbyterian of Hartlepool, has informed every clergyman and Nonconformist minister of the town and of the neighbouring parishes that, as a memorial to his late father, he will liquidate the debts on the churches and chapels, as also those on the recently-erected vicarages and the places of worship in course of erection.

Fallen Asleep.

MR. ARTHUR CURTIS, a Wesleyan class leader and Sunday School superintendent at Bedford.—REV. JAMES BENNETTS, Pastor of the Congregational Church at Yelvertoft, near Rugby.—Aged seventy-seven, DR. JAMES S. WAUGH, a famous Wesleyan, who had been President of the Victoria Conference, as well as of the United Conference of all Australia.—MR. WILLIAM TWEEDALE, for a quarter of a century an active worker at Hope Church, Denton.—At the age of seventy-eight, MRS. JOSEPH CHILD, for many years a well-known Wesleyan at High Wycombe.—MRS. JOSHUA LORD, a well-beloved Methodist of Bacup.—MR. CHAS. MAGGS, J.P. of Melksham, circuit steward of the Wiltshire Mission (Wesleyan).—MRS. R. NELLOR, of Stockport, a devoted Wesleyan worker.—MR. THOS. POLLITT, aged 89, a leading member of the Wesleyan Church at Waltham Abbey.—MR. J. H. FELLOWS, J.P., a highly-esteemed Congregationalist of Yarmouth.—MR. W. ADAM, J.P., of Kidderminster, a generous supporter of Congregationalism at home and abroad.—REV. ISAAC DOXSEY, of Camberwell, one of the oldest Baptist ministers in London. Although he had retired from the active ministry for a long period of years, he was frequently in demand in the Baptist churches.—At the age of seventy-three, REV. PETER VALENCE, Presbyterian Minister of Hornclife, Northumberland. He was the oldest ministerial member of the Berwick presbytery, having been ordained to Hornclife, his only charge, in 1858.—MR. THOS. SIMPSON, of Westwood, Leeds, a well-known and much-respected Wesleyan.

Death.

DONATIONS.

Received by Messrs. Morgan and Scott to Monday, December 19, 1898.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or Post Office Orders, not by stamps.

 Will donors oblige by stating explicitly and fully the titles of the institutions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Further correspondence will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that the Donation List is made up for the Printers on Monday morning. Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number of THE CHRISTIAN.

 Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders should be made payable to Messrs. Morgan and Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C., and crossed "London City and Midland Bank;" this will effectually prevent loss.

☞ Donors are particularly requested to fill in "Morgan and Scott" on Postal Orders, in accordance with the Post Office regulations.

Personalia.

Mr. A. G. Lamb, Evangelist, is on his way to North Africa on a few months' visit to the scene of former labours as a pioneer. He desires prayer for a blessing on the visit.

Mr. Alfred S. Dyer has resigned the editorship of the Bombay Guardian owing to failure of health, after holding that post for more than ten years and a half. He and Mrs. Dyer will return to England as soon as their responsibilities can be transferred and their affairs in India settled.

Messrs. Pease, who are extensive colliery owners and coke makers in county Durham, have decided to erect schools for the education of the children of their workpeople at Ushaw Moor. Accommodation will be provided for 600 pupils, and the cost of the premises will be about £5,000.

Mr. Wm. Noble has been for the past four months travelling and speaking in the small towns and villages in the Midland counties, and has had much blessing in the work. Miss Noble has sometimes assisted, and has been much used in singing the Gospel. After a little rest at Christmas, Mr. Noble hopes to take up with work in Birmingham.

Mr. F. P. de Castells, representative of the British and Foreign Bible Society, who has for six years travelled through the five Spanish Republics of Central America—Costa Rica, Nicaragua, Honduras, Salvador, and Guatemala—will be happy before his return to give information to any who are interested in these lands, at meetings or otherwise. His address is 101, London Road, St. Albans, Herts.

M. Paul Besson, who for nineteen years has laboured for Christ with the Argentine Republic, is now enjoying a brief furlough, in the course of which he has addressed various meetings in France and Switzerland. His story is full of interest, and enables one to form some idea of the utter failure (and worse) of the Roman Catholic Mission in South America, and of the pressing need for Gospel preaching and teaching.

SPECIAL—TO THE FOLLOWERS OF CHRIST.

THE JUBILEE SHILLING SUBSCRIPTION

To Complete the Good Work of the

"LIBERATOR" RELIEF FUND

After six years earnest pleading, a further 360,000 shillings still urgently needed to give the assurance of permanent relief to hundreds of aged, destitute, and afflicted victims of the great "Liberator" fraud, who were taught and trained in habits of temperance and thrift by their trusted leaders, only to find themselves suddenly robbed of their life-savings, and driven to face the dreaded workhouse in spite of all their praiseworthy endeavours to make some provision for their old age.

Ninety per cent. of these sufferers are members of some section of the Christian Church.

"Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ."

There are 2,830 cases on the Books of the fund, of whom

1,500 are widows or spinsters.

1,480 are over 60 years of age.

690 are over 70 years of age.

Over 250 deaths through the disaster.

THE BITTER CRY FOR HELP

Is still coming to the Committee from Sufferers who have bravely borne with their difficulties till sickness or great destitution has compelled them to apply.

Cheques and P.O.'s should be made payable to the "Liberator" Relief Fund, crossed "The City Bank," and sent to the Secretary, Rev. J. Stockwell Watts, 16, Farringdon Street, London, E.C.

THE OUTCAST AND STARVING.

70 Homes, &c., in London and Provinces for giving a fresh start in life to every suitable case, irrespective of creed or character. 13,000 cases (men, women, and boys) dealt with in 1897. 58 per cent. turn out well. Tickets for beggars free to donors.

Funds and Old Clothes of Every Description Sorely Needed.

Rev. W. Carlile, Hon. Chief Sec., Church Army, 130, Edgware Road, London, W. Bankers, Barclay's.

THE

"BRIDGE OF HOPE."

THE NIGHT SHELTER. THE REFUGE. 8 COTTAGE TRAINING HOMES.

In order effectively to carry on this threefold and difficult work, both

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTIONS and SPECIAL DONATIONS

are earnestly asked for.

At this Christmas Season we are quite without funds for immediate needs.

MARY H. STEER,

Betts Street, St. George-in-the-East, London, E.

ROYAL NATIONAL

MISSION TO DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

Patron: HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN. This Society carries on Medical Mission Work amongst the Fishermen on the North Sea and other Fishing Grounds, and in Labrador.

HELP EARNESTLY ASKED.

Requires £20,000 per annum.

Treasurer: Thomas B. Mille, Esq. (Offices, 181, Queen Victoria Street, London, E.C.), to whom contributions may be sent; or to the Office of The Christian.

"The Sins of the Fathers"

IS THE TITLE OF THE WINTER APPEAL

OF

THE ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION

The appeal shows how acute are the sufferings of the Innocent Children and Wives of Prisoners, and how constantly their terrible needs are being made known to and relieved by the Mission.

The appeal also shows that

NOT PRISON CASES ONLY

are dealt with, but that a large number of the

STRUGGLING, HARD-WORKING POOR

are assisted in their efforts and supplied with

CHRISTMAS DINNERS, FOOD, CLOTHING, AND FIRING.

Treasurer: F. A. BEVAN, Esq., D.L., J.P., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.

Superintendent: WILLIAM WHEATLEY, 4, Ampton-street, Regent-square, W.C.

Cheques and Postal Orders may be crossed Messrs. Barclay & Co.

THE LONDON FEMALE GUARDIAN SOCIETY

Was founded A.D. 1807 for the RESCUE, RECLAMATION, and PROTECTION of BETRAYED and FALLEN WOMEN from all parts of the United Kingdom, with IMMEDIATE and FREE Admission to Applicants. 100 Inmates.

MANY THOUSANDS of Penitent Women have been welcomed to these HOMES, shielded from evil, instructed in the way of righteousness, and freely supplied with food, clothing, education, and residence for eighteen months. Persons interested in Rescue Work are invited to send cases, and to assist the Industrial Department by patronising its Laundry.

Funds are urgently needed to discharge a Mortgage Debt of £4,000 and to maintain this Christ-like work. Contributions will be thankfully received by Mr. W. Page, Secretary, 191, High Street, Stoke Newington London, N.; or may be sent to the Office of The Christian.

FIELD LANE REFUGES AND RAGGED SCHOOLS.

URGENT APPEAL.

The Committee have recently had very heavy expenses of an unexpected nature, resulting in exceptional demands of from £500 to £600. The Committee therefore very earnestly appeal for increased Contributions to enable them to overtake this severe strain on their income, so that the work may not have to be curtailed.

The Results of the operations increase every year. The applications for help are most painful. Upwards of 3,500 benefits dispensed weekly.

Special for Christmas, 5,000 Dinners.

Treasurer—W. A. BEVAN, Esq., 54, Lombard Street, London, E.C.
Bankers—BARCLAY & CO., Limited, 54, Lombard Street, London, E.C.
Secretary—PEREGRINE PLATT, The Institution, Vine Street, Clerkenwell Road, London, E.C.

THE RESCUE SOCIETY,

79, FINSBURY PAVEMENT, E.C.

We are much encouraged in the merciful work of seeking to Reclaim the Fallen, and by care, training, and instruction in Christian Homes, to Save the Endangered. Provision is also made in special cases to Help Expectant Mothers, while in our small Lock Hospital the helping hand is extended to Heal the Sick who are suffering from the effects of their life of sin.

FUNDS ARE NOW VERY URGENTLY NEEDED, and may be sent to the Bankers, "Barclay & Co.," 54, Lombard Street; or will be gratefully acknowledged if sent to the Secretary.

C. STUART THORPE, 79, Finsbury Pavement, E.C.

Notes & Comments

WE return our hearty thanks to friends who have sent us their Christmas greetings and kind wishes, and especially to those who remember us constantly in prayer. We pray for all our readers, and for the whole Church of God, fulness of blessing, and personal participation in the Revival which so many believe is near to come. May it be the daily petition of all, "Wilt Thou not revive us again, that thy people may rejoice in Thee?" And may the coming year be the best we have ever known!

The closing days of the old year are fitly chosen by custom for self-examination in regard to the things of the Spirit. During these last hours of 1898, let every man look into the secret places of his life, count up his gains and losses, and ask himself if he has duly profited by the lessons of experience, and "grown in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ." No man can spiritually stand still for a whole year; he must either be advancing in goodness, faith and love, or he must be losing ground. The issues of life and death are so solemn and profoundly important, that it is the highest wisdom to "count our days" under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, and so "apply our hearts unto wisdom." There is always something to leave behind with the old year; there is something unattained to aspire to in the new. It is the glad message of the Gospel that it provides us with the means of making a fresh start in those things that make for our eternal peace.

At this period of the year the "earth is girdled with good wishes." Everyone is engaged in wishing well to his neighbour. The philosophy of wishing should not be forgotten in the practice. Wishes are normally the link between thought and action. Where our wishes do not issue in something practical, they may do more harm than good by giving us the sensation of benevolence without its reality. If only the goodwill expressed just now were made the basis of conduct between man and man throughout each year, the world would be a very different kind of place in a very short time. How far the good wishes of the season affect human relations during the months that follow is of course a question hard to settle. That it should add to the forces of practical benevolence is at least as certain as that effects should follow their causes.

In no better way could the New Year be begun than that of confession, praise, and prayer. By Christian people and churches throughout the world the first week will again be consecrated to fellowship with God. Invitations to observe this season have been forwarded by the Evangelical Alliance to the very ends of the earth. It is too late in the history of Christ's church to ask whether prayer is a reality. That it is no vain thing—no mere breathing to the winds — thousands of devout souls have proved again and again. But this period of simultaneous prayer in all lands where Christian men work and serve their Divine Lord Jesus unites believers in the true faith of Christ's Gospel, and the Church will be holier than it would have been had there been no prayer week; the world better, Christian missions more successful, and workers for the Lord more consecrated. To wait upon God in the simplicity of a child—like faith has never yet been without its promised blessing.

Scarcely any promise of God can be more helpful to a devout soul in view of the New Year than that given to Moses, "My presence shall go with thee." All we want to confirm faith and beautify character is the assured knowledge of His "real presence." God travelling with us, resting with us, dwelling with us—here is the source of courage, the spring of activity, and the joy of service; with us through every path, rough or smooth, into which duty may call us. What solace the knowledge of this will be in our days of darkness and disappointment! What hope it will kindle when the heart is tempted to despair! He will go with us—into the New Year; into its joys, successes, victories; into its failures, losses, bereavements. It will be well for us, whatever happens, while He is within call of faith's whispered prayer.

The past year has been full of stirring events at home and abroad. There have been wars and rumours of wars. For the first time for a quarter of a century, two Christian nations have been locked in a death grip. Our own soldiers have been engaged in Africa, Crete, and India. At one time there was imminent peril of an outbreak between us and France. The issue of the Spanish-American and Soudan wars has been the extension of the blessings of liberty to portions of the earth's surface long oppressed and devastated. Crete has been added to those sections of the Turkish Empire where the inhabitants have been released from a cruel and selfish tyranny. For this there is much call for thankfulness and praise.

The position is one of boundless opportunity and vast responsibility. Will the great Empires prove equal to the tasks thus laid upon them? It is easy to fall into a mood of calm optimism as to the future. But a closer view of the aims and policies of civilised nations, in their relation with subject races, is not reassuring. Material aims, lust of territory, a mad passion for wealth, and a deep-rooted suspicion of one another's ulterior motives, rule the counsels of the nations. The way in which the Czar's rescript is being met by some professional statesmen in Europe proves that social and political well-being is not likely to come through them. It is clearer than ever that "the new earth must come by way of Heaven." Our hope is in God, not in Man.

During this last week in the old year, preparations have been made to visit the homes of some two millions of people under the auspices of the Free Church Federation, with a view of specially reaching those who attend no place of worship, and of leaving some helpful literature behind. All suggestion of rivalry between the churches is out of the question; it is a great, united spiritual effort, done on a scale that for thoroughness and simplicity has never been attempted before. The visitors are all Christian men and women; care has been taken to instil the spirit of wisdom as well as sympathy into their methods, and it is hoped that great and lasting good will be attained. The region to be visited is that portion of the country between Rugby on the east and the borders of Wales on the west, and from Burton-on-Trent on the north to the Cotswold Hills on the south. The plan is an experiment that will be watched with interest in other parts of the country, in many of which a similar effort will probably be made ere long.

"To my many and dear friends in three generations younger than my own, with fervent prayer that we all may be kept in the simplicity that is in Christ, steadfast to the truth as it is in Him, and rooted in love." This is the preface to "On the March," a booklet just published by the well-known and venerable author of "Memorials of Hedley Vicars," &c. (Nisbet. 2d., 25 for 3s. 6d.) It is accompanied by a leaflet containing these touching words:

Feltwell Rectory, Brandon, Norfolk.

Owing to the increase of my blindness, I can no longer have the pleasure of writing the names of my friends in the little books which carry my New Year's greeting, but none the less warm are my wishes for a happy and blessed New Year to you and yours.

Long ago, as an old year was just passing away, my dearest revered father gave me this blessing for the New Year: "May your last thought at night, and your first in the morning, be of a dying Saviour's love, a risen Saviour's power, an ascended Saviour's grace, and a returning Saviour's glory." It is a blessing that never grows old; may I share it with you.

CATHERINE MARSH.

We very thankfully share it with our beloved and revered friend.

The introduction of Imperial Penny Postage on January 1st will prove a great boon as far as it extends. Many a kind message will be sent from home to missionaries and relatives, now that it can go for so small a sum, that else would have remained only a good wish. The change will doubtless become universal throughout all British colonies and dependencies, much to the joy of private individuals, and greatly to the advantage of commerce and the public good. Like many reforms, it is said to have sprung from a little experience of the inconvenience and hardship of the old system. Mr. Heaton has lived in Australia "up country," has seen how few letters came to the men, and how the few men who were fortunate enough to get news from home read it out to the rest, much to their delight. At home he one day saw in a village post-office a poor woman who could not afford to pay sixpence for a letter to her son in Australia. Mr. Heaton paid it for her, and soon afterwards her son remitted her five pounds. Many greatly-needed reforms would soon be achieved if some influential persons could be made to suffer the misery which the lack of them entails.

The article in The Quiver called "The Recollections of a Maid of Honour," has, naturally attracted a great deal of attention, and is a very significant sign of the times It must have passed under the eye of Her Majesty, and must, therefore, have considerable authority and influence. Its appearance at this particular juncture, within two months of the meetings of the Congress at St. Petersburg, evidently points to the Queen's strong desire to aid the Czar in his efforts to gain some permanent good for the nations. Some of the "recollections" are worthy of the best thoughts and highest purposes of the distinguished lady who has perhaps more influence than any other person in the world. Ever since she was a child and saw people at work in all kinds of ways, and in every sort of industry, she has not ceased to reflect that they have made this Empire what it is. She declares that her influence has ever been for peace and that only under a regime of peace can a people grow in those graces and virtues which is the aim of our religion to inculcate Her Majesty believes that the labours of men in their peaceful callings are as arduous as those of the soldier, and call out stronger and more enduring qualities.

The Newcastle Chronicle has delivered itself of a scathing attack on some of the tendencies of the age in a way that is refreshing in a morning newspaper. It exposes the mammon-worship of many professed Christians, who vary their mad pursuit of wealth for six days of the week by ostentatious worship of God on the seventh; and contrasts the whole hearted earnestness of men in business with their tepid temper in matters of higher import. These are commonplaces of the religious press; the novelty is to find them preached with so much emphasis in a widely-read secular newspaper. Many who would take no notice of such denunciations in the "usual channels," may be led to solemn reflection when they come through the medium of their accustomed "daily."

The following extract from a parish magazine will show pretty clearly the kind of teaching and preaching which does duty for the doctrine in some of our country districts:

> We are sometimes asked what constitutes the difference between a Christian and a non-Christian? The answer to this is a very simple one. A Christian is one who has been "christened," 'or, in other words, has received Christian baptism; while one who has not been baptised is as yet not a Christian.

This extract illustrates forcibly the evil of Sacramentarian teaching in its worst form. The test here is unscriptural, unspiritual, and irrelevant. It ignores the spiritual doctrine of the New Birth, of saving faith in Christ, and of growth in his likeness. It only needs to be stated in its baldness and "simplicity" to be rejected as contrary to the whole letter and spirit of the Gospel.

How far the anti-Ritualist compaign is to be denounced as fanatical, and as founded on panic, may be judged from some facts in the Tourist's Church Guide, published by the English Church Union. Since 1896 we find that there has been an extraordinary advance. Churches in which daily Eucharist is celebrated have increased from 474 to 613; those in which Eucharistic vestments are worn from 1,632 to 2,026; those using incense from 307 to 381; altar lights from 3,568 to 4,334; and the mixed chalice from 2,111 to 4,030; while the eastward position has been adopted by 7,044, as compared with 5,964. This progress is nothing less than extraordinary; and as it betokens more than meets the eye, indeed a whole brood of Romanist doctrines and secret practices, it is clear that those who are using national money for the purpose of spreading this movement still further have no right to be astonished if the Protestant convictions of the British nation begin to voice themselves in no measured terms.

If anyone ever understood the English market, it was the late Samuel Morley, one of whose sayings has been recalled by the Temperance Record:—

> If every man, woman, or child that needed them could be furnished with a pair of new socks or stockings, it would create such an impetus in the woollen trade that there would be no lack of employment.

The same remark might be applied to food, to all kinds of clothing, to houses, and all that is necessary to furnish them. Our greatest market is at home, if only our people could be persuaded not to waste their money in drink. Our contemporary forcibly asks:—

> Why do feet go bare, and why are so many out of work? Let those who drink, even in so-called moderation, abstain for one year, and there will be some "sensational incidents" that will surprise the nation.

The cause of temperance in the Navy will scarcely be served by the last new regulation of the Admiralty. Hitherto, those who cared to take out their "allowance of grog" in the form of tea, coffee, cocoa, and sugar, and to carry these ashore for the use of their families, were allowed to do so duty-free. In future they must pay the duty on the cocoa, tea, and coffee. This is no encouragement to those who believe in total abstinence among our sailors, who, like the rest of their countrymen, do not like to have their convictions taxed; while the "moderate" drinkers among their fellow-seamen are permitted to drink their grog free of duty as before. This regulation, indeed, is a subtle blow, however unconscious it may be, against total abstinence. The friends of that movement would do well to remember this fact when Parliament meets.

A preacher recently asserted that "the Incarnation is the Atonement." The statement is as mischievous as it is false. The first prophecy of the Redeemer announced to the serpent, concerning the seed of the woman, "It shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel." The term "seed of the woman" implied the Incarnation. "It shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel," was a vivid depicting of the Cross. The Son of God became incarnate that He might die. His life without his death would have saved no one. "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die it abideth alone, but if it die it bringeth forth much fruit." Only through death could He bruise the serpent's head; only by the shedding of blood could atonement be made; only by the sacrifice of Himself could sin be put away. Gen. iii. 15; John xii. 24; Lev. xvi. 27; xvii. 11; Heb. ii. 14; ix. 26.

Britain is not the only portion of the Empire where the question of Sunday observance is becoming a great and critical problem. The Christian Outlook, which emanates from Dunedin, New Zealand, has sounded an alarm regarding the number of people who are too lazy to walk a reasonable distance to their churches, but must ride to them on tramcars and in trains on the Lord's Day. The general laxity on this subject is alarming the older generation, who gave public opinion its form and weight, and to whom is due the upbuilding of the colony in morals and social progress. The sturdier elements and character, built up on the basis of religious training and Sunday observance, are in danger of being lost through the inroads of this easy-going spirit, which is gradually transforming the tone and aims of social life, and that altogether for the worse.

There is no greater hindrance to effective work in the mission-field than any appearance of division among those who do Christ's work among the heathen. It is, therefore, a most encouraging sign of the times to find such a declaration of unity, signed by varied representatives of Christianity, as has just emanated from China. Its purport is to bear emphatic witness to the essential oneness of the signatories in the fundamental principles of their preaching and teaching. Amongst them are ten Congregationalists, five Baptists, eighteen Presbyterians, thirteen Methodist Episcopalians, thirteen Wesleyans, and one of the C.M.S. These hail from all parts of the civilised world, and are headed by the venerable Griffith John. After declaring their desire to fulfil the desire of the Blessed Saviour and Master expressed in his prayer in John xvii. 10, 20-23, the declaration says:—

> "We may still have different views and opinions on several minor questions of our religion, and may follow different methods of Church policy and Christian work, as each one's conscience directs him, but yet we feel WE ARE ONE by the Blood of Jesus, our only Saviour and Mediator, and by his Spirit, Who moves our hearts. We are like different battalions of one great army, fighting under one great Captain (i.e., our common Saviour and Master) for one great end—the proclamation and establishment of Christ's kingdom throughout the world. IN CHRIST WE ARE ONE."

National Refuges.—The Committee of the National Refuges for Homeless and Destitute Children, 164, Shaftesbury Avenue, recently admitted a number of very distressing cases. The children were at once drafted to the Society's Homes at Twickenham, the farm and Shaftesbury Schools at Bisley, and the Girls' Homes at Sudbury and Ealing. One child was the daughter of a cabman who had died of consumption; the mother was found in a most destitute condition, living in one room with her four children. Through the intercession of Hampton's Mission to the Blind, Waterloo Road, admission to the Boys' Home at Twickenham was secured for the motherless son of a poor blind man who sells bootlaces, etc., outside Waterloo Station and is well known to thousands of passengers on the South Western line.

Entering into Temptation.

By Rev. THEODORE L. CUYLER.

THE only thing that our loving Master has taught us to pray constantly to be delivered from is — the danger of temptation, and the power of Evil—or the Evil One, as the Revised Version has it. With some exceptions, the word "tempt" in the Bible signifies a direct enticement to sin under the inducement of pleasure or profit. Unless there is something attractive in the object presented to us, we cannot call it a temptation. Whisky and arsenic are both fatal poisons to a drunkard; but the whisky only is the temptation, because it is the one that appeals to his appetite, and promises immediate gratification. The strength of a temptation depends commonly on the strength of sinful desires within us; it requires no grace to reject what we do not like. A torch does no mischief when it is tossed into a snow bank; it is the torch in the powder-mill that makes the fatal explosion.

A man wearing peculiarly inflammable clothing would have no right to be working in a blacksmith's shop where the sparks are flying. Therefore our all-wise Master lays on us the solemn injunction, "watch and pray, lest ye enter into temptation!" A person enters into temptation when he wilfully places himself under the influence of a sinful enticement, and continues to parley with it. The Christian, who goes off to his lawful business in the morning, may properly ask God to preserve him from the snares he may encounter during the day; but when evening comes, and he buys a ticket to some salacious performance in a theatre, he has no right to pray "deliver me from evil," for he has wilfully thrust his fingers into the devil's mouth. No amount of praying and no number of good resolutions will save you if you that lead you to go wrong. A physician may enter a house from professional duty, while no one who entered it from sensual desire could escape without self-destruction.

The moment that anyone goes towards a dangerous object with a secret desire after that object, that moment he or she enters into temptation. Many persons put a bottle of wine on their table at the bidding of fashion, or from the fancy that the wine is "good for them." That does not alter the inherently deceitful nature of an alcoholic drink. The man that must not complain when he is stung. Probably no church member has ever dreamed of becoming an inebriate when he "entered into the temptation" of using alcoholic stimulants. He took the risk. The saddest case of this kind that I ever knew in my own church was that of a good man who fell into drunkenness from the use of whisky as a "tonic." The danger began when he began to like his medicine. What is true of an intoxicant is as true of gaming or of violations of personal purity. Can any one take coals of fire into his or her bosom and not be burned? We often wonder how, under a sudden temptation, certain persons have fallen from a high position into disgrace and ruin. If we knew the secret history of such cases, we should discover that they had been dallying with temptation until they had been weakened and corrupted by it. The fibre of the tree had become worm-eaten before the gale struck it. No man goes to hell suddenly.

The Master sounded his alarm-bell so loudly against entering into temptation because He knows that He has not a single follower who has not some vulnerable point. No chain is stronger than its weakest link. At the vulnerable point is the spot to post the sentinel.

THE REVIVAL.

1859—1899.

WE have received many letters from our readers on the subject of Revival. Extracts, more or less full, are given from typical communications:—

20, Guildford Road,
Tunbridge Wells.

DEAR MR. EDITOR,—I am so pleased and thankful that you are about to publish a Revival sheet. It will be likely at this time to be of great value in increasing interest in the undoubted awakening that is closely at hand, if not already here. How vividly impressed upon my mind are many of the wonderful scenes witnessed forty years ago, when our gracious God was pleased to vouchsafe an abundant outpouring of his Spirit both on the Church and the World.

The dear old Mission in St. Giles' was one of the many blessed outcomes of this precious season—truly born in Revival fire of 1859 and 1860. Such honoured names as those of Richard Weaver, Reginald Radcliffe, Brownlow North, Denham Smith, Payson Hammond, and Baptist Noel at once come fresh to memory. What the Lord wrought through these and many others of his dear servants eternity alone will disclose.

I feel confident we are just on the eve of another mighty movement. I have recently been visiting my dear friend, John A. Groom (of the Flower Girls' Mission), and have seen much among his people which greatly gladdens my heart. At the Orphanage at Clacton, more than fifty of the elder girls have all come boldly out for Christ during the last few weeks, and the whole of the inmates of the institution are deeply moved by the Divine Spirit; and all this without any exciting meetings or special human effort whatever; and much more will without doubt follow.

I greatly rejoice that you have yourself been permitted to see so much of the mighty work of grace in days past, and still more am I glad that you are with us to-day.—Yours in much esteem and affection, GEORGE HATTON.

I am writing to you concerning the paper called The Revival containing accounts of the Revival of 1859, Revival Hymns, &c., which you are preparing. We are having prayer meetings here every morning at six o'clock (to be continued till the answer comes) for a Revival in the town. Interest is wonderfully awakened, and the spirit of expectation is already abroad. This being the case, I think The Revival sheet you are preparing would be a great help, and would be the means of increasing the interest. Therefore, I am asking you kindly to send me a parcel for free distribution.—From Milborne Port, Som.

I am glad you are going to issue a sheet to be called The Revival. I shall be pleased to have a parcel for distribution when ready. I was converted to God in 1860, and have been in the Revival since. I am deeply interested in this effort to spread the work.—From Wandsworth Road, S.W.

I thank you for the suggestion of evangelists and workers meeting together for special prayer and dedication. God grant it may soon be brought to pass! I well remember the days of 1859 and the sixties, when many of us were on our faces before God for hours. Many of the number are gone home, and others are scattered to the ends of the earth—Duncan Matheson, John Hambleton, Richard Weaver, Wm. Carter, H. Ord, Howard Johnston, Shuldham Henry, and many others. What blessing the Lord gave in answer to prayer! I should like to give my testimony to the value of that choice paper The Revival. It was a great help and cheer to me in those early days, and I have been privileged to circulate many thousands. I pray these things may be kept before the Lord's children, and very soon we may see the wave of blessing coming overland. "Ye are my witnesses." I am so thankful to hear of The Revival reappearing.—From Cwmbran, Mon.

As one who obtained mercy in the year 1859, and who has been enabled to continue in the Lord's service till the present time, I have been deeply interested in the late articles in THE CHRISTIAN on this subject. I do trust we are on the eve of better days than we have yet seen. I am glad to learn that the Revival sheet is being prepared, and have ordered some copies of the first 100,000 on the terms indicated in the notice. I may mention that as secretary of the Belfast City Mission, I have taken the opportunity of speaking during the past two or three years in all our stations on the subject of the Revival of 1859, and the theme has proved a quickening one to our younger missionaries and their helpers.—From Belfast.

I shall be glad to receive copies of The Revival. Five or six of us have been meeting privately for three years to pray for a Revival in this place. We are much encouraged by the general expectation.—From Widnerpoole, Sutton, Surrey.

Will you kindly send me forty-eight copies of The Revival for distribution in Mission Hall and a Bible class held here, so that interest may be increased in this subject, and that all may be led to pray for the Revival, which is longed for by the Lord's people, and so much needed.—From Netley Abbey, near Southampton.

Longings for Revival.

WHAT mean those memories, fresh and sweet,
Of seasons marked by power divine?
Oh! why do kindling tongues repeat
The wondrous tale of "Fifty-nine?"

Doth sound of rain salute our ears?
Is this a cloud like human hand,
Designed to crown these forty years
With showers upon our thirsty land?

The sires are but a hoary few
Who still the glorious days recall:
O God of Grace, those days renew,
And let our last be best of all!

Now, as on Carmel's ancient sod,
Despite the foe's contemptuous ire,
We dare to cry, "Let Him be God
Who answers with descending fire."

For soul-subduing sense of sin;
For fervent prayer and praiseful joy;
For love that yearns the lost to win,
O give us back the years gone by!

For lives as whole burnt offerings laid
Upon the altar fire divine,
Why have our prayers so long delayed
To crave the grace of "Fifty-nine"?

God of our fathers! Thine are we:
Wilt Thou revive us once again?
Our longing eyes are turned to Thee;
O send us now a plenteous rain!

W. MAXWELL.

The Good Pasture which Christ provides for his sheep is eternal life. Nothing withers in it; all is green, all is flourishing.—St. Augustine.

"How Robin Did It" is a booklet giving a very readable account of the "Robin Dinner" movement, founded twenty one years ago by Rev. Charles Bullock. About 24,000 are reached yearly. But London alone contains several hundred thousand children who would rejoice to be "made happy for an evening;" and, at sixpence each for the dinner and evening's entertainment, to welcome these would cost no less than £12,000. "Robin" is becoming popular in the provinces as well as London, and "Robin Dinners" promise to become a national institution. To promote these dinners out of London copies of "How Robin Did It" will be sent, at the cost of 6s. per 100.—Address, "Robin," care of Rev. Charles Bullock, B.D., Coomrith, Eastbourne.

Children's Festival.—The annual Christmas festival of Dr. Stephenson's Children's Home and Orphanage was held in the Queen's Hall. Four hundred children of all ages and both sexes marched into the hall under the banners of their respective "houses," and gave, before a large number of spectators, selections of vocal and instrumental music and drilling displays. Mr. T. McKinnon Wood, Chairman of the London County Council, presided. Dr. Stephenson was prevented by illness from attending, this being only the second festival which he has missed in thirty years. A message was received from him praying for assistance in the work of the Home, and a message of sympathy was returned. The chairman made an earnest appeal to the benevolence of all present, and gave his impression of the home in Bonner Road. He was struck by the absence of pretension, the wise economy, and careful adaptation of limited means to a great end, as well as by the great stress laid on improvement of character. Canon Barnett insisted on the advantages of the system of dividing the children into "houses" in which the essentials of family life are preserved and a child's nature has room to expand.

The Silence of God.

Hab. i. 2.

IN connection with the recent visit of the German Emperor to Palestine, the amicable expressions that have been interchanged by His Majesty and the Sultan of Turkey have caused the deepest pain to all those who have taken the trouble to trace to their source the Armenian massacres of two years ago. It is quite possible that the Emperor William had no intention beyond securing his subjects in Palestine in their liberties, and enlarging the volume of German trade in Turkey; but the fact remains that the crowned monster, whose hands are yet dripping with the blood of thousands of Christ's people, is able to call the Emperor his friend.

To unbelief there is no God; to feeble faith He is indifferent to his people's sufferings. For Satan is the god and prince of the world; the wicked prosper and the righteous are their prey. The following remarks are written for the purpose of endeavouring to of those who can see no system or justice in God's government of the world, in conditions such as these.

First, then, let us remember that the complaint is a very old one. A very considerable part of the Scriptures refer to it. When God first chose Israel to be his people, they had hardly grown beyond the dimensions of a large family circle, when they were plunged into the furnace of affliction in Egypt. And God was absolutely silent. Their infant sons might be slain with the sword, their burdens be increased, and their stripes multiplied till the iron entered into their very soul by reason of their bitter bondage; and yet God, who had chosen them for his own, looked on and spoke not. He remained silent for 400 years. But He had not forgotten. He was not indifferent. This very suffering of theirs had been foretold to Abraham, before ever he had a son to become the father of that nation. (Gen. xv. 13.)

Here then is the leading precedent for every subsequent experience of the kind. For, mark you, we are never told that Israel was thus afflicted as a punishment for any special national sin. They stand as the representatives of God's people in all ages, victims of violence, cruelty, and wrong, who are taught by such means the lesson of patience and faith; unable to comprehend,

BUT STRONG TO TRUST.

As to the reason for such dispensations of suffering, it rests with God. Were there no sin, sorrow or suffering could not be. So much we know. We also know that through trial and pain, of which Satan is permitted to be the minister, the children of God are taught the deepest lessons of their own sinfulness and need of patience, of faith in their Father, and ultimately of love and triumphant adoration and praise. So much we know—that out of evil as we see it, God's highest glory is born. But as to the immediate reasons for the burst of any particular storm of trial upon the individual or the nation, it may not be ours to discover them. "Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?" must satisfy us till the day break and the shadows flee away.

But may we not meanwhile observe and trace the signs that God is not unmindful of the ways of the oppressor? Take the present case. Province after province of Europe has been delivered from the curse of Mohammedan rule in the hands of the Sultan. First, in 1821, Greece shook off the yoke; Roumania, Montenegro, Servia, and Eastern Roumelia have since gained their independence; Bulgaria is but a tributary principality; Bosnia and Herzegovina have gone to Austria; Tunis is French; Egypt is practically English; and even while we write Crete has almost passed to Greece, as Thessaly had done before. Bessarabia went over to Russia, and Cyprus to England. If the Turk could read his own history in the light of God, how changed would his government become! But blindness has happened unto Islam; and though the mills of God grind slowly, they grind exceeding sure.

The Ottoman Empire is doomed for its crimes. The blood of 300,000 Christian victims slain before the eyes of Europe in the latest series of massacres, is crying to God from the ground, and no patronage on the part of Germany or discord of the great Powers can avert the judgment, that is only

HELD BACK TILL IT IS RIPE TO FALL.

As it happened to Egypt and to Babylon in the past, so will it happen to Turkey. The silence of God is but for a time; as a giant refreshed with wine will He awake, and pour out upon the cruel oppressor the vials of his wrathful judgments. (Ps. x. 1, 11, 12.)

Meantime, we have but to remember Calvary. Which of the victims of the Ottoman has suffered more cruelly than did the Crucified Christ? That He must needs die for man's redemption is no answer to this argument. For, so far as we know, He might have laid down his life, not merely by a voluntary act, as He did, but also without the interference of any human agent of death.

But He died as a martyr. Cruelty, malice, and bloodthirst vented their rage upon the Son of God. And yet God spared not, shielded not, his Son. Heaven was silent while the awful tragedy transpired. This is the consolation of the martyrs of all ages—"If the world hate you, ye know that it hated Me before it hated you." "If they have persecuted Me, they will also persecute you." The fellowship of Christ in their agony is the martyrs' support. But again,

WHY IS THIS "SILENCE OF GOD"?

Those who have read Dr. Anderson's remarkable book bearing this title know the reason. God's "silence" in a world of sin is but another name for his "grace." This is the time of the reign of God in Grace. Let us think for one moment. If God were to act in instant judgment against national crime and cruelty, He would be reigning in righteousness as He yet will do. That will be the character of the millennial régime. But it is not that of the present one. Now Grace reigns. And if our indignation demands the instant punishment of a guilty Sultan, by what plea shall we ask for mercy to a guilty subject of his? Let us be consistent. We proclaim the long-suffering of God that leads men to repentance; how, then, can we rebel against that long-suffering when a guilty nation is in question?

And so it comes to pass that the mystery of suffering seen at the cross is EXPLAINED BY THE CROSS.

The cruel hands that slay Christ's saints are those that slew Himself. The prayer of his dying breath, "Forgive them, Father," reveals the mercy-seat, the throne of grace, by which judgment is restrained till its appointed hour shall come and the mystery of all the ages be solved.

Thus we may reduce the whole question to the following four propositions:

(1) That the present dispensation is a time of persecution and cruel oppression, at divers times and places, of the righteous, who are servants of God, and the temporary impunity of their merciless oppressors.

(2) That this is permitted because God is purposely withholding judgment, that, by his long-suffering, guilty men and nations may have opportunity to seek pardon and salvation in Christ.

(3) That nevertheless, as moral governor of the earth, He will not and doth not permit unrighteous governments to stand, but gradually, if not instantly, putteth down the offending nation and setteth up another in its place.

(4) That ultimately, in the age that is approaching, the complete and final overthrow of the guilty nations will be accomplished, giving place to the reign of Messiah over all the earth; and that all men individually who refuse the message of the Gospel in this time of God's long-suffering, shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and from the glory of his power.

In conclusion, refer to Psalm lxxiii. as expressing in the words of Asaph the mystery of suffering and its solution, so far as it was then made known to man:

I was envious at the arrogant when I saw the prosperity of the wicked. . . . They scoff, and in wickedness utter oppression, . . . Therefore his people return hither, and waters of a full cup are wrung out by them, and they say, "How doth God know, and is there knowledge in the Most High?" . . . Surely in vain have I cleansed my heart, and washed my hands in innocency, for all the day long have I been plagued and chastened every morning. . . . When I thought how I might know this, it was too painful for me, until I went into the Sanctuary of God, and considered their latter end. . . . Thou castest them down to destruction. How are they become a desolation in a moment! As a dream when one awaketh, so, O Lord, when Thou awakest, Thou shalt despise their image.

That passage gives the compensation of judgment. The following gives

THE COMPENSATION OF MERCY:—

"Remember mine affliction and my misery, the wormwood and the gall. . . . It is good that a man [or nation] should hope and quietly wait for the salvation of Jehovah. Let him sit alone and keep silence, because He hath laid it upon him. . . . Let him give his cheek to him that smiteth him; let him be filled full with reproach, for Jehovah will not cast off for ever. For though He cause grief, yet will He have compassion according to the multitude of his mercies, for He doth not afflict willingly, nor grieve the children of men, to crush under foot all the prisoners of the earth." (Lam. iii. 19-34.)

The equipment of spirit necessary for the patient endurance of unpunished crime is only to be acquired in a general study of God's dealings with the world as revealed in the Bible, which may be briefly summarised as follows:—

That Satan has not yet been dislodged from the footing among men which he secured in Eden by our forefather's imbecility and disobedience; that he will be so at the appointed time, as one result of the coming, and death, and resurrection of Christ; and that meantime we are called to fellowship with the omni-patient God, and stirred to co-operate with Him in the salvation of the victims of sin and Satan by the healing virtue of the blood of the Lamb.

Theatrical Employés.

IT was a happy idea, conceived by Mr. William Forbes some twenty years ago, to bring theatrical employés, otherwise out of reach, within the sound of the Gospel by means of social tea-meetings. We have lately had the pleasure of attending one of these gatherings, and were pleased to see the room crowded with happy-looking women of all ages, evidently enjoying the treat and the intercourse with each other. After a few songs, the old, old story of Jesus and his love was told over and over again, and listened to most attentively. The gleam of sunshine had dispersed for awhile the clouds of sorrow and grief, and personal wants had made them think of their souls.

Mr. Forbes, who is carrying on the work without any resources of his own and but little help from outside, keeps in touch with many theatrical employés, occasionally relieving cases of distress according to his ability. One of the women present, who had been out of work for some time, and whom he had helped a little, wrote to him lately:—"To-day (Saturday) I was telling my little girl that we had no food, but God would not forsake us. A few minutes afterwards your welcome note came, and I had a good cry over it."

If friends will arrange for meetings, Mr. Forbes will gladly attend, and give an account of his work. His address is—71, Tollington Road, Holloway, London, N. W. M.

Exodus xx.

THE soul of every man comes to Sinai—the mount that may be touched, and that burns with fire. The sense of our responsibility to God, the knowledge that we must account to Him, the consciousness that there are certain restrictions and limitations beyond which we may not pass, is burnt in upon us. This is the first step in our education and sanctification.

There are certain distinctions which must be made in the Divine life. We must learn that there are things that God forbids, not for others alone, but for ourselves. These prohibitions are intended to mark out the right way, as the lighthouses on rocky headlands to keep the vessel in mid-channel. But they also reveal our helplessness. We learn that in us, that is, in ourselves, dwelleth no good thing. The good we would, we do not; the evil we would not, we do. Thus the law is our schoolmaster, to bring us to Christ. What the law cannot do, because of our human weakness, God does in us by the grace of the Holy Spirit. In this manner the demands of the law are fulfilled in us, who walk, not after the flesh, but after the Spirit.

In these words God is touching upon the very nature of things, and unfolding to us the essential order of the universe. To the unholy, sensuous soul these announcements may appear storm-girt and terrible, but to those who love God there is positive joy in hearing what He wills us to become. All his commands are enablings; and what He enjoins He is prepared to realise in those that yield themselves to Him. Oh that this New Year may see us working out with fear and trembling all that He works within!

Exodus xxi.

Very drastic is this code. The death-penalty was constantly in use, the law of exact retaliation always in force. This was necessary in the first stage of the nation's life. "An eye for an eye, tooth for tooth, hand for hand, foot for foot, burning for burning, strife for strife." All was straightforward, and easy of administration; but it was not all. Therefore it was repealed by one greater than Moses, who bade us not to resist evil, or insist on the exaction of penalty, but to love to the uttermost.

There are two limits, however, to the policy on which Christ insists: first, the stability of the commonwealth, and secondly the welfare of the evil-doer. As to the first, it may become necessary that some audacious tyrant should be checked with a strong hand, as any other criminal should be. As to the second, it is not good for a wicked man to get all he asks, as it may encourage him in his evil ways. But wherever the Spirit of Divine love is shed abroad, we shall know how to act, and shall not need any to teach us. Let us ask for the Holy Spirit, whose first fruit is Love.

But beneath what appears drastic and punitive, how much mercy is here! The poor man's daughter (11); the escape of the man who was not intentionally a murderer (13); the protection of the slave (20); the preservation of the community from the ferocious beast (28). Mercy rejoiceth against judgment, and out of the midst of Sinai come premonitions of the Mount of Beatitudes and of Calvary.

TUESDAY, January 3.

Exodus xxii.

Restitution was a distinct item in the Old Testament; surely it should not be lost sight of in the New. Sin cannot be put away, in matters where restitution is feasible, until there has been confession and restitution. We must, if possible, make good the loss which anyone may have sustained through our wrong-doing. This may not always be possible. The wronged one may have passed beyond our sphere; or there may be no possibility of making good the wrong in kind. Still, this should always be the intention of the soul. Human law may allow a man release, if he pay five shillings in the pound, but God's law holds him liable for the other fifteen shillings. And he has no right to spend lavishly on himself till his creditors are paid in full.

But see the graciousness of the Lord! He protects the stranger, the widow, and the fatherless child, if they are affected in any wise. He constitutes Himself the poor man's friend, whose garment has been taken in pledge. He demands that the young be left for eight days with its dam. So tender and thoughtful is the great God. Should these words be read by the poor and oppressed, let them take heart and put themselves under his Divine protection.

This whole chapter insists on the righting of wrongs; whether by restitution, or by the Divine care of the oppressed. And shall we not help God in comforting his own elect? Go through the world, not rendering evil for evil, but contrariwise blessing. Let your hearts be filled with love, that you may be able to make up for the inequalities of life to those who are downtrodden and oppressed. Bring smiles into sad faces, and sunshine into forlorn hearts.

WEDNESDAY, January 4.

Exodus xxiii.

The Angel of this chapter is none other than our Emmanuel. Stephen says that Moses was in the church of the wilderness with the Angel which spake to him in Mount Sinai; and we know that this Angel was the Lord Himself, for Moses was bidden to take the shoes from off his feet in worship. Besides we are told here that God's name, or nature, was in Him. The Lord Jesus, then, was the escort of the Pilgrim Host, preceding the people in their desert march, and in this way preparing an enduring illustration of what He meant when He said, "I am with you alway, even unto the end of the age."

He goes with us, and before us. He is an enemy to our enemies, and an adversary to our adversaries. Satan cannot stand before Him. Whatever be the formidableness of our foes, they must fall back before the captain of the Lord's Host. And He will bring us in to possess the land, which is now possessed by those who hate and resist us.

There is no territory in Christian living which is not meant to be possessed, and which will not come into our occupation if we follow the Lamb whithersoever He goeth. Only let us see to it that we neither grieve nor provoke Him. There is a terrible alternative presented here. He is an angel to his obedient people, but a hornet to their foes. Everyone is called upon to choose one or the other aspect of our Saviour's character—Saviour or Judge; the love and gentleness of the Lamb, or the wrath of the Lamb.

THURSDAY, January 5.

Exodus xxiv.

It is not given to all to have face to face fellowship with God. Most, like the children of Israel, must remain at the foot of the Mount; some few, like the seventy elders, may see Him from afar, and the sapphire work under his feet; the ones and twos, like Joshua, may come to closer and more prolonged communion; but only Moses is welcomed, the innermost friend, to whom God speaks face to face. To which of these four concentric circles have we attained? All these regulations as to approaching God were designed to convey the conception of his holiness and greatness. If only seventy, and these the most notable men of Israel, were permitted to come into the Mount, and even these kept afar off; if even Joshua must drop behind as Moses ascends; if even Moses is kept waiting six days, and exceedingly fears and quakes—then how infinitely holy and great God must be! But we, who by nature and practice were once far off, have been made nigh. We are invited, nay bidden, to draw nigh, in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience.

Moses went to receive the law, but Jesus brought grace and truth. Moses went for an audience as a servant, but Jesus abides with the Father as a Son. Moses ratified the covenant of works with the blood of beasts; Jesus ratified the new covenant with his own blood, once shed for the sins of the world. Moses is irradiated with a glory that soon fades from his face, while the face of Jesus for evermore reflects the glory of the in dwelling Shekinah.

FRIDAY, January 6.

Exodus xxv.

Jesus is verily here. His body was the sanctuary of God's indwelling during his earthly life; and the Church, which is his body now, is the tabernacle of God. Know ye not that He dwelleth in his people as the sun in the heavens? These, the Psalmist says, are his tabernacle, whence each morning He cometh forth to run his daily race; and the Church is the tabernacle, whence the Bridegroom of faithful souls issues forth for their enlightening and comfort.

The ark, with its mercy seat, is a type of Jesus as the meeting-place between God and man. The gold bespeaks his deity, the wood his humanity. The mercy-seat, or propitiatory, gazed on by angels, and stained with blood, is his atoning work, through which we draw nigh to God.

The table of shew-bread, again, tells us of Jesus, in the human side of his character, whereon the soul is invited to feed; his obedience in life and unto death; his gracious, life-giving words; his humility and strength—these are as bread, which we assimilate for ourselves. The priests ate the shewbread; and we can only act as a holy priesthood in proportion as we feed on the heavenly bread.

The candlestick, with its seven lights, is significant of the light which He and his people disseminate in the world. "I am the light of the world." This was "the true light, that lighteth every man." "Ye are the light of the world." Let us, then, shine with the plenteous oil of the Holy Spirit, that we may take up and fulfil the ministry which Jesus commenced, and left us to complete.

SATURDAY, January 7.

Exodus xxvi.

How minute and particular were the directions that God gave to his servant! The selvedge, hooks, and loops were as distinctly and carefully specified as the position of the furniture in the Holy Place; nothing was left to chance or human judgment. Moses was bidden to make all things according to the pattern shown him in the Mount. If he added aught thereto it would disturb the harmony and symmetry of the whole design. At the same time, he could not feel condemned if anything were wanting which his fancy might have suggested. All that was required of him was perfect obedience.

It would bring great order and comfort into our own lives if this lesson were well pondered. We are perpetually wondering whether we should do this or the other thing in addition to work which we are already engaged on; and there creeps in on the Christian worker a restlessness, which is inimical to peace and successful endeavour. How can we make a steady advance unless we know clearly what God requires? It is certain, then, that we must get into the Mount, and live near enough to God to know his will, and yield ourselves to Him for his high purposes. Then be at rest. Do nothing by the fussy prompting of your own planning; but do not fail to do anything to which He clearly points, though it be trivial as a piece of selvedge. Be just what God wants you to be, whether a daisy or an oak, a glowworm or a star.

ACROSS THE MEDITERRANEAN.

FOR interest, there is no comparison between a voyage on an Atlantic liner and a trip from Gibraltar to Port Said, and onwards towards the Rising Sun. When the shores of Ireland disappear on the horizon, you know that there can be no sign of land until you sight Sandy Hook; but the passenger from London for the East may join his vessel from Gibraltar, Marseilles, or Brindisi, and will frequently enjoy en route glimpses of beautiful or historic sites.

Monday was full of farewells; Tuesday of necessary preparations; on Wednesday, I drove through the dripping streets to Victoria, and joined the train in which the Sirdar was travelling. Reaching Marseilles at midday on Thursday, I found the ss. Himalaya, in which my wife had sailed from London, awaiting us. In the afternoon we left the harbour, one thousand souls in all, and the noble vessel propelled irresistibly forwards by engines of 10,000 horse-power.

The first day or two aboard one of these huge floating models are always strange. You are finding your way about, settling your cabin, beginning to know your fellow-voyagers, with whom the courtesies of the vessel permit you to speak freely and without the formality of an introduction.

We have some delightful people on board—true Christians—not only in the missionary group, but among the young men who are going out in connection with the Civil Service to India, Ceylon, and Singapore, or to represent large business houses in China, Australia, and Japan. Some are travelling for health and some for pleasure; some returning after furlough; others going for the first time; military men accompanying the Sirdar to Egypt, whose talk is of Fashoda and Khartoum; doctors, commissioned by the English Government to go out and study and combat the plague; civilians, tea-planters and traders; men of mark and note, like Sir Charles Mitchell, and young men whose life lies before them like an unwritten code. With several of these young men I have had and it has been most encouraging to notice the high purpose they have formed, not only to keep true to Christ amid the strong temptations to which they will be exposed, but to exert what influence they may acquire for His glory. One comes from Dr. Monro Gibson's congregation; another from Abney Park; a third has played the organ at Wandsworth; a fourth from Brixton. This one represents the Y.M.C.A., and that the Y.P.S.C.E., and many others. It is quite a ministry to have the profitable and leisurely conversations, which are so possible during the long hours on deck.

On Saturday, we had a great treat. It was a lovely morning. The sun shone brilliantly on a fairly calm sea. Before breakfast we passed through the Straits between Corsica and Sardinia. After breakfast we entered the Straits of Messina, through which Paul passed in the Castor and Pollux, on his way from Melita to Puteoli. On our left were the rugged extremities of Italy—rain-clouds brooding dark on the bare mountain tops; on our right, the smiling coast-line of Sicily bathed in sunlight; hamlets and single houses, painted white, standing amid plantations of olives. Presently Etna came in view, her shoulders swathed in cumulo-clouds, her summit thickly covered with snow, a cloud of smoke hanging over her volcanic orifice.

The Apostle travelled in the reverse direction. He came from Syracuse, down the Sicilian coast, beyond Etna, where they had spent three days. Passing the easternmost point of Sicily, the ship came to Rhegium on the Italian coast, and thence with a south wind, round the coast, the toe of the boot, to the Bay of Naples.

IT WAS INTENSELY INTERESTING, and obliterated my regret that I could not hear the baying of Scylla's hounds, or discern the famous whirlpool of Charybdis. Æolus kept the winds in this island, and Vulcan wrought at his forge in that; these fabled heroes have gone, but the thought of that heroic soul, who went to and fro on these seas for his Master, can never be dissipated whilst time endures.

On Sunday there was an even greater treat. We had had prayers in the morning, and the wind had suddenly freshened from the N.W., the very quarter from which the dreaded Euroclydon swept down on the ship in which Paul was being carried as a prisoner to Rome. Many of the passengers were suffering severely, but I, weather-proof, was standing alone on the hurricane deck, thinking of my friends and church. Suddenly I espied on the port side, cliffs of land, radiant in the sunshine, and enquiring, found it was Crete. A tumult of emotion filled my heart. Crete, drenched with the blood of successive generations of patriots, fighting for liberty from an unbearable despotism: Crete, for which Greece had suffered so much; Crete, from whom within a few days the last Turkish troops had been expelled, and to which a Christian governor had come; yes, that Crete, along the lee of which the cornship crept on that disastrous day, when the shipmaster, against Paul's advice, urged its removal from Fair Havens for Phœnicia, which provided better accommodation for the winter sojourn. Caught by this strong N.W. wind, the craft had been driven out on the open sea, and at Candia yonder, where the lighthouse stands, whilst sheltered from the fury of the storm, the boat had been taken on board. Then for fourteen days and nights, driven up and down over these seas.

At service in the saloon after our evening meal, there was plenty of singing, and I preached. This, with many opportunities for conversation and meditation, made a profitable and happy day. And now we are coming to our first experience of Eastern life, at Port Said, with a crowd of commingling thoughts. On the one hand, it is the first glimpse of the true Orient; on the other, one is so much nearer that great India, with its problems, responsibilities, and opportunities.

Port Said, December 12.

Take Time.

TAKE TIME TO THINK:

Thought oft will save thee from the snare,
Bring thee to cooling streams and bowers,
Spare thee from nursing needless care,
Surround thee with defensive towers;
Yield thee the harvest of content,
Lift thee from dust to starry ways,
Discover comfort heaven-sent
In thy most dark and cheerless days,
Therefore, take time to think.

TAKE TIME TO PRAY:

For when thou pray'st the vision's cleared,
The voice is toned, the will's subdued,
The dear are to thee more endeared,
And the soul's failing strength's renewed.
In prayer the purest words are spoken,
The mind receives heaven's holy light,
The heart is given the Spirit's token,
The hands are charged with wisdom's might.
Therefore, take time to pray.

TAKE TIME TO PRAISE:

Praise is the witness that you see,
Or hear, or feel, or understand,
Or trust where there is mystery
About the workings of His hand.
It is thy child-attempt to prove
Thy kinship with the hosts above,
Who, as they in God's presence move,
Praise Him for his exhaustless love.
Therefore, take time to praise.

TAKE TIME TO WORK:

Know what a privilege it is
To work with God, to have thy hand
Engaged for Him, thy energies
Developing 'neath his command.
To share the stores of grace and truth
Which to his faithful ones are given;
In service to maintain thy youth,
And hear the Lord's "Well done!" in heaven.
Therefore take time to work.

GEORGE A. SUTTLE.

FROM OTHER LANDS.

Notes from Cannes.

IT has long been laid on my heart to let fellow-workers in England know of the great and increasing need of France, but specially just now of the Riviera and of Cannes, where thousands of us have flocked in the past for sunshine and health and enjoyment. Nowhere is the sunny, hearty nature of the provençal more pleasant to meet with than in this corner of the land.

In connection with the fine M'All hall there is but one lady worker by the side of the Baron de Bethune and his frail wife; whereas quite a dozen bright, motherly women ought to help at the hall door, in the schools, in visitation, and by the aged and the sick. The mothers' meeting alone means arduous and persevering work, and has been very largely under one devoted worker.

I am told that a hall used of God for years, close to the cemeteries here, is closed for want of a speaker this year. The former evangelist's little furnished house, in its orange groove, is still available for a comparatively small sum. In a central situation, and close to the Scotch church, is the French Y.W.C.A. work (opened by a devoted worker, Madame Auzière), a centre of simple Gospel teaching and motherly influence to some thirty young French women, mostly maid-servants, in this place of temptation of all kinds. I may perhaps mention that very fitly, and having no personal resources whatever to carry on the work, Madame Auzière has just opened in the same house, on a lower floor (1, Rue Borniol), a ladies' boarding-house, where five or six may find a refined and comfortable home. A young worker, Mdlle. S., the manager of the British and Foreign Bible Society here, helps Madame Auzière.

Touring in Bulgaria.

FOR several weeks I have been on an evangelistic tour in Western Bulgaria. By the kind help of the Children's Special Service Mission, I have been enabled to distribute several thousands of leaflets among the children of Bulgarians, Greeks, Turks, and Jews. Also, by the kindly help of the Association for the Free Distribution of the Scriptures, I have distributed many Gospels and Testaments among various nationalities and faiths. In one large town, as I was distributing tracts and Gospels in the Roman Catholic quarter, I heard somebody calling after me. When I turned, I saw a priest coming towards me. Although many Catholics were looking on, he said, boldly: "Mr. Tonjoroff, will you do me a service to supply me with a Bulgarian Bible, for I have great need of one."

I promised very willingly to do so, and next day, quite early, with my bag full of books and a Bulgarian Bible in my hand, I started for the convent, which is connected with the bishop's palace and the cathedral. My wife said, "Hide the Bible; perhaps the priest does not want the others to see it." I thought, however, that as he had asked for it openly, I would take it to him openly. Arrived at the convent, I was taken from one cloister to another, whereupon the thought came into my mind that perhaps I was being played some foul trick. Still, I went boldly on, trusting to my heavenly Father for protection.

At last the looked-for priest arrived, and I was let into his little room with a simple bed, table, chair, little bookcase, and a crucifix. "I have begun to preach in Bulgarian in the cathedral," said he, "and need a Bulgarian Bible to help me in my preaching." He was very thankful to get the Bible; and after some talk upon the spiritual need of the people, and the supply provided by Christ, I started to go. But he was so much affected that, taking me by the hand, he earnestly said, "The work is hard; let us pray for each other!" I was very thankful to hear him say so, and blessed the Lord in my heart.

My dear wife, not being able to do much at our dispensary, often visits the Government and Catholic hospitals. One of the nurses asked her to give her a Bible, but privately, so that she might hide it at the bottom of her trunk and read it when alone at night. Some time ago I gave to one of the chief Turkish hodjas (priests) the Gospel of Matthew in Turkish, with the request to read it with care and prayer. Some time afterwards, meeting me in one of the most populous streets, he kissed me, saying, "I have read, my brother, some of the book you gave me; but as there is more I want to read, I am not yet ready to meet for explanation. The teaching in the fifth chapter of Matthew is wonderful." In a Turkish shop, where I met with two educated Turks, a Jew, and an Orthodox Bulgarian citizen, we had delightful conversation on Christ as Son of God and Redeemer of the world.

I have just arrived in Sophia, and illness has kept me for some days in my room; but I am better now, thank God. If it had not been for the kindness of some native brethren who took me to their homes, I would not have been able to do much during my evangelistic tour. I long to travel to North Bulgaria, and I pray the Lord to provide me the means. J. A. Tonjoroff.

The Plague in India.

THE mortality caused by the plague is very awful; carts go about to pick up the dead and the dying. Natives, from dread of going to the segregation camp, endeavour to conceal the dead by carrying them off secretly in the darkness of the night, and throwing them into tanks and wells. A friend who has visited the segregation camp says that it is a valley of misery and weeping, for they are all bereaved of dear ones by this awful visitation.

As the people cannot understand why so few Europeans and Eurasians are attacked, they imagine that those are given more efficacious medicine, and they have been much enraged against us. We have been in far more danger from the malice of the Mohammedans than from the plague; efforts have been made to spread contagion amongst us by throwing plague corpses into our compounds and even our houses. The people are panic stricken, and tens of thousands have fled from Bangalore homeless, friendless, and ruined. Many are encamped in uncultivated fields outside villages, exposed to the wet and cold of this very inclement season. Our hearts bleed, and are sad for our suffering fellow creatures; and the saddest thing of all is that we can do them no good.

We have 121 children in our home, 42 of whom are boys. It is very difficult for a Eurasian lad to obtain a livelihood in this land of native rule. We have a farm specially for the benefit of our boys. Under favourable circumstances it is an interesting and satisfactory way of earning a livelihood.

Our farm of 80 acres of splendid land is situated at the village of Chigraparam, in the gold fields, and the gold mines offer a very good market for vegetables of every kind. We have applied for 30 to 40 acres of Government waste land in connection with our village, which can be used for wet crop cultivation. We have about 120 acres of good land, dry and wet, low assessment for thirty years, plenty of water, and a very good market for vegetables. Hitherto the mines have been supplied with vegetables from Bangalore; but sad news reached us a few days ago: the heavy and continuous rains breached the tank above ours, and its waters rolled down on our already full tank, and it gave way before the overpowering pressure. It is disappointing and distressing, and the trouble is too overwhelming for me to carry. The villagers around us sympathise much, and they are willing to give a helping hand to rebuild the tank. The villagers say it is more than ten years since such rains fell in these parts.

I earnestly ask your readers to remember us in prayer, for truly we are surrounded by peril and danger from plague and violence.

Agra Training Institution.

WRITING with regard to the dispensary connected with his work, Dr. Colin Valentine says:—The dispensary sprang out of the terrible famine of 1897. During the past year we have treated 26,617 patients, every one of whom has heard the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Having no dispensary building, we have been compelled to see the patients in our verandah. This arrangement has not only been exceedingly inconvenient, but also most distressing, as quite a number of the poor people were compelled to sit outside. They come in the midst of pouring rain, also in the hot season when the place is like a blast furnace.

We must have a dispensary building. It will cost from £300 to £400. The Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society will not be able to assist us in this, so I am asking friends interested in our work to do so. We have at present twenty-two students in the Training Institution, drawn, as usual, from almost all missionary societies in Northern India, and some even from Southern India.

We have just had a delightful conference in our institute of the Indian Sunday School Association. Friends came from many parts of the country. Interesting papers were read, and the experiences of missionaries given in connection with this most important and growing work.

On the 12th instant I entered upon my thirty-eighth year's service in India. How few are on the field who were upholding the standard so long ago!

American Volunteers.

IN his latest report Mr. Ballington Booth says: The second fiscal year of the Volunteers of America ended on November 30, thus closing the second successful year as a society since its incorporation. Notwithstanding that the work was deprived of the presence of Mrs. Booth in active service for months through serious illness, and that the late Cuban war took from the ranks some of the most efficient officers and musicians, as well as made it impossible to expect the support that otherwise would have been received during the year, the movement has continued to advance, and has become a great lever for moral and social good. Thousands have been won from sin to righteousness; the claims of the Gospel have been earnestly pressed upon the multitudes, and comfort, cheer, and temporal assistance, have been rendered to many.

During the year some seventy thousand meetings have been held, out of which the reports on the attendance show that at least two million people were brought under the influence of the Gospel. The efforts put forth to win the ungodly to righteousness have been bountifully blessed of God. During the year a large number of conversions have been reported, independent of the special meetings, which are constantly being held. As an instance of the encouraging results reported on revival effort, three letters received from clergymen in charge of New York churches show that each church received an average of seventy-six members from the number making profession of conversion.

Twenty-three thousand four hundred open-air meetings conducted enabled the workers to reach thousands who otherwise would not have attended other indoor services.

Six months' returns from one social institution alone shows that over twenty thousand men availed themselves of the opportunities offered to secure food and shelter at a nominal cost. The little ones have not been forgotten, thousands being fed and cared for during the holiday season. A number of Sunday-schools have been established which give promise of a successful work in the future.

The prison work has steadily advanced, now being established in nine of the principal State prisons, and in touch with nearly 10,000 prisoners in the country. Besides the enormous influence for good exerted through meetings in the prisons, some 2,700 men have been enrolled in the prison league, having given evidence of reformation. Three prison homes have been established, for men without friends to whom they can go, while endeavouring to secure employment, and the facilities developing for the securing of employment for the men are constantly increasing, thus giving promise of solving the most vexing problem in connection with prison work.

Cholera in India.

PRAYER is asked for Miss Reade, of the South Arcot Highways and Hedges Mission. She writes on Nov. 22nd: "Cholera is literally all around; hardly a village uninfected. In consequence of the insane idea that Government is trying to kill them off by poisoning the wells and administering the plague virus, the people refuse to take any medicine or nourishment from either the Government dresser or myself. One woman's poor sunken eyes simply glared with terror when she saw me, and she said: 'Go, go! I don't want anything. Let me die. If I die, I die.' A bystander said, 'Let her die quietly by herself.' In two instances I found an unhappy woman who had been shut in all night by herself—not a soul who would go near her to give a drop of medicine or food."

Open Doors in N. Africa.

WORKERS connected with the North Africa Mission have been going through the villages and towns, indeed, penetrating distant desert regions, with the object of spreading the Gospel among those who know it not. The journals of the travelling evangelists tell of devoted effort with much attendant interest, although Islam yet holds general sway among the people.

Mr. W. Kumm has had a peep into the vast Sahara, spending a month on the edge of the Lybian desert. He met with much kindness, and distributed copies of the Gospels. The sick and wounded were brought to him, and his efforts in the way of healing were highly appreciated. Dressing like the natives, with kaftan and turban, Mr. Kumm found ready entrance among the people, who called him "brother," and listened attentively to his teaching. The Omdi, or head-man, of Kerdase, to whom he rendered timely service by dressing a wounded hand, invited him to a great feast. In company with a good-natured Bedawi, Mr. Kumm made expeditions into the desert, and on one occasion was surprised to be addressed: "Are you not afraid of me, you who live among the fellaheen? What if I should kill you, and take away your belongings? You have no weapon of defence; and none would know what had become of you!" Looking into the wild man's face, Mr. Kumm said: "No, I am not afraid of you. Why should I be? You are my friend. Besides, I have a defence of which you do not know. Allah is on my side!" Stretching out his hand, the man said: "Then you need not fear me; I am your brother." Reflecting on his travels, Mr. Kumm feels that his call to go amongst the free-born of the Sahara has been fully confirmed. It is his conviction that these men, if won for the Saviour, will make the best missionaries to the Moslems.

Messrs. W. Dickins and C. T. N. Hooper have made an extensive tour in the towns and villages of the Nile Delta, preaching the Gospel to the thousands of Moslems who compose the population. Their diaries tell of extended canal journeys, involving many dangers and delays. They found numerous opportunities of speaking on the Gospel from lantern representations of Bible scenes. Now and again cases arose of evident interest in the things of God. On the other hand, there was occasional opposition, but nothing occurred to qualify their feeling that much good work may be done by itinerating the towns and villages of the interior.

The Gospel at Bilbao.

IN 1876, the Evangelical Continental Society founded a mission at Bilbao, Spain, the work of which has for some years been in the hands of Pastor José Marqués, who is better known, and has an influence greater than any exercised by Roman Catholic priest or missionary in the neighbourhood. In addition to the itinerating work carried on throughout the district, there is an unceasing distribution and sale of tracts, books, and the Scriptures by a colporteur under the guidance of Senor Marqués. Fruits of this work are being continually discovered in most unexpected quarters.

Then there are meetings held in the mines on stated days at certain places, where systematic instruction in the Gospel is carried on from month to month. Simultaneously with this, the work in the chapel, in the schools, and in the city is faithfully discharged. Of late, from want of adequate support, the Evangelical Continental Society has had seriously to reduce its grant. Senor Marqués has, however, in spite of all, resolutely stood to his post. His good friend, Pastor Enrique de Tienda (of Santander) has come to England to seek help for the work. Communications to him may be addressed to the care of Rev. George H. Giddins, Sec. Ev. Contl. Society, 13, Memorial Hall, Farringdon Street, E.C.

News from Gujarat.

IN a recent letter to Mr. Grant Jackson, of Edinburgh, Mr. Man Sukh Lal writes:—

"I have a strange mixture of news to give you—sadness and gladness combined. I have been out for some long tours on my faithful helper, the camel; and the Lord has marvellously prepared the people's hearts to receive the Gospel. During the last few weeks, in my circuit alone, we have baptised no fewer than 550 people. Nearly all of these are the relatives of Christians. A large proportion of the converts are women, and you know what that means in an Eastern land. We might have baptized some hundreds more, but felt that all doubtful ones should be kept under instruction a little longer.

"Of course, such splendid harvestings are largely the result of the steady organised labour of the native pastor-teachers. A few days ago the Christians in one of the villages elected one of their number to act as a steward to gather their offerings for the week. This is a promise of greater things to come in the line of self-supporting Christianity in Gujurat.

"Day by day the plague is closing in upon us, and mercilessly claiming its victims. I have just received word that three of our villages are attacked, and that ten of our new converts have died. The people are terrified, and fleeing in all directions, but only to be turned back by the patrols. The greater number are sleeping in the roads and fields, as Government has ordered the evacuation of the infected places."

Tibetan Pioneer Mission.

WRITING to her sister in England from Yatung, Tibet, on October 18, Miss Annie R. Taylor says:—

"Trade is looking up this month. I have already sold 160 rupees worth of stores. The Chinese (a Chinese official, with retinue, came from Lhasa to the Chumbi Valley with a view to the boundary settlement) are bringing some Australian jam, sent me from Calcutta. I sell it at 8 annas a tin. I have a good many patients, too, to treat. The weather is bright, and very enjoyable after the long rains; it makes one brisker, and able to work well. Monday was my birthday. I am now forty-three. What a joy it is to look forward to be part of the bride of the Lamb—to be amongst those who will dwell continuously with Him and do his bidding!"

Writing on November 17, she says:—"There will be plenty to do with the Chinese Ambassador and his followers at Rinchingong (a little village down the valley). I hear they are going to stay there until May. The Chinese underlings are very friendly, and come and listen to the Gospel, and take back tracts and Gospels with them. I had quite a number of them singing Chinese hymns in my room to-day.

Miss S. M. Taylor writes to us: "My sister again has her little school (it was suspended for some time, chiefly owing to the lamas setting up a rival establishment the other side of the barrier wall), greatly to her joy. For some months she has had two Chinese youths, so advanced that she had to send to China for books for them. She has been ardently desiring for help in their education; this help will come in Miss Fosbery, who has had twelve years experience in China as a C.I.M. worker. The other little scholars are Tibetans, or some possibly of mixed parentage. The Mission garden entails much work; although 10,000 feet above sea level, peas, beans, cabbages and other vegetables thrive well under my sister's care, and she rears English flowers too, to adorn her little parlour. The distribution of Mrs. Grimké's texts, and of the Gospels in Tibetan to the many encampments of passers-by, also occupies much time. In fact, she has more than she can do single-handed, and will be grateful for the coming re-inforcement."

Indian Pariahs.—Mr. W. Raju, of Madras, sends us an account of his gospel work among the Pariahs in the villages. He is able to tell of conversion in the case of some, and of many among the young who are breaking with their heathen customs and beliefs. The field is a hard and difficult one, but school work and Gospel effort are helping to Christianise as well as civilise these social outcasts.

A New Year Offering for Egypt.—At the monthly conference of the Y.W.C.A., on Thursday, December 15, two of the London workers, Miss Emerson and Miss Holman, were commended to God for Association work in Egypt. It was announced that £50 had been received that week from a lady who had lived a winter in Alexandria, and was so convinced of the needs that with difficulty she had been able to save that amount from other claims; but a further sum of £150 is needed for the winter's work. Many present had it laid on their hearts to pray that these ready workers might not be kept back for lack of funds. It is impossible for them to go out unless the money is provided by the New Year. Hon. Miss E. Kinnaird (London Y.W.C.A.), 115, Mount-street, W., will be glad to receive contributions.

New Year's Eve.

THE Year's last sun in the fair west had waned,
And frosted night dews on his brow lay cold;
His sceptre fallen and his reign has ended,
His funeral knell is softly, sadly tolled.

The Year has gone, and we may not recall it,
Though o'er its misspent gifts our hearts may sigh;
Yet whilst we mourn, the Son of God, so tender,
With kisses of forgiveness draweth nigh!

The Year has gone, and springtide flowers have faded,
Sweet summer vanished with her queenly grace;
Maternal autumn to austere King Winter,
His robes of snow and ice-gemmed crown, gave place.

The Year has gone, and loved ones have departed,
With yearning gaze we at the empty chair,
For silver locks, or childhood's golden tresses,
Youth's pale high brow, and maiden's blushes fair.

But in the Home where God's redeemed ones gather,
Their triumph songs and harp, love tuned, ring clear,
In tenderness their eyes o'er us are watching,
During the dying hours of the old Year.

The Year has gone, yet 'mid the wave or furnace,
O'er hill and vale the Christ has with us trod.
Why fear we then? for through our Heavenward journey
One is our Guide, even the Incarnate God.

A New Year Wish.

At the stroke of the midnight bell,
To my brethren far and near,
I would offer a greeting of Christmas love—
I wish you a glad New Year!

May the light of the glory of God,
In your hearts be clear and true,
True as the beam of the Northern star,
Enthroned in the Arctic blue.

By the cleansing blood of Christ,
By his love's perennial flow,
May you walk in white through the world's dark night,
In white as the moonlit snow!

May Christ with the opening year,
Your soul with his might endue;
To establish the kingdom of God on earth,
And change the old for the new.

Kept by His Power.

Kept by the power of God, through faith, unto salvation.—1 Peter i. 5.

With kindest wish, and prayerful thought this morning,
I offer thee these simple words of cheer;
Whate'er may meet thee in life's future dawning,
May they afford thee comfort, year by year.

"Kept by his power"—no human arm upholding,
No human hand out-stretched to point the way;
But God's great love, his feeble child enfolding,
Is all-sufficient for thy need each day.

Be not afraid; for as each need arises,
With strong, absorbing, self-important claim,
God it will meet with his divine surprises,
If thou but call upon his holy name.

"Kept by his power"—when sun is gaily shining
And glory crowns thy pathway with its light;
Kept by his power—when daylight is declining,
And lengthening shadows tell of coming night.

"Kept" when the world for thee its smile is wreathing,
When skies are fair, and life with roses spread;
"Kept" when its frown to thee it is bequeathing
And clouds are massing darkly over head.

"Kept" for the guerdon of the Master's praises,
Kept that his "well done" may thy spirit greet;
Kept through earth's labyrinth of 'wildering mazes,
Kept in the track of the great Shepherd's feet.

His power to keep is strong and true as ever,
No length of years can e'er its force abate;
His will to keep can never fail—no, never;
While Mercy stands at heav'n's wide-open gate.

Then journey on, leave fear and anxious worry
To those who know not that the Lord doth reign;
Keep step with Him, forego impatient hurry,
Trust Him to make the rough steep places plain.

His name is 'Love,' and love its best doth measure,
With royal largesse unto those in need;
Then may He now outpour His fullest pleasure,
Upon thee graciously, in very deed!

The New Year.

ANOTHER year the opening morn shall bring;
Hark! hark! the midnight bells their welcome ring!
For thee, departing year, those pæans swell
With sacred memories and a kind farewell!

With grateful heart the past would I review,
And render praise where only praise is due;
My harp this day would I once more retune,
For blessings have, thro' life, my pathway strewn.

A hand unseen has ever safely kept
My life from danger, as I peaceful slept;
And when wild winds on other barks have blown,
In tender love that Arm was round me thrown.

The joys of home, with its o'erflowing love,
God's loving kindness thro' life's journey prove;
His heavenly sunshine thro' the year that's gone
On half a hundred Sabbath days hath shone.

For friends that journeyed with us side by side
How oft the gates of pearl have opened wide;
And tho' on earth their smile we see no more,
We trust to meet them on th' eternal shore.

Through all the year, how grace and beauty wove
A mystic chain sustained by perfect love;
So may we find throughout this glad New Year,
Our heart's love casteth out unworthy fear.

As unto Christ we bring our every care,
Maintain the watch, and breathe unceasing prayer;
His grace shall keep us victors in the strife,
While daily walking in the Light of life!

Deacon Abraham's Orphanages.

IT having come to our knowledge that some remarks have been made in England giving unfavourable impressions of the work of Deacon Abraham, we feel it our duty as trustees of the Orphanage to say that on investigation of the charges made they have proved to be false. We also beg to state:

1. That the Orphanages have been carried on by Deacon Abraham for the last nineteen years; the children are well cared for, and many who have left have turned out well.

2. That it is economically managed and the accounts audited.

3. That a trust deed of the Orphanage property has been executed by Deacon Abraham, and duly registered at Her Majesty's British Consulate.

4. That we regret that the present income will not allow more children to be received, although some are almost daily brought to the Orphanage in a destitute condition at this present time of distress, which pleads for enlarged sympathy and interest in this good work.

Our Lord's words in St. Matthew xxv. 35, &c., seem especially to apply to such work, and we commend it to the Lord's people.

Livingstonia Mission.—Dr. Robert Scott has taken the place of the late Dr. A. Roby Fletcher at Bandawé. Mr. Robert McMinn has left for home after five years' earnest, faithful work at Bandawé, and carries with him the best wishes of many natives of that district as well as of his European fellow-workers. Rev. James Henderson, after three years of hard, earnest work at the Livingstonia Missionary Institution, also goes home on furlough. During Rev. Mr. Henderson's absence, Mr. Charles Stuart is to come from Ngoniland to Livingstonia for the work in the institution.

Mr. W. Draper,

ARTISAN MISSIONARY, CENTRAL AFRICA.

IN the board room of the Mission House of the London Missionary Society there is an interesting collection of portraits of men who have served the Society at home and abroad. One of the things that strikes the observer is the large proportion of them who began life as working men, mostly as artisans. There is Henry Nott, a carpenter, who went out in 1796 to Tahiti, with twenty-four other artisans, four missionaries and a doctor. He proved himself to be one of the best of the company, and translated the Bible into Tahitian. Next is Dr. Morrison, a maker of lasts, who translated the Bible into Chinese. John Williams, the martyr of Erromanga, follows; originally he was an ironmonger who worked at the forge and carried his tool-basket. Then there are Dr. Moffat, who began life as a gardener, and Dr. Livingstone, who began life as a weaver. Next to them is William Ellis, of Madagascar, who also was a gardener.

This line of honourable men continues to the present day. Not a few of our best missionaries have toiled in the workshop, and then had a good mental training at college, while others go forth as artisans, in order that they may make handicraft a handmaid to heartcraft. Africa offers a field to them, and to that field Mr. William Draper was sent by the L.M.S.

Mr. Draper was born at Hoddesdon, Herts, and was blest with a father and mother who were both devoted friends of missionary work. His father had himself wanted to be a missionary, but was hindered; his zeal, however, never died down, and he used regularly to speak to his children of missionaries and their work. He died when William was a boy of twelve, and then the mother continued the same useful method. The boy, who from his earliest consciousness, so far as memory travels back, had always loved the Saviour, received the seed into good ground; and while it was growing in his heart he was obtaining that mechanical and technical training which was to prepare him for his peculiar work. He was trained in carpentry and building.

Mr. Draper in June, 1888, went forth with a Central African party, his destination being Urambo, 120 miles to the east of Lake Tanganyika. The station was not a new one. Two had died at it, and Rev. T. F. Shaw and Mrs. Shaw, with whom Mr. Draper travelled, had been there before. The place was, at the time of their arrival, in charge of Mr. Brooks, an artisan missionary, who shortly afterwards, on his way home, was slain by Arabs when within two days of the coast. What with fever and the fierce, unprincipled Arabs, who at that time had an enormous power, the life of the missionary was in constant peril.

Not twenty persons came out to welcome the missionary party when it arrived. Mr. Draper's first experience was an attack of fever, which laid him low for three months. When he recovered he set to work to finish certain buildings, and gathered round him a class of thirty boys. Mr. Shaw, who knew the language, went on with his preaching and teaching and translating the Gospel of Mark, but the number that could be collected to hear the Word was very small. Yet the mission had rooted itself. The native chief, Panda-Chalo, brother of the famous Mirambo, had been summoned by the Arab chief again and again to remove the missionaries; but he would not yield, and every day he sent to inquire after their safety and well-being.

Urambo is in that strip of territory on the east of Tanganyika, which is under German rule, a circumstance which at first threatened to work disadvantageously to the mission, but now is proving a help. When the Germans came into possession they thought that these Englishmen were either traders or bad men who had fled hither for safety from justice. That spirit of suspicion gradually died away, and when Mr. Draper came home the German representative wrote him, "in old good friendship," a letter full of kind wishes.

Tribal wars were at first so frequent, and life so uncertain, that even the most regular attendant at public worship would not be present oftener than twenty times in a year.

Now the Germans have changed all that. The congregation at first numbered only ten or twelve, not a woman being in the company, nor did one come for months. Afterwards, a steady growth set in, and then the increase became quicker. The mission station was to the people round about like a solid island in the midst of a morass. The natives gathered around it, especially the women, for protection from the native soldiers. Immorality is the greatest obstacle to the spread of the Gospel there, and no doubt it was a good thing, in view of that fact, that a change was effected in the mission, and three married missionaries and their wives supplanted one unmarried man.

For in 1895 Mr. and Mrs. Shaw were obliged to leave on account of health, and Mr. Draper was left alone, the nearest white persons to him being the Germans, who were sixty-five miles away. Now the artisan had to preach, to teach, and to doctor. For four months in the year he managed to gather a girls' school, and his boys' school had grown to ninety-eight, with an attendance of sixty to seventy a day. It was a busy life; the solitary worker began at 5.15 a.m. and continued to 6.45 p.m., and he worked on Sundays as well. The busy days were easy enough to get through; the strain was in the loneliness of the nights. It is not to be wondered at that he was prostrated with fever. Then came forth the native fidelity and affection; his people nursed him until he was well.

The L.M.S. was led by several circumstances to conclude that it would be best to transfer its mission at Urambo to the Moravian Missionary Society, and this was accordingly done in 1897. Mr. Draper remained to receive the two married couples who were sent out, to help them to acquire the language, and to give them, as far as possible, the benefit of his experience. This was a great reinforcement of strength, which has been further increased by another husband and wife who only recently arrived—six instead of one. But what are they among the two millions of people living in that district? Still the light is spreading from those small centres; a line of missions for 500 miles is carried into that dark region; and so shall all Africa be claimed and won for Christ.

The greatness of the change in the thought and feeling effected by ten years of steady work on Mr. Draper's part, and by the work of those who had preceded him or co-operated with him, was evidenced when the time came for him to leave. No less than 1,400 persons, each bearing a present, came to see him; and between 2,000 and 3,000 accompanied him as far as they could on his journey when he started. The best of all is that they have been crowding in to the services held by the new missionaries, even more than they did in Mr. Draper's time, and that great hopes are entertained of the early ingathering of a great spiritual harvest. All the work has had to be done carefully, but now from the boys and girls who have been long and well-trained there may come a considerable number who will bear the Saviour's name in holiness of heart and life.

Since his return home, Mr. Draper has been so ill with fever that his life was almost despaired of, but God raised him up again, and will, we trust, grant him many more years of service.

Children's Medical Mission.

IN this month's Medical Missions at Home and Abroad, Miss Annie R. Butler, secretary of the London Medical Mission, writes regarding a recent visit to Scotland:

The Glasgow Children's Medical Missionary Association must always be specially interesting to us, for it was started only four months later than our own London society, and adopted similar "objects" for work—to promote and extend a knowledge and love of medical missions among the young, and to encourage and support medical mission work at home and abroad.

Never has an association been worked more faithfully, happily and successfully, than has this Glasgow one; chiefly, perhaps, because of the untiring devotion of two of its early office-bearers—Mr. J. C. Robertson (president) and Miss Smart (treasurer).

You may think what a joy it was to me to see the bright faces of the boys and girls of the association on Saturday morning in the Free Church College. The association has branches in Hamilton and Helensburgh, and amongst them no less than upwards of £2,000 has been given away to various missionary objects.

Christ's Appeal for Labourers.

By Sir GEORGE WILLIAMS.

WE extract some portions of the New Year's Address for 1899, issued to members of Young Men's Christian Associations, by Sir George Williams:—

The motto text selected by the National Council is full of suggestion. "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the labourers are few; pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that He will send forth labourers into his harvest" (Matthew ix. 37, 38). This suggests to us the topic, Christ's Appeal for Labourers, and Our Relation to it—a subject the consideration of which will, I trust, not only excite our prayerful interest, but will be of practical value to us in our life and work. What we need is to see with the eyes of Christ, and to feel with the heart of Christ. Then, as we contemplate the surging multitudes of unsaved, and especially those who come within the circle of our influence, we shall be enabled to regard them in the same light that Christ did.

Compassion such as Christ had will not rest content until it is embodied in noble deeds and self-sacrificing service for Him. Only let the Christ spirit pervade our Associations and possess our members, and apathy and indifference, and all effort of a perfunctory character, will give place to intense earnestness and a passionate desire for the souls of men. May God give us grace to form an adequate conception of the TRUE CONDITION OF MEN AROUND US.

By universal agreement the opportunities of the Christian Church, both at home and abroad, are at the present time unrivalled by any previous period in the history of Christianity. This awakens profound gratitude and hope in the hearts of all who are solicitous for the extension of Christ's Kingdom. Throughout the Associations I pray that there may be a corresponding recognition of the responsibilities which are involved in the increased opportunities.

But now, as then, the labourers are few. In every department of Christian effort there is a lamentable lack of labourers. They are altogether incommensurate with the demands. The Y.M.C.A. is no exception; nevertheless we are, thank God, a vast and increasing army of young men who have promised, by our pledge of membership, to become missionaries in the sphere of our daily calling. It is impossible to tabulate or adequately to estimate the amount of good which is thus effected. Yet we deplore the lack of labourers. We do not want so much a multiplication of agencies.

OUR PRESSING, THROBBING NEED

is men—devoted, earnest, consecrated men—men whose hearts God has touched, and who are all aglow with love to Him. And these men are obtainable; our need may be supplied.

Our relation as Associations to this appeal is one of duty and privilege. It is our duty to respond, because Christ commands us to do so. It is our privilege, because it suggests to us the secret by which the need may be supplied. I would that I could arouse the Associations to a sense of their unspeakable privilege in this direction. We shall grow numerically and spiritually, just in proportion as we work in line with God by prayer. No Association can live, much less grow, without prayer.

Christ's command is an appeal to every individual member—"Pray ye." In what measure do we respond? Is this petition the frequent burden of our prayers? Are we in the habit of asking God to raise up among us men of his own selection, who will be true labourers in his harvest field? If we do not pray, and the labourers do not come, who is responsible? "Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He will send forth labourers into his harvest." I appeal to every member to make this petition the special subject of his prayer during 1899. Let us have faith to believe that during the year there will be a considerable increase of membership, and a large accession to our ranks. Then we may reasonably expect, what I am persuaded we all desire, that the closing year of the 19th Century shall be conspicuous for practical usefulness in every department of Association work.

In no period of the world's history has the Y.M.C.A. been more needed than it is to-day. We live in remarkable times. From whatever standpoint we look, the air is full of eager questionings. As Associations, I believe we should ever be in close touch with the problems of the hour, and keenly alive to the pressing necessities of the age; at the same time, I would urge you all, with an earnestness which I cannot too strongly emphasise, to hold with a tenacious grip to those fundamental principles which in the past have been the secret of our consolidated strength, and which are essentially the ground upon which our hopes must be built for the future.

We are entrusted with the responsibility of a great and glorious mission. May God make us truly sensible of this, and as, in answer to our prayers, He sends forth more labourers into his harvest field, may He also so inspire and quicken the hearts of those who are already there that there may be a great revival of interest amongst us, and that the year 1899 may be, in the history of all our Associations, one of harvest activity, of harvest ingathering, and of harvest rejoicing!

What would'st thou be?

"WHAT would'st thou be?
A blessing to each one surrounding me,
A chalice of dew to the weary heart,
A sunbeam of joy bidding sorrow depart;
To the storm-tossed vessel a beacon light,
A nightingale song in the darkest night;
A beckoning hand to a far-off goal,
An angel of love to each friendless soul;
An echo of Heaven's unceasing praise;
A mirror here of his light and love;
And a polished gem in His crown above."

Week of Universal Prayer.

JANUARY 1-8, 1899.

Meetings convened by the Council of the Evangelical Alliance will be held at EXETER HALL, STRAND, 1 P.M.

Monday, January 2, address by Rev. F. S. Webster; January 3, address by Rev. W. Darlow Sarjeant; January 4, address by Mr. R. Anderson, LL.D.; January 5, address by Rev. W. Fuller Gooch; January 6, address by Rev. J. Gritton, D.D.; January 7, address by Rev. A. J. Poynder.

PORTMAN ROOMS, BAKER STREET, 5 P.M.

Tuesday, January 3, speaker, Rev. E. G. Gange, subject, "The Priesthood of Believers;" January 4, speaker, Rev. Gilbert Karney; subject, "The Spiritual Character of the Church of Christ;" January 5, speaker, Rev. Charles G. Moore; subject, "The Abiding Grace of the Cross of Christ;" January 6, speaker, Rev. H. Particulars can be obtained locally.

Home Missions

Edinburgh City Mission.

FOR sixty-six years the Edinburgh City Mission has been at work among the poorer portion of the city population, and through the daily visitation of the people in their homes by the missionaries is carrying on a most useful ministry. A large portion of the people are outside all church connection, and long experience has proved that visitation is the great leverage for their elevation. In addition to this work there are district mission halls where nearly one thousand people every Lord's Day hear the Gospel. It is found that the outwardly decent but religiously indifferent are on the increase. By this means many of them are being reached and restored to the Churches.

There is special work among the children, cabman, lodging-house occupants, and public-houses. During the past year thousands of tracts were given away in the police-cells, and 2,100 prisoners conversed with. Rescue and preventative work is carried on, and some fifty-five women have, during the year, been induced to leave a life of sin. Much blessing has attended the labours of the missionaries. The directors are making appeals for increased help, as the work is likely to be crippled or curtailed for the want of adequate support.

Metropolitan Tabernacle.

ON Sunday next, January 1, the new lower hall of the Metropolitan Tabernacle, work upon which was begun shortly after the burning of the famous building in April, will be opened for its first service, which will be made an occasion of great thanksgiving. Rev. T. Spurgeon will preach. The hall, which will seat nearly two thousand, is considered by the Building Committee to be well lighted, heated, ventilated, and protected against fire. It has a platform, baptistry, and vestries, and its floor is of pitchpine blocks. The cost has been about £7,860.

The superstructure will cost £32,550, according to the revised estimate of Messrs. Higgs and Hill, Limited, whose tender was the lowest of seven, the highest being £36,399. The committee, glad to have the whole of the rebuilding carried out under the supervision of Mr. Higgs—who, like his father, the original builder of the Tabernacle, is devoted to the church—proposes to complete the contract forthwith, so that work may be begun in January. Furniture and fittings will cost some £3,500 more. In addition to the insurance money (£22,000) and the donations received, a sum of £16,000 will be needed to meet all claims, which amount to £44,576, and for this the committee will appeal to friends of all denominations.

London Presbyterians.

THE following description of two recent accessions to the ranks of the Presbyterian Ministry in the Metropolis is contributed by its London correspondent to the Aberdeen Free Press:—

"Several Presbyterian ministers from Scotland have quite recently been settled in London.

REV. ALEXANDER MATHESON, a graduate, I believe, of Aberdeen, has come from Blair Atholl to Belgravia. His new church is within a stonethrow of Belgrave Square, where only the very wealthy can live. It is tightly wedged between other buildings, but looks quite worthy of the aristocratic neighbourhood; and, although so small that, when the minister spreads out his arms to pronounce the blessing, you might imagine he could shake hands with the people in the front row of the side galleries, inside the church has quite a well-to-do air. The open wooden roof, the numerous windows with tiny coloured panes, the pews and the cushions are such as need not offend the fastidious taste even of those dwellers in Belgrave Square who may attend what some folks call 'the Scotch Chapel.' I found a considerable congregration this forenoon, and not a few of those present were obviously strangers. Mr. Matheson ought to fill the church. His sermon showed study and ability, and it was capitally delivered, the Highland accent being quite pleasant, at any rate, to northern ear, and some passages reaching an eloquent height without effort. In appearance Mr. Matheson does not realise the Southern conception of a Highlander, as he has no beard. His forehead is bold, and his face is pale, sharp, and clear. It is the face of a student who believes in 'revivals.'

"Another new Presbyterian minister is who has come from a Free Church in Edinburgh to be the colleague of Dr. M'Ewan in Clapham. Mr. Currie is a man of very strong individuality. I wish I had a word to hit him off. To speak of his vigour is not sufficient. His whole manner is intense. There are some churches in which one may dream idle dreams, imagine vain deeds, or plot a novel in the brain, but Mr. Currie seizes the attention. Into his words he puts himself, and whether you like the words or not, you listen to them with interest. His advent in Clapham has been watched with curiosity. The stately Presbyterian Church, with its large congregation and its sprinkling of carriage folk, has often impressed strangers, both in the pulpit and in the pews, as cold and uninviting. Mr. Currie has taken this church by the ear, and has given it a good shaking, and the congregation, I believe, rather like the operation. He is Scotch to the core in his gravity and in his consuming concern for the education and proper upbringing of children, and he has a dreadful distrust of London. His sermons, which I think occupy about twenty-five minutes, are worthy of a Scotch-taught minister, but are so rapidly delivered that the words tumble over one another, their impressiveness springing from the nervous energy and passionate intensity of the speaker, who sometimes surprises the hearer with a thrill of pathos."

Wynd Mission, Glasgow.

LAST week the memorial stone of the halls connected with the Wynd Church was laid by Lord Overtoun. A preparatory service was held in the church, at which Mr. John Colville, M.P., presided. Rev. J. Riddell said the church was revived some years ago for a perfectly definite purpose of striving with the evils of drink and other forms of misconduct. The hardship could only be known by those who made the acquaintance of the people, and the number of such persons in a city like Glasgow could not be less than from 100,000 to 120,000. Their special mission as a church was to offer their assistance to the poor submerged brothers and sisters discouraged, who were around them in great numbers. There were about 1,000 young people connected with the Church, and that number would soon be increased when they got possession of the halls. In the Medical Mission the average number of the attendance throughout the past ten years had been close on 2,634 annually. He tendered his thanks to those who had given their assistance on this occasion.

The congregation adjourned to the halls' where the memorial stone was laid by Lord Overtoun. On returning to the church, his lordship addressed the congregation. The name of the Wynd Church, he said, called up the idea, if not of apostolic succession, at least of evangelical succession. The name of the church was warm to them, and they noted it more recently in connection with the work of Mr. M'Coll, who had been a guide and a blessing, and to whom the people looked back to this day with thanks. The evangelical succession had depended largely on the gifts of the devout men connected with it. In the latest development of the Wynd Church they had reason to give thanks at the result of the labours of Mr. Riddell. This work was not carried on by the Free Church only but by outside denominations as well. They rejoiced in the varied branches of the work of Christ. This church was set down in a very needy neighbourhood, and it was put there in order that it might be a Free Church propaganda, that it might be a centre of life and warmth in this community.

In the evening a social meeting was held in the church, when Mr. Riddell gave an address, in which he traced the history of the church. A stipulation had been made in connection with the church that no one should pay a seat rent, that every human being should have access to the church, and have the comforts of the gospel. Any money derived from the new building would not go to the congregation, but to support the medical work among the poor.

"Liberator" Sufferers.

UNDER the title of Echoes from the Liberator Prison, Rev. J. Stockwell Watts issues a pamphlet appealing for further help for the sufferers. The amount subscribed to the fund amounts to £82,000, but £18,000 more is necessary to enable the annuities to continue to be paid on which the victims are wholly or in part dependent. To the 2,800 cases already upon the books of the relief fund during the past twelve months more than ninety entirely new cases have been added—as piteous as any of those previously dealt with—with this further feature, that the victims have struggled on and on against their dificulties, until sickness and destitution compelled them to apply.

An analysis of the cases on the books shows that nearly 150 different occupations are mentioned, and yet about half the victims are too old to follow any employment whatever, and have simply marked their application form "no occupation." But of those whose late occupation is revealed, it is interesting to note, that as many as 160 have been domestic servants, 127 labourers, 80 governesses, 70 clergymen and ministers, 67 small shopkeepers, 65 dressmakers, &c.

Mr. Watts adds: "—Of the ninety new cases relieved this year many are over seventy, and the majority are over sixty years of age. It would have been very hard to refuse them, especially as they had struggled so long to avoid applying to us, and were only driven to do so by stern necessity. And although sixty-one of these poor 'Prisoners of Hope' on our books have been released by death during this year, it would be exceedingly difficult for us to take on any more new cases without raising our original estimate of £100,000." Mr. Watts' address is 16, Farringdon Street, London, E.C.

Shankill Road Mission, Belfast.

OF the large sum of £12,000 or £12,500 required for the present block of buildings, about £9,000 has been either paid or promised. Rev. Henry Montgomery, the hon. superintendent of the mission, hopes that in a large undertaking of this character he may receive the practical sympathy of God's stewards in different parts of the land who sympathise with a work which keeps an open door for the preaching of the Gospel every night all the year round.

Mr. Montgomery has been already much encouraged by his efforts amongst drunkards and the generally abandoned. Even into the new buildings semi-intoxicated men have freely come for conversation and prayer. This "deep sea fishing" goes on without break and with many gracious marks of divine approval. Mr. Montgomery's address is 4, Upper Crescent, Belfast.

The Peace Crusade.

AT a special meeting of the general committee of the International Peace Crusade, the following appeal was ordered to be issued and circulated as widely as possible through the country:—

"We appeal to our fellow-citizens, especially to all those in positions of influence and authority on a subject of the gravest importance to our national and social life.

"The Emperor of Russia, by inviting the Governments to a conference to arrest the growth of armaments, gives the peoples an opportunity of which it is their manifest duty to take prompt advantage. In the words of John Morley, 'Never was the moment more opportune.'

"By the resolute and zealous co-operation of public opinion, expressed with no uncertain sound through its recognised channels of the press, the pulpit, and the platform, and by the votes of representative bodies, the noble initiative of the Emperor will be crowned with success, and the Peace Conference will realise the fruitful results which it is designed to secure.

"We would, therefore, earnestly recommend that no time should be lost in making the response of the nations manifest, audible, and universal by every available constitutional means, especially by town and district meetings summoned by the mayors or chairmen on requisition of the householders, for the purpose of passing resolutions:—(1) In support of the objects of the rescript; (2) To strengthen her Majesty's Ministers in their expressed intention of giving energetic and hearty support to the proposals of the Emperor; (3) To elect representatives to the national convention charged with the arrangement of the international pilgrimage of peace.

"We, therefore, earnestly appeal to all our fellow-citizens, acting without party or sectarian bias, to co-operate as speedily as possible in the effort now being made to secure such a vigorous and comprehensive expression of the will of the people as will assure to her Majesty's Government the support of the nation in realising the earnest desire of the Tsar that 'something practical shall be done.'"

East London Training Institute.

IN a circular letter dated Harley House, Bow, December, Dr. Harry Grattan Guinness says:—The hand that has taken from us my beloved mother has given a fresh helper to the work in the person of Rev. F. B. Meyer, who has recently become associated with my father and myself as co-director in the Institute and its missions. For many years Mr. Meyer has already helped us, both on the College Council, and also as occasional lecturer to the students, so that the proposed work is not entirely a new burden. It may lead to Mr. Meyer foregoing many of his ordinary invitations in the country and concentrating his energies on the important Church work at Westminster, and the ever-extending Missionary operations connected with Harley House. On his return from India we hope to arrange some important Missionary conventions with a view to stir a deeper interest in those "Regions Beyond" which it is our aim and ambition to reach with the Gospel.

Another change that is to date from January 1, 1899, is the alteration of the name of the Institute. The Training Colleges have multiplied from one to four, and two Missions have sprung into existence on the Congo and in Peru, while others are opening up before us. It thus becomes needful to select some name at once clear and comprehensive, adequately including all the various operations involved. We think we have found this in the "Regions Beyond" Missionary Union.

With regard to the Colleges, the entry of new men is much larger than last year, more than thirty having been accepted for training at Cliff. During recent days of special service in Shoreditch, the students were engaged in practical visiting, open-air and inquiry-room work. They were greatly cheered by seeing many souls seeking salvation.

London Poor.

THE philanthropic work of the Congregational Union must appeal strongly to all interested in the welfare of the masses of London. On a recent evening, under the presidency of Dr. Horton, a largely-attended public meeting was held in the City Temple in support of the work. In introducing Mr. E. Wilson Gates, the chairman referred to his long service, extending over fifteen years, during which time he had never, as yet, spoken from the platform of the London Congregational Union. Mr. Gates carried his audience to Collier's Rents, and presented a picture of social conditions improved. The lives of men and women had been changed, and the amusements of children refined. Mr. Gates went through a programme of work for a week, and showed that the number of activities is surprising. Having referred to the priest-ridden neighbourhood of Wapping, Mr. Gates took his audience to St. Luke's, where a perfect network of organisations could be seen. Passing on to Ratcliff Highway, there was Medland Hall, the home for the homeless. Someone might ask what sort of men occupied the 450 beds night by night. Of the 150,000 admissions last year, ten per cent. were strangers in a strange land. Last year, every county—with the exception of little Rutland—was represented at Medland Hall, and 150 different trades.

Mr. Gates, after presenting many other touching incidents of the philanthropic work, said they were straitened for lack of funds. The small cost of 1½d. a man per night may possibly lead some to think that help is not needed. The annual total cost of bread-and-butter alone amounts to between £400 and £500 per year, and the total expenses are over £3,000. The chairman urged that if Congregationalism was not able to reach the lost it could not claim to be church of Jesus Christ. Christ would never dream of living in a suburb unless He could better help the poverty-stricken districts of London. The only hope of carrying out the philanthropic scheme is to maintain the allegiance of the whole of the churches in London.

FOR YOUNG PEOPLE.

Child-Life in Heathen Lands, X.

THE Christmas Season could not come and go without boys and girls being reminded of the wonderful birth of God's dear Son and man's only Saviour. Even grown-up people love to think of the lowly and poor surroundings where the gentle mother of Jesus first put her baby-boy to sleep. How astonished Mary must have been when she heard the shepherds' story of the glowing heavens and the angels' song! She herself was present when the Magi from the Far East presented to her little child their costly gifts. Mothers and fathers who trust Jesus never tire of thinking about that first Christmas morning and telling their bairns about it—making it real indeed.

Since you know by this time, I suppose, all that has been revealed of that supreme event, I thought I would tell you a few things, which probably you do not know concerning baby-life in India. You could never think, I am sure, of the strange customs attending the birth of children in that vast empire. Let me tell you, some children get a very warm reception from their parents, and would protest against the treatment they receive—if they could. They are rubbed all over with hot mustard oil and laid in the sunshine for hours daily. In years gone by, if they did not thrive during the first few days after their birth, they were placed in a basket, which was hung on a tree, till they died. "How cruel!" you say. But heathen practices are often cruel, because the people do not know the true value of life.

Indian babies are very patient, quite different from English ones. They will lie still, wideawake, without crying or giving any trouble, or wanting to be nursed or played with, as you did when you were a baby. When the child's father first goes to see it he puts a gold coin into its hand, and gives it his blessing, but girl-babies often miss that, for I have already told you they are never wanted.

At the age of six months a baby is allowed to have boiled rice for the first time. This is a very important occasion in its life. After its head is shaved the child is dressed in silk, so that it may be presented in due form to assembled friends and relatives of the family. At the same time presents are made to it and the ceremony of "naming" is observed.

In England a name is mostly chosen because it is borne by father or mother or friend. But a history of sorrow or joy is often indicated by the name given to an Indian child by its mother. Generally the boys are called after one or other of the gods, as by having a son named Siva Dass (the servant of Siva), his parents will often have to speak the name of the god, and in this way it is thought the goodwill of the deity is secured. But such a name as Durga Prasad shows that probably after waiting long years for a son, the parents believe that Durga has graciously given them one at last.

Until they are four or five years of age, children in India run about as they like, with almost no clothes on, except that the boys wear a charm tied round their waist to frighten away evil spirits; and the girls, besides the charm, wear as many jewels as they can get, necklaces, and bracelets on the wrists and ankles. And how their mothers pet them!—the boys because they are boys; the girls, because it is only while they are young, that they will have much pleasure.

When they are big enough to understand, their mothers try to teach them what they know themselves, which is not very much. One thing they are taught from the very beginning is to love their mother, and think much of their father. A Hindu gentleman has said that "Honour thy father and thy mother" is the first commandment to the Hindus.

So far, they are on a level with you. But the other commandment which Jesus thought so much of that He called it the first and great commandment, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God," in multitudes of cases they never learn at all. How could they love most of the gods they worship?—their character is represented as so wicked! You know fear is the root of most of their religious acts, not love. It is news to them that they can hardly understand that it was God's love for them—for boys and girls as well, of course—that led him to send his own Son to us in the form of a baby boy.

OUR TWELFTH

Quarterly Prize Competition.

SEPTEMBER TO DECEMBER.

Will parents and teachers kindly see that each of the following Rules is STRICTLY OBSERVED, especially NOS. 7 and 10? The only help permitted is to explain the meaning of the rules or questions, if necessary.

1. Only those may enter whose names appear in the list below as having been right eight times out of eleven.
2. Competitors will be divided into FOUR DIVISIONS:—
   I. Those under TEN years of age.
   II. Those over TEN and under THIRTEEN.
   III. Those over THIRTEEN and under FIFTEEN.
   IV. Those over FIFTEEN.
3. Write outside your envelope in large letters the words "PRIZE COMPETITION," and the NUMBER of the DIVISION to which you belong; and address it to "Uncle Tom" as usual.
4. At the top of your answer paper write very clearly your DIVISION, your FULL NAME and ADDRESS, and your AGE last birthday.
5. NUMBER YOUR ANSWERS exactly to correspond with the questions.
6. Every paper must be SIGNED by a parent or teacher to testify that Rule 7 has been observed.
7. No CONCORDANCE and no help allowed; only the use of a Reference Bible. Competitors must not help each other.
8. The last day for answers to reach the office is Tuesday, Jan. 10. The results will be announced on Jan. 19.
9. Marks will be given for accuracy, neatness, writing, spelling, &c., the rewards being: First Prize, Second Prize First Certificate, and Second Certificate.
10. CHAPTER and VERSE must be given wherever possible.

Every answer will be examined separately by three persons; and NO PAPERS can be re-examined after the lists appear.

Those who cannot do ALL the questions set for their division must do AS MANY as THEY CAN, and will receive marks accordingly.

Prize Competition.

DIVISION I.

1. Give (a) the names of Christ's twelve apostles; (b) a list of the plagues of Egypt.

2. Of whom was it said?—(a) They are dead that sought the young child's life; (b) His meat was locusts and wild honey. (Give the circumstances.)

3. (a) Who found Moses? (b) What was he in? (c) What was done with him?

4. Give a short account of what happened in Simon's house when Jesus sat at meat with him.

DIVISION II.

1. (a) Give a list of the tribes of Israel; (b) Show the difference between that and the list of Jacob's sons.

2. By whom, and to whom were the following words spoken?—(a) An Israelite indeed in whom is no guile; (b) Who has warned you to flee from the wrath to come? (Give the circumstances in each case.)

3. What event made the people say?—(a) "We have seen strange things to-day"; (b) "He hath done all things well."

4. (a) To which of his apostles did Jesus give surnames? (b) What does St. Luke tell us about the call of Peter and Andrew, James and John, that is not recorded by St. Matthew or St. Mark?

5. (a) Describe the healing of Naaman; (b) By whom was it suggested? (c) What unhappy incident followed it?

ACROSTIC.

6. (a) A port where Paul, before the shipwreck, came
But now a ruined place of noted fame.

(b) A warrior bold. He did the land divide
Of Ephraim. He had other names beside.—Numbers.

(c) The place where Babel's tower mocked the skies;
Where also Babylon in ruin lies.

(d) Two various vowels here must have a place,
In order that you may the answer trace.

(e) Name now the spot the beauty of whose rose,
In glorious type the King of Glory shows.

These now arrange, and you will then display
The names of two who long have passed away.
The Scriptures tell what wondrous deeds they wrought;
God's Glory was the object which they sought.

DIVISION III.

1. What three signs did Samuel give Saul that God had appointed him king over Israel?

2. Describe the circumstances referred to in the words, "He looked this way and that way."

3. On what occasion, and why, did (a) many people—(b) an individual—beseech Jesus to depart from them?

4. Give instances in which Jesus sent disciples or messengers to execute commissions for Him.

5. How often, and under what circumstances, is Cana of Galilee mentioned in the New Testament?

6. After which miracles did Jesus bid people to go and show themselves to the priests?

ACROSTIC.

7. (a) "The Acts of the Apostles" names a town,
Both wealthy and important it became;
Upon the coast it lies, and its renown
The Scripture doth in one short verse proclaim.

(b) Here nature's joys conspicuous did bloom;
Events, how mighty! were transacted here;
Convincing us how certain is the tomb:
There's only One can say, "Be of good cheer."

(c) A number which is quickly told is here;
In earliest history we the same can trace.
In Noah's time it formed an order clear;
In Apostolic age the same we trace.

(d) Th' Apostle of the Gentiles names a man
His brother Timothy must surely stun;
For, since association first began,
This friendship is not good for any one.

In ancient days, in Genesis we find,
These patriarchal names are brought to mind.

DIVISION IV.

1. Describe the disputes referred to in the following—(a) Am I my brother's keeper? (b) For we be brethren; (c) He spied . . smiting . . one of his brethren.

2. Explain the purpose of our Lord's teaching in the words—(a) Swear not at all; (b) Leave there thy gift before the altar; (c) Man shall not live by bread alone; (d) Take no thought for the morrow.

3. Under what circumstances were these expressions used? by whom? of whom?—(a) These men are full of new wine; (b) The men that have turned the world upside down; (c) He was a good man; (d) Thou hast a devil.

4. What incident in Peter's life gave rise to the statement that the Gentiles should receive the word of God?

5. (a) Which two victories gained by successive kings of Israel appear to have been won in answer to prayer? (b) Give other instances of answered prayer in the Old Testament.

6. Give cases in which our Lord asked questions that his hearers were unable to answer.

7. Describe occasions on which a certain sect bitterly opposed the doctrine of the Resurrection.

ACROSTIC.

8. (a) A country near the border of a sea,
A man well known in Scripture history.

(b) A brother of the Tetrarch Herod, say
What place he govern'd, and in order lay.

(c) Among the many idols there is one
By which the land of Moab was undone.

(d) Upon a guilty man dire judgment fell,
Because against God's plan he did rebel.

(e) A widow's son, most skilfully he wrought:
To work in brass he was divinely taught.

The names of two are now displayed to view
Who spoke of Jesus and of Nineveh too.
The blessings which the Saviour did bestow,
And of the sin that laid the city low.

The following are eligible for the Competition—

A—Gladys Allan, Douglas Adams, Zeidah Albert, Ralph, and Ernst Aldwinckle, Dorothy Alchin, Violet Ashworth, Willie Aston.

Personal.

I wish to thank all my "nephews and nieces" for the many good wishes and pretty Christmas cards I have received from them, and I hope they have all had a very pleasant time.

BELLA MACK.—I have sent your parcel to the Cripples' Home, Southend.

ELEN MACMURRAY.—I am very pleased to think you are joining the Searcher, although you are only six years old. I have another little niece five years of age!

HENRY BENTALL.—I read your note, and think it is all perfectly fair.

M. L. RICKARDS.—It will be better for you in future to always sign your name the same.

EZRA MATTHEWS.—I have enjoyed reading your letter, which was very interesting.

Obituary.

MR. WILLIAM VEITCH.

On Saturday, December 16, there passed away at his residence, "Bethany," Peebles, Mr. William Veitch, at the advanced age of eighty-four years. From the time of his conversion, at the age of fifteen, to the close of his long and useful life, he had taken a prominent part in the Lord's work in and around Edinburgh.

Possessed of great energy, he carried on a large and successful business in Edinburgh, his capacity and shrewdness giving him a position of influence in the city. It would be impossible to enumerate the many and varied branches of work he carried on, such as Bible classes, tract distribution, visitation, &c., some of them for long years. He could give many interesting reminiscences of his association with Brownlow North, Richard Weaver, Messrs. Moody and Sankey, and others. For years he carried on week-end meetings in country villages around the city, counting no expenditure of time and money too great in seeking to win men for Jesus. One of the early band of men who with the Rev. Jas. Gall and others founded the Carrubbers Close Mission he knew what it was to suffer for his evangelistic zeal in a day when such work was not looked upon with such favour as now.

Two years ago he left Edinburgh for Peebles, but to the end his mind and memory were as active as ever, and his interest in Christian work unabated. His home was ever the resort of many of the Lord's servants, and he will be much missed, not only by the poor, to whom he was a real friend, but by many who profited by his wise counsels, ripe experience, and Christ-like devotion.

MRS. CATHERINE GOLDING.

This well-known Christian and temperance worker lately passed away at the age of sixty-six, at the Cancer Hospital, after a painful illness, which she had endured with great fortitude and unwavering faith. The funeral took place at Norwood Cemetery. Reference was made to her deep devotion to Christ's service and to the temperance cause, as shown in her work, not only at Norwood and Erith, but also at Hoxton Hall and the Pilgrim Fathers' Church in the New Kent Road. Her unwavering trust in God in the midst of trying circumstances and her deep and loving sympathy with the poor and the downcast were also spoken of. At the grave-side Mr. Woodford Fawcett spoke of the work which Mrs. Golding had carried on at Norwood, and how her cheerfulness and kindness of heart had endeared her to all her fellow workers.

REV. DR. AIRD.

Universal regret will be felt throughout the Highlands and Islands, and among Highlanders all over the world, at the announcement of the death of Rev. Dr. Gustavus Aird, of Creich, which occurred on Tuesday week at the residence of his nephew, Rev. Mr. Sim, at Sale, near Manchester, whither, after retiring from the active pastorate of the Creich congregation, he had gone for the benefit of his wife's health. The deceased had been in failing health for the past twelvemonths, and passed peacefully away, as stated, at the age of eighty-five.

Dr. Aird (says the Northern Weekly) was an uncompromising Calvinist, and in personal appearance he was just the embodiment of what a Calvinist ought to be—"big, burly, and shaggy," as one of his old-time friends has said, but with the tender heart of a child. As a preacher (in Gaelic) he was ever eloquent and forceful, and his Gaelic sermons were models of lucid exposition; his points logically arrayed, and his characteristic illustrations generally followed by a "note" from the sermons of the older race of the Fathers of Ross-shire, of which his mind was literally stored to overflow, for he had an extraordinary memory for the "sayings" of other people, especially of ministers. As a man, Dr. Aird was a true friend of rich and poor alike, and he could accommodate himself to all ranks and classes of society without in any way losing his own characteristic simplicity. His whole life was characterised by its intense religious earnestness; he was as a patriarch to his people, and as a prophet to Highlanders everywhere. His death removes the last but one of the pre-Disruption worthies of the north, and in his removal we lose the last of the great ministers that linked us with the days of the Fathers in Ross-shire.

REV. JAMES GRIFFIN.

In the fulness of time the Death-angel has come for the devoted servant of Christ in the ministry of the Gospel, Rev. James Griffin, late of Hastings. For years he had been quietly waiting for the exchange of his peaceful home by the sea for one of the many mansions in the Father's house. He was pastor of Rusholme Road Church, Manchester, for several years, where his faithful ministry was greatly blessed. Always frail in health, it was feared his days on earth were numbered when he removed to Hastings. But he was spared to build up a large congregation in that fashionable watering place. He had intense belief in the Evangelical creed, and possessed a holy passion for saving souls. And God honoured him with the joy of seeing numbers converted to Christ through his preaching. He had reached the extreme age of ninety-two when God called him home.

REV. THOMAS WOLSTENCROFT.

The death of Rev. Thomas Wolstencroft, rector of St. Mary's, Moston, in the eighty-fourth year of his age, removes a prominent and much-beloved minister of the Gospel. After holding several curacies he took sole charge of St. Michael's, Manchester, from 1861 to 1863. He was one of the first and most active movers who roused the sympathies of the country on behalf of the sufferers by the cotton famine. Subsequently he was the minister in charge of Holcombe, and afterwards rector of Syde in the diocese of Gloucester. In 1873 he was instituted rector of St. Mary's, Moston, the active duties of which he discharged till quite recently. He maintained throughout his life decided Evangelical principles, and was an earnest supporter of the temperance movement.

REV. WILLIAM BROWN KERR.

A remarkable man has just passed away in the person of Rev. William Brown Kerr. He did some excellent work at Liverpool and in the East End of London before his departure for India. He was harbour chaplain at Bombay for some years, and general chaplain at Chili. In 1892 he sailed in a native ship to the Persian Gulf, whence he rode alone across Asia to the Mediterranean, in order to visit the ruins of Nineveh and Babylon. He was a frequent contributor to magazines. Some three years ago he was seized with paralysis, from which he only partially recovered.

THE Secretary for War has called attention to the illegal practice of allowing civilians to purchase liquor at military canteens and sergeants' messes. Such an infringement of the law, he points out, renders those responsible liable to heavy penalties.

THERE are in the world about 42,988 breweries, which send out every year the enormous amount of 4,659,726,670 gallons of beer. This would make 141,493,166 barrels, or 1,414,931 car-loads, which would be equal to a continuous train-load 10,000 miles long.

THE Archbishop of Canterbury, as President of the National Temperance League, has issued from Lambeth Palace a preliminary call to the various national temperance bodies for a "World's Temperance Congress," to be held in London during 1900.

THE B.W.T.A. has circularised all the branches of the association urging the importance of attention being given to the Inebriates Act, which comes into force on January 1. A special prayer meeting will be held at St. Martin's Town Hall on January 3 from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. Lady Henry Somerset, Mrs. Barney, and others will give addresses.

THE Grimsby Town Council has discussed proposals to itself apply for liquor licences for newly built districts, and apply the proceeds to borough purposes. Councillor Joseph Malins, of Birmingham, was thereupon invited to speak in the Grimsby Town Hall on the subject, and he cited his Swedish and Norwegian experiences against any such municipal management of or participation in the traffic. Mr. Malins' views evidently found general acceptance with the audience.

THE EVANGELISTIC FIELD.

North Walton, Liverpool.

THE North Walton Free Church Council is one of the smallest belonging to the national organisation, including only six congregations and three missions. The population is a mixture of artizan and middle class, and numbers some 10,000 within reasonable distance of the Aintree Institute, which is the best hall in the district, and seated for 700.

A special mission was conducted by Mr. W. R. Lane from December 10 to 19. Much real work was done beforehand. House-to-house visitation was carried out twice over, and a week of united prayer meetings preceded the mission. A most gratifying feature was the hearty co-operation of the vicar of the parish.

Space will not allow a detailed account of the various meetings, of which there were eleven, including a united temperance demonstration on the second Saturday. Six of the meetings were conspicuous for size and for the profound spiritual impression made. These were the meetings on the Sunday afternoons (one for the young and one for men only), the Sunday evening meetings, the illustrated lecture on Bunyan, and the closing address, giving an account of Mr. Lane's conversion. The after-meetings on the second Sunday and on the closing night revealed how many had been blessed, some 150 remaining at the latter as a token either of conversion or of increased spiritual life. Many of these left their names and addresses, with the congregation added to which they belonged or with which they desired to become associated.

During the after-meeting on Sunday evening many stood up and professed to decide for Christ. One incident which deeply touched the meeting may be mentioned. A man arose, and in broken utterance said, "Some of you know me. I was once with you in Christian fellowship and work, but have wandered very far away. My heart is broken about my backsliding and sin. I do now truly repent and return to my Saviour. Please pray for me." A lad in another part of the meeting, who proved to be his son, stood, and with many tears declared that he would, by God's grace, accept Christ as his Saviour. Then a woman, evidently deeply moved, said, "I am not rising to decide for the Lord to-night, for I have known Him for many years; but how can I keep my seat when my dear husband for whom I have so long prayed has returned from his backsliding to the Lord, and my dear son, the boy of many prayers, has trusted his Saviour?" It was beautiful and touching to see mother, father and son thus rejoicing together in the Redeemer's love. The effect of this threefold confession on the meeting cannot be described. Many were melted to tears and hearts were moved with a sense of the nearness and power of the Divine Spirit.

Much has been done to break down the excessive reserve which is so apt to exercise a chilling influence in normal church life. The churches have also received an impulse of decided quickening. Others have tasted the first joys of the Christian life. Many thank God for the visit of his servant and the blessing which attended his words.

Evangelists' Movements.

Mr. Hugh Laughland, of the London Evangelisation Society, has been labouring at Helensburgh for three weeks in the Baptist church, and the Lord has blessed his labours.

Mr. Philip Cohen has conducted a ten days' Gospel Mission in Hull, in connection with the Open Air and Theatre Mission of the town. A lecture by the evangelist on the Jewish Passover awakened much interest.

Following up the special mission to fishermen at Fraserburgh, held by Mr. Josiah Nix during the last herring fishing season, he will conduct a mission in the Fisherman's Hall, Buckie, from January 1 to 9. Prayer is desired for much blessing on the effort.

Mr. Thomas Payne has been holding meetings this past month in Scotland. Motherwell and several other places have been visited. Many Christians have testified to much blessing received. The mission has also been blessed to the awakening and conversion of souls.

Mr. John Harris, of the Evangelisation Society, has conducted a two weeks' mission in the Baptist chapel at Seer Green, Bucks. The services were very largely attended. The addresses were faithful, earnest, and impressive, and the mission was marked with evident tokens of Divine presence and blessing. F. S.

A heart-searching and stimulating mission has been conducted at Finstown, Orkney, by Mr. John G. Smith, of the Gordon Mission, Aberdeen, under the joint auspices of the U.P. and Free Congregations of the village. In spite of exceedingly unpleasant weather, the church was filled almost every evening. So great was the work, that it was found necessary to continue the mission a week longer than it was formerly intended.

(Rev.) J. G. Taylor.

Rev. George C. Grubb has been at work in Ireland for some time, and has conducted missions in Ballinamallard, Enniskillen, and other places. Many have professed to find Christ through these services. Mr. Grubb expects to continue work in Ireland during the early part of next year. We learn that he has received invitations for missions in Australia, India, Ceylon, and other parts, but for the present the work in Ireland is more laid upon his heart.

Mr. C. Gallatly, agent of the Evangelisation Society, has been labouring for a fortnight with much acceptance in Clason Memorial Free Church, Motherwell, N.B. God's people felt the preciousness of the message, and were much cheered and strengthened. Unsaved ones have had the Gospel pressed home upon their attentions, and a number have made profession of their faith in Christ. Loving care will be given to these, so that the fruits of this mission may remain.

We have concluded a gospel mission at Dalton-in-Furness Wesleyan Chapel. The missioner was Mr. Charles Noakes of the Evangelisation Society. Although an entire stranger amongst us, he won the hearts of the Christians from the first, and God abundantly blessed his efforts and goodly number of persons professed conversion. We felt we must carry on the work after Mr. Noakes left, and found a very able successor in Rev. G. W. Thompson, of Grange, who continued the mission a week later. One remarkable feature of the mission has been the conversion of young people connected either with the school or the church.

W. J. G.

Mr. John Esson, one of the Gordon Mission Evangelists, Aberdeen, conducted a fortnight's mission in Rousay, Orkney. The weather was very stormy. One evening it was impossible to hold a service. The first week's meetings were held in different districts of the island; the second week we concentrated our efforts in the Free Church. The attendance grew, and the interest deepened. The last evening several professed conversion. Backsliders have been restored; others have confessed Jesus boldly before men. As a direct outcome of the mission, a hopeful Christian Endeavour Society has been commenced. Others have professed decision since the mission closed.

Lawyers and Temperance.—There are three hundred members of the Royal Courts of Justice Temperance Society at the annual social meeting, over which body Sir Richard Webster, Attorney-General, recently presided. He spoke from eighteen years' experience as a total abstainer, and dwelt on the value of the habit of abstinence. Rev. F. S. Webster also gave a rousing address.

Protestant Notes.

THE sale of Dr. Horton's pamphlet on Romanism, "England's Danger," is still so brisk that Messrs. Clarke and Co., the publishers, have difficulty in keeping pace with it. They are now printing the twenty-third thousand, and are about to go to press with an edition of several thousands more.

. . . . . .

Messrs. J. Clarke & Co., of Fleet Street, have rendered signal service to the cause of Protestantism by republishing in a well-printed sixpenny pamphlet, The Crisis in the Church, Sir William Harcourt's able letters to The Times on the present movement in the Church of England. These seven letters are so judicial in tone and searching in statement that they ought to be studied by all who wish to understand the legal bearings of the controversy.

. . . . . .

A circular letter has been issued—signed by the Archdeacons of Lincoln and Liverpool, Prebendary Webb-Peploe, Principal Handley Moule, and the Vicar of Hull—urging that no alterations in the established doctrine or ritual of the Church of England should be taught or observed "unless they shall first have been accepted by the lawful authority of the Church and Realm and declared by the same to rest on the sure warrant of Holy Scripture." Some special cautions are uttered as to advancing unwarranted views of the Lord's Supper, or hearing confessions in a way not authorised by the Prayer Book.

Preaching at Belfast on a recent occasion, Dean Farrar dealt with the crisis in the Church of England. Though the word "Protestant" did not once occur in the liturgy, articles, or homilies of the Church, he was not ashamed of it. In protesting against deadly errors, the Reformers protested also for essential and external truths. In the Coronation Oath their sovereigns swore to maintain the Protestant Reformed religion established by law. Archbishop Laud, regarded by High Churchmen as an ideal character, when he stood on the scaffold declared Charles I. "to be as sound a Protestant, according to the religion by law established, as any in the kingdom." They need now only use the word where it was necessary to emphasise the facts of history, and to prove from what rock of primitive and Scriptural truth their Church was hewn. To those truths the Church of England as a whole, in spite of some superficial appearances, was and would be faithful. It would, indeed, require an earthquake to overthrow that rock of Truth, for on it Christ had built his Church. Yet, although the crisis of religious excitement was for the present subsiding, its ultimate issues might be more far-reaching than any of them could measure or foresee.

The Ruth Elliott Home, Enfield.

CHRISTMAS has passed with all its excitement and joyful celebration by a privileged class of children who are in happy possession of thoughtful, loving parents; but not all mothers commemorate the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ into the sinful world by loving gifts to their little ones. There is a little world full of sadness and misery devoid of anything that we consider necessary to happiness. They are bound hard and fast by cruel circumstances, and it is for these patient little sufferers in the slums, the neglected, the cripples, that Miss Priest Peck, of the Children's Home, Enfield, with the desire of extending her work, appeals.

After six years' work amongst the bairns, she writes, "Having had 600 of the poorest little waifs in my own home, and hearing from their lips their life-histories, I can honestly say that the tales of the life of slum childhood cannot be exaggerated. There are thousands of starving little ones, thousands of aching hearts, thousands of loveless sad mites waiting just for someone to help them. Kind hearts are everywhere, and they are few who cannot be touched by the pathetic life of a little child. Those who have whole and healthy children might help us out of very gratitude because their own bairns are bonny and straight. Those who are well-off and have delicate and may-be crippled little ones might help us out of sympathy."

We heartily recommend this work to the sympathy of readers. A little sea-side home is comprised in the scheme of extension, having for its purpose to receive little ones after they leave hospital, when they are too weak to combat with the want and misery of their homes.

FELLOW ENGLISHMEN,

THE Crusade in which I am engaged has been the means, through God, of stirring up a strong Protestant feeling all over the country. The demonstrations and meetings which I have conducted show clearly that the Protestant Lion is not dead, and that the people only need arousing and being informed of what is taking place to form a strong public opinion that shall either end or mend the disgraceful and disloyal practices now being carried on by so many of our clergy.

The deliberate attempt to undo the work of the Reformation, by restoring the Mass and the Confessional, as also the attempt to change the character of the Gospel Ministry into a Sacerdotal priesthood, needs strong measures in exposing it all over the country. One thing is certain, that the Archbishops and Bishops, with a few noble exceptions, are determined to pursue a policy of masterly inactivity, and perhaps even worse by helping forward these traitorous men by ordaining and promoting them to positions in the Church.

When we look back on the history of our glorious country, and compare the pre-Reformation period with the ages that followed, the difference of the English people, both religiously and socially, must strike us very forcibly. We find that before the Reformation the country was steeped in poverty, degradation and ignorance, and corruption existed all over the land, both in the Church and State.

A man of God arose—John Wickliffe—who saw full well all this, and he determined, through whatever perils and at whatever cost to himself, yea, even if it cost him his life, as a true patriot and a lover of God's truth and liberty, to put forth all his energies to save his fellow countrymen from their errors, and to place them in a position as a national power at which the other nations of the earth could no longer scoff, but would have to acknowledge that a God-fearing people should rule the World.

In order to accomplish this, Wickliffe made up his mind to send preachers throughout the length and breadth of the country, to proclaim the tidings of free salvation to every creature, and that there was an unimpeded access straight to the footstool of our God.

But, alas, towards the close of this nineteenth century we find our selves in much the same condition (at any rate in the Church) as then, and knowing the results of Wickliffe's endeavours, I purpose in this effort to restore our Church to primitive truth, to copy good John Wickliffe of old, by sending into our villages and towns men of God to pull down and expose the errors of priestcraft, and to proclaim the priesthood of all believers, to declare that the just shall live by faith, that we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ, the righteous, and that by His stripes and His stripes alone are we healed.

Now to accomplish such an object as this, we must make up our minds for a long pull, and a strong pull, and a pull altogether. One hundred young men will cost about £10,000 per annum. At first sight this may seem a large sum, but when the importance of such a work as this is fully considered, I feel certain that thousands will come forward to help, and thus continue and strengthen the crusade I have started. Now if 10,000 men and women would each subscribe one pound annually, I should at once have the movement on a firm, financial basis; or another plan would be for some to come forward and guarantee the salary of, say, one Wickliffe preacher for one or more years—this would cost roughly about £100 per annum. Some can afford to do this, while others are asked to help according as the Lord disposeth them. Let us all do what we can.

However, we leave the matter in the Lord's hands, knowing that all things work together for good to them that love Him; and we ask the prayers of all on behalf of this movement to effect a Second Reformation, and to Him shall be all the glory for ever and ever.

All who feel they would like to help forward this movement are requested to fill up one of the forms below. All subscriptions or donations, whether large or small, will be gratefully received and acknowledged by,

Yours for the Truth,

JOHN KENSIT,
Secretary.

Two Gentlemen and one Lady have each offered £100, providing we can obtain 97 others to do the same. The wonderful success and blessing that have attended our Crusade lead us to hope that we shall soon obtain the desired number. Reader, CAN YOU HELP?

THE BOOK WORLD.

A NONCONFORMIST TEACHER.*

MANY of the "former students" and "other friends," to whom the book is dedicated, will turn eagerly to the biography of Henry Robert Reynolds, which has recently been published. To them the simple story of his life—uneventful, so far as outward incident is concerned, but rich in the self-revelation of a singularly beautiful, cultured mind—cannot fail to prove deeply interesting. They may feel, it is true, that the half has not been told concerning their old friend and teacher; concerning that delicate and playful humour of his which made intercourse so delightful, extravagance ridiculous, and weariness impossible; concerning the wonderful charm of his personality which captivated old and young alike, concerning his invincible optimism which refused to believe that "because there was some fog the eternal stars were burnt out." But how much there is told that one is grateful for! We have here bright glimpses of college relaxation, when the stress of application to his studies was relieved; glimpses of the quiet opening of his ministry at Halstead, where, in conjunction with his father, he laboured for about two years or more; then the call to the larger and more influential position at Leeds, his earnest and faithful and brilliant service there, and then—what most of his friends at that time thought to be—the great calamity.

The work and responsibilities of so large a church proved too much for Mr. Reynolds' strength, and in 1860 he was obliged to resign his position as pastor. Thus, at the early age of thirty-five, the career, to which from childhood he had looked forward, for which he had equipped himself so carefully, and in which he had already attained such eminence, was definitely closed to him.

For the next thirty-four years of his life, until shortly before his death, Dr. Reynolds occupied the position of Principal at Cheshunt College. Although that work was at first reluctantly undertaken by him—only after having declined six similar invitations—there can be no doubt that it became increasingly dear as time went on. The devotion of his students, the interest of his work, both literary and scholastic, the tender and loving reverence with which he was regarded by the many churches with which he was now brought into contact, more than recompensed him for the sacrifice that he had been called upon to make in resigning his own ministerial charge.

In the quiet retirement of his home at Cheshunt, while directing the affairs of the college with wonderful tact, skill, and success, he enjoyed also the friendship of the most eminent religious teachers of the day. Dignitaries of the Anglican Church, such as Dean Stanley and Dean Alford, were among his visitors in the early days of his principalship. More recently he entertained honoured Presbyterians, like Principal Rainy and Dr. Monro Gibson, besides, of course, all the leading preachers of the Free Churches in England. His house was a kind of neutral ground where men of all ways of thinking could meet and exchange views, and learn to respect and esteem each other.

Those who knew Dr. Reynolds personally are never likely to forget him; his friendship could not fail to be one of the most sacred and treasured influences of their lives, and to these especially this worthy memorial of his fruitful life is a welcome treasure. S.

An American romance having a pathetic interest is Teplir, by Cecilia M. Blake. (1s. 6d. Partridge & Co.)

In a shilling volume, entitled Our Home Missions, a comprehensive report is given of some of the most striking addresses delivered at the convention held at Exeter Hall, November 16-18. (A. H. Stockwell & Co.)

The Men of the Mayflower. (1s. 6d. Curwen.) An extremely interesting musical setting of the story of the Puritan emigration. The libretto is written by Rev. J. E. Halsey, and the music by his son Ernest Halsey. Music and matter blend to a very high degree, and the result is decidedly pleasing.

*Henry Robert Reynolds, D.D. His Life and Letters. Edited by his Sisters. With two portraits. (9s. Hodder & Stoughton.)

We recently called attention to several deeply-instructive booklets by William Thomson, setting forth Scriptural Sanctification from different parts of view. The treatises have been combined in a chaste little volume, entitled The Christian's Calling, Keeping, Abiding. (1s. Drummond's Tract Depot, Stirling.)

One of the many useful denominational manuals is The Baptist Handbook, of which we welcome the issue for 1899. Published under the direction of the council of the Baptist Union of Great Britain and Ireland, it contains a large body of official information, admirably digested and carefully arranged. (2s. James Clarke & Co.)

For several months past the little ones in our homes have been making the acquaintance of Uncle Ben's Budget, a magazine for young Protestants. The ten parts already issued make an attractive volume. The writing is suited to the child mind, and numerous illustrations are given. The editor, Mr. W. Stanley Martin, may be congratulated on an evident success. (2s. W. Wileman.)

Arctic adventure has charms for the young as well as entertainment for those of maturer years. This fact explains the publication of Fridtjof Nansen, a Book for the Young, by Jacob B. Bull, translated from the Norwegian by the Rev. Mordaunt R. Barnard, vicar of Margaretting, one of the translators of "Farthest North." The story is eminently readable, and embellished with several engravings. (2s. 6d. Isbister & Co.)

The Gardening Year Book and Garden Oracle (1s. Collingridge) is in its forty-first year of publication, and is as replete as ever with matter that is interesting and helpful to those in charge of gardens, whether amateurs or professionals. From the same publishers come attractively got up and well illustrated Christmas numbers of The Gardeners' Magazine (6d.) and Amateur Gardening (3d.)

Workers in Bands of Hope and other young peoples' organisations have learned to think well of The Prize Reciter, edited by Joseph Malins. The third annual volume (2s.) is a great budget of selections in prose and poetry. The seventh yearly volume of Helping Words (2s.) is full of good reading for the home circle, and, like its companion publication, it is amply illustrated. (A. W. Hall.)

Rev. Alexander Smellie's series of "Books for the Heart" has been enriched by the publication of Jonathan Edwards's Treatise Concerning the Religious Affections (2s. 6d. Andrew Melrose). An introductory sketch of the man and his life-work, describes the origin of the treatise, and rightly estimates it very highly. Here we have an answer to the question, Wherein does true religion consist? The answer needs no encomium; its publication in such handsome and accessible form, however, deserves instinted praise.

A most interesting and suggestive volume, entitled Notes on the Months of the Year has been written by Dr. John Rose, of Chesterfield. The notes extend from April to December, and are marked by a close sympathetic study of nature, combined with full botanical knowledge. The reflections and suggestions embodied in the notes are natural and helpful, and all students of the divine working in nature will peruse these pages with pleasure. The publisher is Mr. J. Hartley, Central Pavement, Chesterfield.

Young people especially will be interested and instructed by reading A Christian Endeavourer's Journeys in Lands Afar, by Rev. Francis E. Clark, D.D. (3s. 6d. James Bowden.) Dr. Clark ran over three continents in his travels, and he had his eyes open all the while. His pages are descriptive and informing, and those sections that deal with Germany, India, and South Africa will be read with special zest by thoughtful people. There are several admirable illustrations, and in all particulars the volume is well suited for presentation to Christian Endeavour workers.

Charles Tylor's works on Church History, are distinguished by judicious treatment, and lucidity of style. His memorial of John Wycliffe was a worthy successor of his monographs on the Huguenots and the Camisards; and now it is a great pleasure to receive The Story of William Tyndale, the translator of the Bible. (2s. 6d. Headley Brothers). All the good qualities of Mr. Tylor's earlier works are seen here, and several striking illustrations are given, as well as a facsimile of the famous letter written by the martyr while in prison at Vilegarge. Information regarding the reformers should be spread broadcast to-day, and in view of that fact it is gratifying to note that a cheaper edition of this work is issued at 1s.

"Christ's First Disciples."—John i., 35-46.

Golden Text.—"Behold the Lamb of God. John i., 36.

Prepare Ye the Way (19-34)

JOHN THE BAPTIST was the prophet t whom fell the honour of being the herald c Christ. He was a voice, for he uttered th thoughts of God. It is not often we hear real voice; most men are but echoes of some on else.

Lesson.—We should each be forerunners fo Christ, preparing the hearts of our friends t receive Him.

Baptism of Jesus (32, 33).

This was Christ's entrance into his publi work. Christ had no need to be baptize with water, but this was the occasion of hi baptism of the Spirit. He doubtless understoo what was to be his life work (compare hi statement at the age of twelve to his mothe "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father business.") To know one's work and to be enduo with the needful power to do it are two differen things. Jesus had to put his power to the te very soon by dealing with the devil in the deser (Matt. iv. 1-11.)

First Two Disciples (35-40).

After his forty days in the wilderness, Chris returned and John recognised Him, &c. (29). The the day after this (35) John the Baptist wa standing with two of his followers (Andrew an John the Evangelist) gazing intently on Jesu and he said: "Behold the Lamb of God." Joh already saw in Jesus a fulfilment of the 53r chapter of Isaiah's prophecy. The two disciple understood John's words, and they walked afte Jesus. They wanted to be with Christ, and t become his disciples—his scholars. Blessed a they who have this desire. The mass of mankin are still outside his school—content to remai admirers at a great distance. We, too, must lear of Jesus, and this we can do only by living wit Him (39).

The River of Life.

"There is a river, the streams whereof sha make glad the city of God." We are standing a its beginning. It is small, but it cannot be stoppe (the devil tried to do so at first, and has been tryin ever since). Despise not the day of small thing The first tributary has flowed in. Millions hav joined it since. Millions of sorrowful sin-staine ones have bathed in its blissful tide since the da of John.

The Third Disciple (41, 42).

Andrew very soon became a missionary. H started with the right person—his own brothe He did it in the right way; instead of arguing th point with Simon and trying to prove that Jes was the Messiah, he brought him to Jesus. Le us copy Andrew in all these points. Eve Christian should try to bring others, especial those of his own household, to Jesus. If w know how and when to say it, there is a gre deal in that invitation, "Come to Jesus."

Philip Commanded (43, 44).

Christ had a wondrous knowledge of men. O had to be lured, another fetched, another com manded. Philip was cautious, hesitatin sceptical (John vi., 7), and nothing but a dire command uttered by the master mind could brin him to decision. "Findeth Philip." Christ h to seek him out. This points to the fact th Christ wanted all sorts of character among h disciples. He could, and can, make use of the all.

(Nathanael 45, 46).

Philip soon becomes busy. Nathanael begins doubt at once. As others have thought that it impossible for poverty to be virtuous and powerfu so Nathanael's prejudice against Nazareth sto in his way. Again the best method was use "Come and see." And when he came his doub vanished like mist before the sun.

Experience v. Theory.

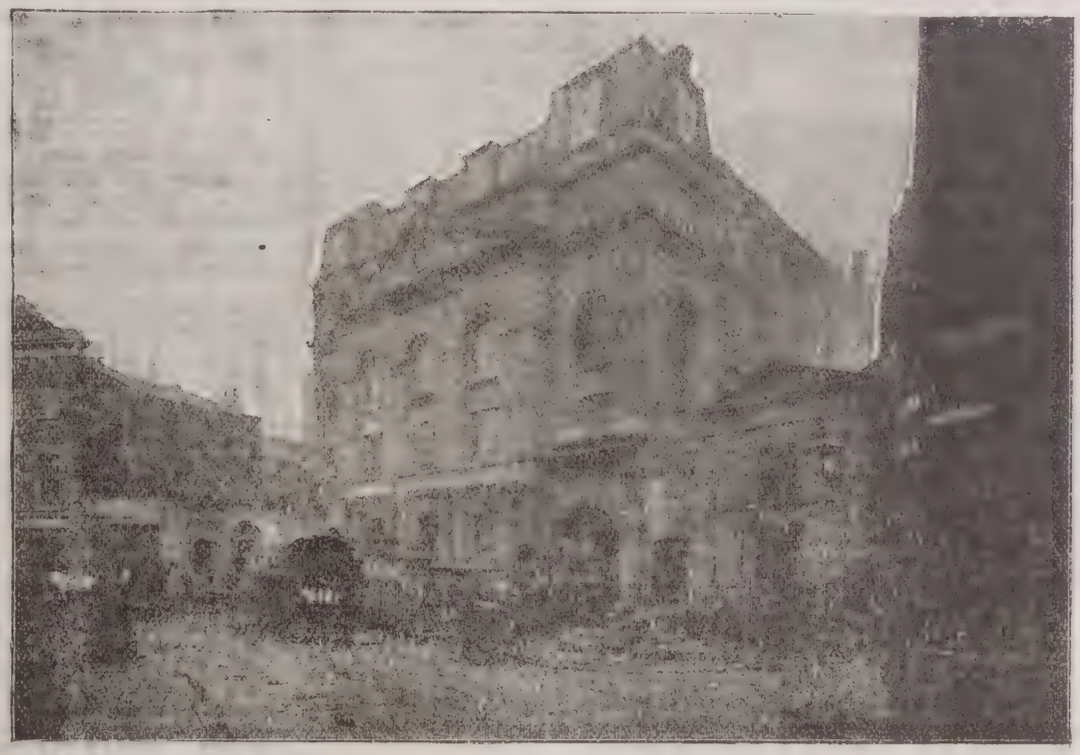
This is the best call to-day: "Come and see The things of God are infinite. We cann understand them, for we are finite; but the thin —like electricity—which we do not understand, can use. "O taste and see how gracious the Lo is," and our own experience will prove to us th "blessed is the man that trusteth in Him."

Home Missionary Work.

II.—"TO THE POOR THE GOSPEL IS PREACHED."

OUR riverside parish lies between Waterloo and London Bridges on the Surrey side of the river. This part of S.E. London is notorious as (1) the most poverty-stricken in all the Metropolis; (2) the most congested through the clearing away of courts, &c., to provide sites for warehouses, factories, &c.; (3) the cradle of Hooliganism.

Mr. Charles Booth, the famous statistician, by painstaking research and comparison, has established the fact that in parts of S.E. London there is more acute chronic poverty than in St. Giles, Whitechapel, Bethnal Green, &c.



The overcrowding evil has become so accentuated here of late that Judge Addison has again and again made public protest from the bench that some steps have not been taken to relieve the distress of the hard-working poor from this cause. It is pitiable beyond words to see deserving, industrious people at their wits' end where to find even a room in which their family can huddle together, and tramping about the streets till nearly midnight when their day's work is over week after week in the vain search for some place of shelter when a threatened eviction takes effect.

As to Hooliganism I will have something to say another time. Every newspaper reader must have been struck with the deeds of violence and plunder—even murder—which have disgraced this district in recent years.

Yet in this neighbourhood three great preachers of modern times laboured for God with marvellous success. Our Southwark Home Mission lies about midway between two historic chapels, both now devoted to secular uses.

In the Blackfriars Road stands the old Surrey Chapel, which the valiant Rowland Hill built, and where he preached Christ for many years with such signal power and blessing. Here, too, for many years, Newman Hall "witnessed a good confession" and won many souls for Christ. I thank God the work has not died out, although the building has been alienated from its holy service. A few yards off stands the new Surrey Chapel, where the Rev. J. Tolefree Parr is being used of God to carry on a wonderful work for the glory of God and the welfare of our neighbours.

In New Park Street is the chapel where, following some great Baptist divines, C. H. Spurgeon, fresh from the country, burst upon London with a splendid effulgence that never suffered a day's eclipse, but year by year streamed its ever-spreading rays to every part of the globe. A narrow bye-street that leads nowhere particular, entangled in a labyrinth of courts and alleys—a severely plain building—a somewhat disheartened, somewhat apprehensive congregation—all these difficulties only afforded him an opportunity to show the grace of courage, as world-wide fame later on but manifested the grace of humility.

SPURGEON'S NEW PARK STREET CHAPEL.

AN OPEN-AIR MEETING.

In our Home Hall we hold services every week-night and four times on Sunday. By dint of open-air work, systematic visitation, the influence of the Medical Mission, &c., we have been able to keep up a constant supply of fresh listeners to the Gospel and numbers of the most notorious and degraded have been converted to God, and are leading happy, consistent lives.

On Monday afternoons we have a huge Mothers' Meeting — sometimes the Hall is so full we have to bring in chairs to accommodate the dear women. The mothers (330 members) are divided into groups, each in charge of a worker. Before and after the meetings, all our office staff are busy receiving their pence for clothing, coal and savings clubs, writing out coal orders, &c.

Upstairs in the gymnasium are forty or fifty children over twelve months old—squalling, banging india-rubber toys about, munching biscuits, &c., under the care of other workers.

On Tuesday evenings at six o'clock, before the usual service, the Sisters in connection with the Medical Mission hold a Children's Service.

On Saturday nights at seven there is a Goose Club with more than 200 members (goose or turkey, plum pudding, and ¼lb of tea—all for 6/-!), to save folks from the temptation of the public-house. At eight, there is a Neighbourly Meeting, sometimes illustrating with dissolving views phases of Christian effort (Open-air Mission, Deep Sea Mission, Mission to Lepers, &c.), and sometimes taking the form of a testimony or prayer meeting, and so on—very happy, profitable evenings they are, too.

The work in the Girls' Institute amongst factory girls is of the deepest importance. Hitherto it has been cramped for want of room, but as my Council have just lately decided to lease two large warehouses, we purpose to remove the Youths' Institute from Holland Street and fit up the present gymnasium as a resort for these young women, open every night.

The Girls' Institute has answered the highest end in view to a remarkable degree. Very many of the girls have been brought to Christ and are now to be found night by night in the Home Hall, preferring the services to any classes, games, books, &c., which the Institute provides for them. Some of them are beginning to be really useful in our mission work, and I hope some day we may find them giving themselves to the Lord's service altogether at home or abroad.

connecting warehouses will be the gymnasium, room for games, classes for drawing, wood carving, &c. On the first floor will be a large, comfortable reading room, library, rooms for Bible classes, prayer meetings, &c.

This is what we have planned so far, but whether we can carry it out in its entirety, or must curtail it will depend very much on what help our friends feel moved to send us in the next few weeks to support us in bringing our home-heathen under Gospel influence.

The outlay to do all thoroughly will be £130.

OLD SURREY CHAPEL.

I wish I were an artist that I might sketch just here our ideal of an evening resort for these young women—but by New Year's Day it will, I trust, all be in working order, and our friends living in London will, I hope, come and see it for themselves. Meanwhile for the sake of others let me describe it in words. The gymnasium is 44ft. × 26ft. It will be well warmed and lighted by electricity. The windows will be curtained to make it look cosy. There will be plenty of chairs and small tables for the little coteries to sit together. A good library of instructive and interesting books. Simple fireside games, facilities for drawing, illuminating texts, &c. Clothing Club, Savings Bank, &c. Two sewing machines, instruction in dressmaking, millinery, knitting, &c. Cooking Classes on a plain practical scale for humble homes. Snowdrop Band for encouragement of purity in life and conversation. Ambulance Class to teach first aid in case of accidents. Sunday School Preparation Class, &c., &c.—all held in smaller rooms.

The Sister-in-charge visits the factories, workrooms, &c., by special permission from the heads of firms and holds short services in the dinner hour.

Some of the girls have fearful homes—some are motherless—some have no real home at all—no one even to whom they can look for advice or help in sickness or difficulty. They suffer from want of care, and knowledge, and just a little sympathy and help, what is a disgrace to any Christian country. For them I plead with every reader who has any womanly or any chivalrous feeling—any Christian compassion. Think of your daughters, your sisters in such plight and peril. Help us to "mother" them. We want £150 for this extension at once.

Our new Youths' Institute will be opened (D.V.) early in January. I have had much exercise in prayer and thought as to the superintendence of it. I felt it was not the post that a man, a likely man, or any man could fill—only the man that God might send. I trust I have been guided from above in offering the position to one who seems to have the sanctified geniality, energy and organizing powers necessary. The Youths' Institute will in future be in Southwark Street, next to our Boys' Home. On the ground floor of two large

I am sure if our friends will only come and see the work some night they will sympathise with us and feel constrained to support us in these home-missionary efforts.

God has wonderfully prospered us in this undertaking. We never thought that in less than twelve months the little acorn would grow up into a great oak. Our Home Mission has already been a blessing to hundreds. We have been so busy in the work night by night that we have had little time to interest new friends and gather help from them. Now is the time of year when we most need every hour and every pound we can spare for this work.

Every token of interest, every message of sympathy cheers us on our way, and sends us to face sights and tales of sin and woe with strong, praising hearts. Brethren, pray for us.

SPECIAL—TO THE FOLLOWERS OF CHRIST.

THE JUBILEE SHILLING SUBSCRIPTION

To Complete the Good Work of the

'LIBERATOR" RELIEF FUND

After six years earnest pleading, a further 360,000 shillings still urgently needed to give the assurance of permanent relief to hundreds of aged, destitute, and afflicted victims of the great "Liberator" fraud, who were taught and trained in habits of temperance and thrift by their trusted leaders, only to find themselves suddenly robbed of their life-savings, and driven to face the dreaded workhouse in spite of all their praiseworthy endeavours to make some provision for their old age.

Ninety per cent. of these sufferers are members of some section of the Christian Church.

"Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ."

There are 2,830 cases on the Books of the fund, of whom 1,500 are widows or spinsters. 1,480 are over 60 years of age. 690 are over 70 years of age. Over 250 deaths through the disaster.

THE BITTER CRY FOR HELP

Is still coming to the Committee from Sufferers who have bravely borne with their difficulties till sickness or great destitution has compelled them to apply.

Cheques and P.O.'s should be made payable to the "Liberator" Relief Fund, crossed "The City Bank," and sent to the Secretary, Rev. J. Stockwell Watts, 16, Farringdon Street, London, E.C.

THE SERVANTS' MISSION.

ESTABLISHED 1867.

In connection with the above Mission men and women servants of good character can be lodged, boarded, and provided with situations on reasonable terms.—New premises 109 and 111, Eaton Terrace, Eaton Square, S.W. Director, Mr. Jas. Goodchild.

THE "BRIDGE OF HOPE."

THE NIGHT SHELTER. THE REFUGE.
8 COTTAGE TRAINING HOMES.

In order effectively to carry on this threefold and difficult work, both

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTIONS and SPECIAL DONATIONS

are earnestly asked for.

At this Christmas Season we are quite without funds for immediate needs.

Church of England.

The annual sale of the work of distressed gentlewomen, held by the congregation of St. Jude's, Kensington, realised £947.

A weekly service for men only has been inaugurated at Holy Trinity, South Heigham, as a result of the revisit of Rev. W. H. M. Hay Aitken.

A font in memory of the late Archbishop Benson, to be used for those who desire baptism by immersion, has been dedicated in the parish church of Lambeth.

The Bishop of Calcutta, who has arranged to leave England for his new diocese on Jan. 11, preached his farewell sermon in Harrow School on Sunday last.

The Earl of Dysart has written to the Ham Church Council promising to give £1,000 towards the erection of a new church at Ham, Surrey, in which parish he resides.

A new archiepiscopal residence is to be erected in the cathedral precincts at Canterbury. The remnant of the ancient archiepiscopal palace will form the nucleus of the new residence.

The men's service at St. James-the-Less, Bethnal Green, has an average attendance of about five hundred. On Sunday week, when the address was given by the Bishop of London, fully 800 men were present.

Mr. T. A. J. Ogunbiye, an African agent of the Church Missionary Society, writes from Akure, on the Niger: "All the detestable enormities of Benin are practised here—human sacrifices to the devil or other tribal gods, crucifixion, immolations at burials, infanticide of twins, and so on."

The spread of Christianity in Uganda continues its remarkable progress. Bishop Tucker estimates that at least 6,000 persons put themselves under instruction during the first six months of this year. The Waganda purchased 2,382 New Testaments and 5,091 portions of Scripture during the same period.

A United Protestant demonstration "to uphold and maintain the Protestantism of the nation, and to demand the suppression of the Mass and the confessional in the Established Church" will be held in the Royal Albert Hall on Tuesday, January 31, under the auspices of a large number of Protestant bodies throughout the country. The chair will be taken by Lord Kinnaird.

The spread of Christianity in Uganda continues its remarkable progress, in spite of the mutiny of the Soudanese troops and other disturbances. Bishop Tucker estimates that at least 5,000 persons became "readers," that is, put themselves under instruction during the first six months of 1898. The Waganda purchased 2,382 New Testaments, and 5,091 portions of Scripture during the same period.

The pastoral, issued by the Archbishop of York, reproves the observance of the festivals of Corpus Christi and All Souls, the interpolation of anything in the appointed services of the Church (except hymns), the private interpretation of the Ornaments Rubric, and the introduction of ornaments either of the church or the minister without previous consultation with the Archbishop, the ceremonial use of incense, the sprinkling of water upon the congregation, the placing of candles in front of pictures or sculptures, the reservation of the Sacrament, the teaching of Transubstantiation, the omission of the earlier part of the Communion Service, the ringing of a bell at the moment of the consecration, the celebration of Communion without communicants, and the doing of anything to prevent or discourage any persons offering themselves for Communion, the use of unauthorised service-books, particularly at Holy Communion, the invocation of the Holy Angels, or of the Blessed Virgin, or of the departed saints, the use of definite prayers for the dead, and the compulsory use of confession.

Congregational.

Rev. Dr. Berry is gaining strength, so much so that he has taken part in the services of his church.

Rev. Alfred Rowlands is suffering from pneumonia, and will not be able to preach for some Sundays.

Owing to indisposition through overwork and a slight affection of the throat, Dr. R. F. Horton has gone away for a short rest.

The total number of Congregationalist churches, branch churches, and missions in Great Britain and Ireland and the islands of the British seas is 4,815.

Through the generosity of Mr. Thomas Smith, of Finsbury Park Congregational Church, most of the ministers in the London Congregational Union have received a copy of Mr. Walter Walsh's book, "The Secret History of the Oxford Movement," as a Christmas present.

Wellingborough church lately spared 300 people to form a congregation at the Victoria branch, and still the mother-church seems as full as ever. Having done splendidly in the town it is now helping the surrounding villages. It has aided in the opening of the new cause at Wollaston, and is building a new chapel at Daddington.

Baptist.

The estimate of Messrs. Higgs and Hill, builders, has been accepted for the rebuilding of the Metropolitan Tabernacle at a cost of £33,240. About half this amount is stil required.

The Annuity Fund Committee of the Baptist Union have been informed by their acturary that unless a further sum of £150 is received before the close of this year, each annuity for 1898 must be reduced by a little more than £1 10s. The chairman and secretary of the Union are appealing for help on behalf of the aged ministers and widows who are largely dependent upon this fund, that sufficient donations may be sent to prevent the painful necessity of reducing the annuities for 1899.

The new secretary of the Baptist Union and editor of its "Handbook" (Rev. J. H. Shakespeare) reports that at the end of last month, allowing approximately for 271 churches which failed to return, there were 355,218 members (as compared with 346,779 a year ago) in the 2,697 Baptist churches of the United Kingdom. The number of the places of worship is set down at 3,245, with accommodation for 1,305,710 persons. In the Sunday schools there are 51,430 teachers and 525,583 scholars; the ordained ministers are 1,951 and the local preachers 5,111.

Methodist.

Rev. Thomas Champness has left Vancouver, and expects to land in China on or about Christmas Eve.

At a recent communion service thirty-three persons were received into church membership at the U.M.F., central chapel, Cleckheaton.

The Wesleyan Centenary Hall, Bishopsgate Street Within, which is to be re-built, cost £30,000 over half-a-century ago. The site alone is now worth £230,000.

Rev. J. Tolfree Parr has been elected president of the Young Christians' Missionary Union, in succession to Rev. T. Spurgeon and Rev. F. B. Meyer.

The President of the Bible Christian Conference has visited the Birmingham Mission, and was highly pleased with the improved state of things.

The London Quarterly Review, hitherto edited by Rev. Dr. Rigg, now becomes the property of the Wesleyan Book Room the new editor being Rev. W. L. Watkinson, the connexional editor.

Steps are being taken taken at the Conference Office, City-road, to arrange in permanent form, the voluminous correspondence of Charles Wesley. John Wesley's letters are already bound in volumes.

Rev. J. Scott Lidget, the Warden, writes hopefully of the work of the Bermondsey Settlement in his annual report. The work has progressed in all departments, these including evangelical, educational and social activities.

A Wesleyan deputation, which has inspected East Ham, reports that there are tens of thousands of people there with comparatively little provision for their religious care. The attention of the First London District Home Mission Committee has been called to the urgency of the case.

Mr. W. P. Hartley has ordered over one thousand copies—thus compelling a second edition—of the "Life of Dr. R. W. Dale," and other books to be distributed among the ministers of the Primitive Methodist Connection, and has also taken steps whereby local preachers will be assisted to secure, at a cheap rate, some of the best and newest theological works.

Presbyterian.

A vote taken on the question of the introduction of an organ to Renfrew Church has resulted in a large majority in favour.

Dr. Norman Macleod, of Inverness, presided at the opening services in the new parish church of Morven, Scotland. The building seats 200, and cost over £1,000.

One of the circles of the large "Sunbeam" Mission of South Australia has been named after the Rev. J. Reid Howatt as a tribute to him as founder of the Crutch and Kindness League.

At the annual réunion of the French church in Glasgow, Drs. Donald Macleod, A. R. M'Ewen (U.P.), and M'Adam Muir all joined in congratulating the pastor, M. Ernest Favre, on the success of his work. The congregation is composed of French and Swiss people.

The Edinburgh Town Council has decided that the names of a number of distinguished men whose remains are interred in Greyfriars churchyard should be inscribed on panels fixed into the new boundary wall. The names of the divines will be those of Alexander Henderson and William Carstairs.

The returns of the Presbyterian Church of England show an increase in the number both of congregations and of members. There are 327 churches and preaching stations, as compared with 271 in 1876, affording accommodation for 162,044 persons. For all purposes £270,577 was raised last year, an increase for the year of £9,007. In the Presbyterian Alliance, of which the next council will be held in Washington in September, there are now 35,578 affiliated congregations with a membership of 4,059,751.

Fallen Asleep.

Mr. James Marrow, of Northwich, one of the pioneers of Primitive Methodism in Cheshire.—Rev. J. K. Jackson, an ex-President of Methodist New Connexion Conference, aged sixty-four. His first circuit was Manchester, his last, Birmingham; and between them, and among others, were appointments at Barnsley, Longton (twice), Durham, Oldbury, Lindley, Batley, Halifax N., and Southport. In 1887, at Stockport Conference, he was elected president.—Aged ninety-six, Rev. Robt. Collins, "father" of the Congregational denomination.—Dr. Thomas J. Shepherd, for many years Presbyterian minister in Philadelphia.—Mr. William Adam, senior, deacon of Baxter Church, Kidderminster.—Mr. E. H. Lloyd, a prominent Congregationalist of Halifax, Yorks.—Mr. Frederick Warren, Congregationalist, thrice mayor of St. Ives, Hunts.—Mr. N. Frost, for thirty years a Wesleyan local preacher, class-leader, and secretary for home mission work.—Mrs. Mott, for sixty-five years a member of the Wesleyan Central Mission, Clerkenwell.—Mr. William Baldwin, of Chacewater, Truro, aged seventy-six, a most useful member of the Wesleyan body.—At the age of ninety-five, Mr. William Coleman, of Silverstone, Northampton, for many years Wesleyan chapel steward and class-leader.

Requests for Prayer.

For blessing on a special mission in the Gospel Union Hall, Edmonton, Jan. 8-16.

For blessing on Gospel services in Congregational Chapel, Maiden Newton, Dorset, in the first week of the New Year.

That blessing may attend the efforts of the Evangelistic Mission in all its branches throughout the forthcoming year, and that especially amongst the unsaved a work of grace may be begun.

DONATIONS.

Received by Messrs. Morgan and Scott to Saturday, December 24, 1898.

Will Donors bear in mind that this Donation List was made up for the Printers on Saturday morning. Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number of THE CHRISTIAN.

THE NATIONAL REFUGES
FOR HOMELESS AND DESTITUTE CHILDREN.
"ARETHUSA" AND "CHICHESTER" TRAINING SHIPS.
164, SHAFTESBURY AVENUE, LONDON, W.C.

PRESIDENT - - THE EARL OF JERSEY, G.C.M.G.

As this Society is a National one, not simply Metropolitan, admission is ensured to a destitute child from whatever part of the kingdom it may come. 900 CHILDREN MAINTAINED. NO VOTES ARE REQUIRED. FUNDS URGENTLY NEEDED. Donations will be thankfully received by the Secretary or Finance Secretary, or may be sent to the Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

H. BRISTOW WALLEN, Secretary. HENRY G. COPELAND, Finance and Deputation Secretary.

ROYAL NATIONAL
MISSION TO DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

Patron: HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN. This Society carries on Medical Mission Work amongst the Fishermen on the North Sea and other Fishing Grounds, and in Labrador.
HELP EARNESTLY ASKED.
Requires £20,000 per annum.
Treasurer: THOMAS B. MILLER, Esq. (Offices, 181, Queen Victoria Street, London, E.C.), to whom contributions may be sent; or to the Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

"The Sins of the Fathers"
IS THE TITLE OF THE
OF
THE ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION

The appeal shows how acute are the sufferings of the Innocent Children and Wives of Prisoners, and how constantly their terrible needs are being made known to and relieved by the Mission.

The appeal also shows that

are dealt with, but that a large number of the

STRUGGLING, HARD-WORKING POOR

are assisted in their efforts and supplied with

FOOD, CLOTHING, AND FIRING.

Treasurer: F. A. BEVAN, Esq., D.L., J.P., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.

Superintendent: WILLIAM WHEATLEY, 4, Ampton-street, Regent-square, W.C.

Cheques and Postal Orders may be crossed Messrs. BARCLAY & Co.

STOCKWELL ORPHANAGE,
CLAPHAM ROAD, LONDON, S.W.

President & Treasurer: REV. J. A. SPURGEON, D.D.

A HOME AND SCHOOL FOR FATHERLESS CHILDREN
And a Memorial of the Beloved Founder, C. H. SPURGEON.

THE MANAGERS REQUIRE
TEN THOUSAND POUNDS
A YEAR IN VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTIONS.

500 Boys and Girls needed provision for a Merry Christmas, and Special Contributions are asked for this.

Contributions should be sent to the Treasurer, "Christmas Fund," Stockwell Orphanage, Clapham Road, London, S.W.

FROM STREET TO SERVICE
Yet how can these poor
STREET FLOWER GIRLS
go to domestic service unless there be some Society who will receive and train them, provide situations and outfits for them. These girls never had a decent home, are ignorant of home duties, and are without clothes or recommendation; yet over 2,000 have been so received and dealt with.

THE WATERCRESS & FLOWER GIRLS CHRISTIAN MISSION

Does not recognise the necessity for any child or young girl to remain in the streets exposed to its temptations.

It receives Motherless Babes and abandoned Children, Waif Girls, and Orphans into its Home, its Cottage Hospital, and Convalescent Home and Orphanage;

The able girls and prepares them for domestic service;

The crippled, deformed, and physically afflicted girls into its Industrial Training Home.

The bona-fide Flower Women have their Mission Services, Club, Classes, &c., and every means are used to bring them to the Saviour.

THIRTY-SECOND ANNUAL REPORT POST FREE.

FIELD LANE REFUGES AND RAGGED SCHOOLS.
URGENT APPEAL.

The Committee have recently had very heavy expenses of an unexpected nature, resulting in exceptional demands of from £500 to £600. The Committee therefore very earnestly appeal for increased Contributions to enable them to overtake this severe strain on their income, so that the work may not have to be curtailed.

The Results of the operations increase every year. The applications for help are most painful. Upwards of 3,500 benefits dispensed weekly.

Special for Christmas, 5,000 Dinners.
